She has participated in the New York Summer League games, and the Empire State Games, where in 1978-79, her New York City team won the silver medal. She probably won't be playing as much basketball after attending medical school, but comments, "I wouldn't have gone to college without playing basketball."

UMass Coach Barbara Stevens has only worked with Wendy for one year, but is quick to complement her character.

"Her being the only senior was very hard, but she did a good job in terms of leadership. Her composure helped carry us through some tough situations. The kids looked up to her and respected her for the knowledge and skills she had. This recruiting year is based on the fact that Wendy will be leaving as point guard. She will certainly leave a big gap, and it will be hard to replace her," said Stevens.

"I feel sad about leaving. I've had fun, but it's time to move on," Ward said.

Obviously a woman who has it all together, as the interview concludes, she turns and says with a confident smile, "I think we've hit everything."

Wrestling begins

The UMass wrestling intramural tournament opened last night at the Boyden wrestling room with 65 wrestlers on five teams and as independents.

BLT (bold, little, tough) IV is shooting for their fourth consecutive crown. Last year, BLT III nipped the Madmen by one point for the title.

The Madmen are back this year aiming to take away the title. Phi Sig, Phi Mu Delta and Pike also fielded teams in the tournament.

Action begins at 7:30 p.m. tonight, tomorrow, and on Monday and Tuesday. The finals will be on Tuesday.

It takes more than love of the hockey game

By SCOT COOPER
Collegian Staff

It takes an extreme amount of dedication and quite a bit of money to play intramural hockey here at the University of Massachusetts.

First, you have to travel to the Department of Natural Resources rink in Greenfield, a 30 to 40 minute ride, to play. When you do get there, the clock usually says 9:30 p.m., which means your game is the early one, one that starts at 10 p.m.

If you have the late game, it gets under way at 12 midnight, and is finished by 1 or 1:30 a.m. And don't forget the 30-40 minute ride home.

Over 165 people compose the twelve teams that make up the Jo Jo Starbuck and Ice Capades divisions of the intramural hockey program. Each team plays a total of ten games. The playoffs will feature the top four teams in each division.

Yukon Jack, led by senior captain Jodi Ferrelli, won last fall's playoff series 2-0 over Mass Consumption. Yukon Jack once again is at the top of the heap in the Jo Jo Starbuck division, with a 5-0-2 record. Ties came against Phi Sigma Kappa and Mass Consumption. What the Puck, followed closely by the Nads, are battling for the lead in the Ice Capades division.

Not only is lack of sleep involved with continuing the hockey career after high school, money is also a factor. Each team is required to pay a $350 entrance fee to get into the league. This breaks down into the $30 range per player per team, depending on how many skaters suit up. Hockey sticks cost anywhere from $8 to $55 for aluminum ones. The $8 sticks usually make it through two games or five slapshots, whichever comes first.

Skate sharpening costs $2-3 a week, and tape, which is necessary to keep the shin pads on and the ankles upright, costs $4-5 a whack. This does not include gas money for the drive to Greenfield.

Many of the skaters in the program are just out there for fun while others seem to forget that the Olympic tryouts were last summer. The referees are a joy to behold. Many have no idea what icing or offsides are, while some others make bad calls on purpose so the players will call them names and question their ancestry.

The league playoffs will start right before spring break, which is better than before finals, like in the fall. It's a lot easier to score goals and backcheck with tanning oil on your mind, instead of chemistry exams.

Considering that most of UMass's student body is composed of people from the East, that grew up with hockey, the trip to Greenfield to take in a game is worthwhile. Games are held Sunday, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday nights at 10, 11 p.m. and 12 midnight.

While many hope that UMass will soon get a multi-sport facility that will enable the university to once again sponsor a varsity hockey team, most students only have the intramural program to keep their game sharp. There is a certain amount of love for the game involved with casual hockey player. Bizarre skating times and rising costs would seem to be deterrents to a growing intramural program, but each spring the numbers get larger and the line to get skates sharpened is longer.

Students confront Conte on arms control issues

By REBECCA THATCHER
Collegian Staff

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Students from the five college area had a tense meeting with Representative Silvio Conte (R-Mass.) and participated yesterday in a rally and workshops in the first major student arms control lobbying effort since the 1960s.

The Massachusetts delegation joined about 650 students from the Eastern United States to express dissatisfaction with the escalation of the arms race. The lobbying was organized by the Princeton Alliance to Reverse the Arms Race (PARAR) and United Campuses to Prevent Nuclear War (UCAM).

The five college group trip to the capitol was sponsored by the University of Massachusetts Peacemakers.

Despite Conte's support for the nuclear freeze, the meeting between him and the students was confrontational.

UMass student David Shakespeare urged Conte to "take a leadership role in the House as far as proposing amendments that would freeze the nuclear arms race." Conte responded by saying that he had done everything in his power regarding the nuclear freeze for UMass and that he was not getting credit for his record in the House of Representatives.

"I have broken my hump for UMass. I championed the cause of the nuclear freeze. I have been in the trenches. I did take a leadership role and I will continue to take a leadership role in the future," Conte said.

Responding to further questions, Conte strayed frequently from the topic of the nuclear freeze. He discussed being up for re-election in the Fall, saying "I will win this election with you or without you."

Conte told the student lobbyists that as a senior Republican, he is a powerful legislator. "I am going to have an opponent who is way out on the left against me. I want you to ask if that person is going to be as effective as I have been on the nuclear freeze and other issues," Conte said.

Jon Spaulding, a UMass Soviet and Eastern European studies major, expressed the nearly unanimous feeling among the student lobbyists. "He gave us the feeling that we shouldn't be lobbying him," Spaulding said. "We presented him with a coalition from the five colleges and he showed that he was concerned by becoming so defensive."

In a meeting with the student lobbyists, Greg Craig, Senator Edward M. Kennedy's national security advisor said, "The contribution that the freeze campaign has had on the political chemistry is staggering."

Craig said that in the absence of a U.S. - Soviet negotiated bi-lateral, nuclear freeze, the congress could possibly initiate a unilateral freeze by cutting appropriation for the major arms systems.

Women still suffer financial discrimination on the job

By DIANE LANE
Collegian Staff

A re-evaluation of how wages are determined and the value of women's jobs compared to men's, is needed, according to an University of Massachusetts assistant professor of economics.

Elaine Sorensen, who spoke yesterday at a luncheon meeting of the American Society for Public Administration in the Campus Center, discussed the implications of recent court rulings in California and Washington dealing with comparable worth.

Equal pay for comparable worth is based on evidence which shows occupations dominated by women typically pay from 15 to 20 percent less than those dominated by males. An occupation is classified as female dominated when 70 percent of the workers in that field are women, Sorensen said.

The Equal Pay Act and the Civil Rights Act passed by Congress in the 1960s, were designed to prevent discrimination against women in the job market. According to Sorensen, women do receive equal pay for equal work, and are no longer kept out of traditionally male occupations but "neither act has been used to protect women in female jobs from wage discrimination," she said.

"This has turned into a very controversial issue and is perceived as disruptive to the prevailing economic structure," Sorensen said.

In December of 1983, a District Court judge in Washington ruled that the state was guilty of wage discrimination against women and ordered the payment of almost a billion dollars in back pay. Recently, the Massachusetts legislature passed into law a bill allocating $75,000 to "investigate and study" the issue of equal pay for comparable worth.

Sorensen said this ruling was based on three factors, including evidence that the state had "consistently assigned equally qualified men and women applicants to different jobs "with men typically being given higher paying positions.

Comparable worth is determined by a job evaluation in which all jobs are rated by a four point scale, she said. Evaluations are based on issues of skill, responsibility, working conditions and effort.

"Traditional job evaluations divide the work force into units of blue collar, white collar, etc. and then evaluate, thus perpetuating the existing wage structure. Comparable worth would evaluate all jobs together and then study where women's wages fall," Sorensen said.

Existing seniority rules "wouldn't be touched" and comparable worth doctrines attempt to increase women's wages, not bring male wages down, she said.

"It is time for a policy to be implemented that will improve the relative wage position of women," Sorensen said. "Women still only earn 62 cents for every dollar that males earn."

SGA approves concert funds, referenda to be put on ballot

By IAN POLUMBAUM
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate voted last night to place three referenda on next week's SGA presidential election ballot and approved a grant of $40,000 to the United Program Council (UPC) to fund this year's spring concert series.

Two of the referenda, proposed by co-president Tom Ahern, will ask students whether they want to change the University of Massachusetts' Minuteman mascot, and how they would like to see local bus service improved.

A third question, introduced by Bill Collins, a Southwest Area Senator, will ask, "Do you feel adequately represented by your student government? What improvements would you like to see, if any?"

Ahern said that he favored the first two referenda because he had heard students express concern on both of these issues. He said that the Minuteman mascot — a soldier with a rifle and bayonet — had been viewed as sexist by many people, and that bus service in the five college area was widely considered inadequate.

Ahern said, the actual wording of the questions will be decided by SGA Election Subcommittee chair Mindy Ordway, who is in charge of typing the ballots. The Minuteman question will give voters some background information on the mascot, and the bus referendum will ask them to choose between paying higher fees for more service and rearranging existing routes, he said.

The first two proposals were debated for about 45 minutes on the Senate floor; some senators objected to questions being put on the ballot only five days before the election.

"I think these are issues which need to be talked about more," said senator Reuven Carlyle. Carlyle argued that the short time span would not give proponents and opponents of the referenda enough time to present their cases to the student body.

Ahern responded, "I think that's better that it's quick. This way, it will be less of a political battle — who can get the best

One convict killed, second captured in North Carolina

MARION, N.C. (AP) — Police captured yesterday a dangerous escaped convict from Tennessee, hours after officers killed his partner, a double murderer who had eluded police in a shootout at a blind couple's home.

The fugitive, James Clegg, "is in custody," said North Carolina Highway Patrol Sgt. Jeter Wilds. Details of the arrest were not immediately released.

Fellow escapee Ronald Lee Freeman, 41, was killed earlier yesterday in a gunbattle with police in an abandoned house here. Police trailed him with bloodhounds from the blind couple's home, where Freeman had broken in early in the morning. The woman had a heart attack and one of the people who came to help her called the police.

While Clegg was still at large, residents of a Marion neighborhood voluntarily left their homes so police could search every house.

The two men, both "armed and dangerous," escaped from a Tennessee prison last month and had vowed not to be captured alive.

"We think Clegg is by far the most dangerous of the two men," said McDowell County District Attorney Alan Leonard.

Freeman broke down the door of a blind couple, Rass and Molly Harvey, before dawn and demanded food, said Jerry Knighton, the Harveys' son-in-law. Mrs. Harvey, 63, suffered a heart attack about 1½ hours later and was late taken to Marion General Hospital in critical condition, said Assistant Administrator Imogene Poole.

Deputies shot at Freeman at the Harvey home, but he escaped. Soon after, an intruder broke into another home and was shot with a .22-caliber gun by the man who lived there, but police were unsure if it was Freeman, Clegg or somebody else.

Bloodhounds led police to an abandoned house, where Freeman was killed by a shotgun blast by police who stormed it after he said he would not surrender, said Leonard.

Trooper Larry Carver of the state Highway Patrol was wounded in the shoulder by a stray blast fired by police who trapped Freeman. The blast came through the wall and hit Carver, who was standing outside, Leonard said.

Bartender testifies in gang rape trial

FALL RIVER — Three men returned to a New Bedford bar to calmly chat about their role in a gang rape the morning after a woman says she was attacked and raped on the bar's pool table, a bartender testified yesterday.

And a travel agent testified that one of the men approached him three days later inquiring about passage back to his native Azores.

Daniel Cunha testified he was tending bar at Big Dan's tavern on the morning after the rape was reported when he overheard a conversation among Daniel Silvia, Virgilio Medeiros and Jose Medeiros, whom he called "the blond one."

"The blond one turned to Daniel and said when the woman was next to the bar that he stuck a bottle between her legs," Cunha, a Portuguese immigrant, said through a translator.

Northampton man can't bewitch ex-girlfriend

NORTHAMPTON — When all else failed, Sherman Sappington turned to witchcraft to try to win back his girlfriend.

But all he found out was there are some things worse than a witch doctor's curse.

Unpersuaded, the object of his affections took him to court on trespassing charges and a judge ordered him to stay away and seek counseling instead of hexes.

"I guess she thought I wanted to change her into a lizard or something," Sappington, 23, of Amherst told the Daily Hampshire Gazette in an interview published yesterday. "But I'd never hurt that girl. I still miss her."

After Sappington admitted to the facts of the case in District Court here Monday, Judge Richard A. Connon continued the case without a finding and ordering him to stay away from his ex-girlfriend, placing Sappington on probation for one year.

She said Sappington had been dabbling in witchcraft for a few months before they broke up last fall, and last month magical symbols began appearing on her doorstep.

"At first I didn't take it seriously," the Amherst woman told the newspaper after agreeing to an interview only on condition that her name not be used. "At least not until he made it very clear he was not fooling around."

On Feb. 10, the woman said she found a blood-smeared pentagram, which is a five-sided star sometimes used as a magical symbol, sitting on the windowsill outside her apartment.

Dukakis in Springfield speaking for Mondale

SPRINGFIELD — Gov. Michael Dukakis told teenagers yesterday that Walter Mondale is their choice for president if they care about war and peace, acid rain and the minimum wage they earn at part-time jobs.

Dukakis, stumping for Mondale as Gary Hart rolls past Mondale in polls for the Massachusetts primary this Tuesday, addressed about 500 students of English, history and foreign languages in Classical High School's auditorium.

"About two years ago, some very conservative economists around Ronald Reagan tried to peddle the idea that the reason teenagers couldn't get jobs was that they were paid too much. They said if we paid teen-agers $2.25 an hour, they would find more jobs," Dukakis said. The minimum wage is $3.35.

"A crazy idea? A bad idea? Gary Hart is for it," Dukakis said.

Harassment in dorms troubles gay community

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

Now that it's spring semester, students living in the resident halls at the University of Massachusetts are planning semi-formals, dances, parties and other events which give men and women an opportunity to meet each other.

Some students, however, feel excluded from these social events, according to Felice Yeskel, the head of residence in Dwight dormitory.

If some national statistics are true, approximately 10 percent of the UMass student population is homosexual; yesterday, a human relations forum addressed some of the problems facing individuals because of their sexual preference.

Yeskel said that while homosexuals are harassed throughout the University, they face a great deal of oppression in the residence halls.

"The major crisis in every gay person's life is coming out. It impacts on their lives in a major, major way," Yeskel said.

Because of harassment, students who are "coming out" receive in the dormitories, they are less likely to be open and honest about themselves. "Coming out" does not happen in the middle of the night. There are many stages in recognizing one's sexual identity, she said.

Some homosexuals living in dormitories "never get through the first stage" of recognizing their sexual identity because of peer harassment, she said.

Gerry Scoppettulo, professional staff member in the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy,(SCERA), said there have been many incidents of posters being ripped down or slurs being written on them, actions that are directly aimed at the gay and lesbian community.

"In the Amherst and Northampton area there have been a series of harassments (particularly in the last year) against lesbians, but also of gay men," Scoppettulo said.

There are many problems of harassment on campus, and "anything the University can do to help solve some of them is certainly needed," he said.

This semester, UMass Residential Education is organizing a Gay and Lesbian Awareness week, scheduled to be held the last week in March.

Two of the main objectives of the week are "to offer support to the 10 percent, or so, part of the community that is gay or lesbian." And for people who are not lesbian, gay or bisexual, to learn about and become more informed about homosexuality, Yeskell said.

"We know we can't change people overnight, but we also know the time has come for change" in people's attitudes towards homosexuals, Scoppettulo said.

High schools face problems

Report proposes reforms

By PAUL DESMOND
Collegian Staff

Too many Massachusetts high school students "are caught in an educational limbo," and are not interested in the job world, D'Amico (D-Worcester) said Tuesday night to 50 members of the Phi Delta Kappa education honorary society.

These students are not ready for the transition to life after high school, D'Amico said.

D'Amico is the Senate co-chairman of the Joint Committee on Education, which recently released a special report on improving the quality of education in Massachusetts.

"We've tried to craft some policies that will equalize educational opportunity," D'Amico said. He cited the need "to make sure that every community has the opportunity to provide parity in educational instruction."

D'Amico stressed the need for reform to come at the level of individual schools.

"We should be making the struggle for more effective, democratic schools at the building level," he said.

Parents, teachers and students should be elected to local councils with authority over local schools, D'Amico said. These councils would be separate from local school committees, which would have a "supervisory role," he said.

Other problems in Massachusetts schools, according to D'Amico are: an increased number of students who come from single parent families, drugs, alcohol and non-English speaking students.

"I think it's very important to link state human services with schools "to deal with these problems," D'Amico said. "There's got to be a way we can assist teacher. . . with this monkey on their backs."

"We have a package that has enormous agreement and I think, enormous potential to it," he said.

Calling the Education Committee's report and "ambitious agenda," D'Amico said, "The reforms will be several years in the works."

D'Amico was the keynote speaker for PDK's annual initiation meeting held in the Campus Center.

Strickland to lecture tonight

By LAURA YEE
Collegian Staff

The theory that health and disease may be influenced by gender differences and behavior, will be presented at 8 p.m. tonight in the Campus Center Auditorium by a University of Masssachusetts psychology professor and clinical psychologist.

Bonnie R. Strickland will speak as a part of the 1983-84 Chancellor's Lecture Series, and although the lecture is titled, "Gender Differences in Health and Illness," Strickland said she will not focus on findings of "typical research." Instead, she will "pull together data on gender differences in illness" and focus on "what came out of the information gathering process," she said.

"In women's health issues there is a lack of information. Studies show that heart disease is a leading cause of death among men, but no studies on women," Strickland said.

Strickland said she believes that psychology can play a role in the health care system by developing knowledge and service.

"Over the century the kinds of things that kill us have changed. Fatality and death are heavily influenced by behavior," she explained.

In addition to tonight's lecture, Strickland will be awarded the Chancellor's Medal, which is bestowed upon individuals in "recognition of outstanding and extraordinary service to the University," said Cheryl Walsh, assistant director of community relations.

"It's a great honor," Strickland said. "I'm particularly pleased because it's from peers, who know the University."

Strickland was the featured speaker at the American Psychological Association in Los Angeles last summer. She has also been invited to be a guest lecturer at the South Eastern Psychological Association in New Orleans this month.

Writers discuss heritage

By TAARA EDEN HOFFMAN
Collegian Correspondent

Three women spoke on their identities as Jews, women and writers in a panel discussion titled "Jewish Women Writers: Living in Exile," yesterday at the University of Massachusetts.

"As women we're often erased from our cultural history. As Jews we're erased from (this) nation's history," said Melanie Kaye/Kantowitz. Kaye/Kantowitz spoke on the "thread of Jewish tradition," and how her Jewishness helps her "recognize emergency and (the need for) resistance."

"I'm more afraid of silence," she said when discussing Jewish political struggles in the United States and Israel. She said she discovered at an early age the "instinct of outrage at the violation of human rights," and said that in the U.S. Jewish conflict is "cushioned instead of being resolved."

"In order for Jewish culture to continue here (in the U.S.), it must be connected to culture in Israel," she said.

Kinereth Gensler read from her poetry works including one that "puts together my own consciousness as a woman and a Jew," she said.

"I'm not in exile," she said referring to the title of the discussion. She said she does feel "some sense" of exile, one "that all writers do. It's a healthy sense, a creative tension."

Jyl Felman read a short humorous story she wrote about Jewish lesbian's encounter with a "WASP (white Anglo-saxon Protestant) heterosexual woman, and later connected it to the sense of exile she feels as a Jewish woman writer."

"The Jew and the woman in me fight constantly," she said, yet "they are inseparable." She said exile is a highly personal issue. "One person's exile may be anothers person's home."

It is very "interesting to read with Jewish women listening," Kaye/Kantowitz said. "You have a context. They understand."

"Jews have a passion for justice," Gensler said. As a Jewish writer she said she voices dissatisfaction with social injustic. "It's very Jewish to disagree and disapprove," she said.

Felman said that it is important for Jews to have ways of recognizing and identifying each other, and it is necessary to dispel stereotypes because they "trivialize, cut short, and dehumanize identification factors."

"From MAD (Mutual Assured Destruction): Reflections on War and Political Discourse" will be the subject of a fellows lecture tonight by two University of Massachusetts professors.

Political science Professor Jean Elchtain, a 1982-83 fellow in the Institute for Advanced Studies in the Humanities, and Dennis Porter, chair of the French and Italian department, will host this Institute of Advanced Studies lecture at 8 p.m. in Room 120 of the School of Management.

The Jones Library in Amherst will sponsor a photo show and reception for area redheads from 4 to 6 p.m. today.

Titled "Redheads: A Secret Nation," the show will feature photographs of redheads, including many University of Massachusetts students. Famous redheads such as Mark Twain, Emily Dickinson and Lucille Ball will also be the subject of photographs.

funds and lobbying" and a more direct question to the students, he said.

The third referendum was also debated at length. Senate Speaker Chris Sullivan opposed it, he said, because "it will put weights on the feet of new student government officers" if students cast a vote of no confidence in the SGA.

Senator Gary Gosselin called it "a destructive motion, nothing but negativity...the administration could use a negative vote as a tool against students."

Greek Area Senator Jay Flynn disagreed. A "no" vote on this referendum, he said, would be "not a condemnation but a challenge. Putting the question on the ballot shows we do care." The motion passed, 18 to 14.

The Senate also passed, by acclamation, a resolution supporting students of Hampshire and Smith colleges in their efforts to keep the right to student input in administrative decisions. Sit-ins were staged Tuesday at both colleges by students who felt this right had been abridged.

Local group fights for cleaner water

The Amherst Citizens Against Pollution (ACAP) will hold an open meeting at 8 tonight to discuss drinking water concerns at the Bangs Community Center in downtown Amherst.

A newly formed group of citizens, ACAP "hopes to demonstrate a need to ensure safe drinking water in Amherst," said Karen Crawley, a member.

"We're hoping to get citizens involved with the issues of capping the old Amherst dump and the relocation of Amherst Auto Parts over the town aquifer," she said.

Crawley said the closed Amherst dump has remained uncapped for over a year, allowing leachates to filter into parts of Amherst's ground water. ACAP also contends that the Brickyard Wells were closed in 1981 due to this contamination, she said.

"We're very concerned about the relocation of Amherst Auto Parts," Crawley said. "The proposed site is located on secondary recharge land for the town aquifer. We feel this town water supply could be threatened by similar contamination."

Flying orb reported

"A glowing green ball" which allegedly fell from the sky was reported by a South Pleasant Street resident about 5:50 a.m. yesterday morning, Amherst Police said.

Police were dispatched to an area in South Amherst where the person said the object landed, but could find nothing. No other calls concerning the object were reported, police said. The person was not available for comment.

Police arrested a student from Worcester Polytechnical Institute early yesterday morning and charged him with being a disorderly person after he allegedly harassed residents in Brittany Manor.

Motto Contest
Deadline: April 13, 1984

The University of Massachusetts at Amherst is sponsoring a Motto Contest. The purpose of this contest is to create either an English motto, eventually to be turned into Latin, or a Latin motto, that reflects the educational mission of the Amherst campus. Contestants are encouraged, though not required, to research this motto. For example, the speeches of current or former Presidents or Chancellors of the University or annual reports, may be consulted.

All entries become sole property of the University and entry constitutes permission to the University to use winning motto as it deems appropriate.

CONTEST RULES:
1. Entry may be in English or Latin. If English, the motto must lend itself to translation into Latin.
2. Mottos are limited to no more than five words.
3. Entrants must be affiliated with the University of Massachusetts at Amherst as: students, faculty, employees, alumni.
4. Members of the screening committee, and their families, are excluded from entering.
5. One entry per person.
6. A prize of $100, for the best entry, will be announced April 29, 1984.
7. In case of duplicate entries, the prize will be shared.
8. Entries will be submitted by mail and must be postmarked no later than April 13, 1984.

Entry blanks are available in the Classics office, 528 Herter Hall and should be returned by mail to:

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Senseless acts by vicious people

Two weeks ago a female Orchard Hill dormitory resident said she was sleeping in her room between 9 a.m. and noon, when someone poured red liquid under her door and put a note in the puddle. It said "Death to all Jews." Another similar incident occurred shortly thereafter.

Josh Meyer

This is an open letter, to the person(s) who poured blood under doors. A concerned member of the Jewish community on campus called these acts "bordering on violent." He was wrong - they were violent acts, as violent in intent as you can get. They are also acts which merit a jail sentence under recently enacted Massachusetts law, if I'm not mistaken. But a mere punishment for you will never be enough.

I hope what you have done is something you will never forget as I know that your victims will remember it always. I hope you realize how scarred you leave people when you commit such senselessly vicious acts against them. They won't forget that human rats like you exist, and they'll have the foul taste of vengeance, misunderstanding and anti-semitism in the back of their mouths for a very long time.

And because of this, I don't want you to ever forget it either--the way you snuck up like a coward, praying that no one would notice you as you poured the "blood" under the door, turned, and slithered away.

Whatever sick sense of accomplishment and warped pride you felt immediately after probably has already turned to shame. How can you even face your friends and family, keeping such a perverted secret?

I hope all the people you care about, if there are any, find out that you're the one that wrote the note.

Someday soon, I hope you wake from a dream in which someone you might not even know hates you so much that they poured blood under your door, or better yet, maybe someone should actually do it to you, so you can understand for yourself the pain of wondering why? Why someone would hate you so much for being one religion or one race or culture. I hope you someday realize what you're saying when you say "Death to all Jews" or death to anyone. But you won't, for you are very sick.

I guess it's up to the rest of us to find out what to do. You'll obviously have to be treated like a child, just as with other mutant outcasts from society who can't help themsleves. People will say, "it's not your fault" and have pity on you. We'll all try to be understanding, mature adults. We'll try to find out what is in our society that breeds such viciousness and ignorance, and we'll try to figure out how to cure people like you.

We'll go to workshops and read books and talk to each other, and suggest ways to cure you of your blind outrage, hatred and paranoia, without having to punish you. Because an ounce of prevention in this case works and a pound of cure doesn't in cases where you hurt people like you have. But one thing is for sure - if you ever get caught, I hope you get screwed to the wall.

The truth about student Senate

I am writing in response to the recent editorial, criticizing the Student Government Association. Although I share dissatisfaction with the recent publicity that the Student Senate has been receiving, I do not agree with the reasons given for this feeling. It is not that the S.G.A. neglects the interests of students, it is that the work that many of the people involved with this organization do is not adequately publicized that causes misunderstanding.

Peter Deliso

The student Senate and its committees have been in the forefront on such issues as voter registration; rent control; battling tuition increases; the Academic Grievance Procedure; the Residential College Program; the Academic Honesty Policy; the Residential Judicial policy; and an array of films, activities, lectures, and awareness campaigns directed at enhancing the quality of life here at the University of Massachusetts. Since academics is my particular field of responsibility, I will direct the remainder of this column to that area.

First, I can agree with the point mentioned that courses should be more accessible, and flexible; however, 20 hour classes are a bit unrealistic. If you could find students willing to attend classes in the early morning, you would still be hard pressed to find faculty members willing to do the same. Security within the classroom buildings, in the parking lots, and academic areas would present a problem of great magnitude. Certain questions are also of importance such as: would there be enough of a student interest to justify the funding of security, lighting, heating, etc.? If not, are the students willing to carry this increased expenditure in the face of already rising tuition costs? Also, we have to ask ourselves: if we are to push for budgetary allocations to certain departments, how will this affect the various other programs which serve important purposes as well? The problem of oversubscribed classes is better dealt with in other ways. The Academic Affairs Committee has been researching the problem, and is attempting to pressure the Administration to allocate more funds to the concerned departments for the hiring of more professors and assistants to teach these courses. Added to this, there are problems with space allocation, departmental perogatives and long range University academic planning. Obviously, these issues cannot be solved in a day, nor can they be addressed with off-the-cuff proposals.

The issue of Academic Grievance is on the top of our agenda this semester. It is our belief that students have certain rights in the classroom, such as the ability to increase their knowledge without being harassed sexually, racially, or on the basis of religious or sexual preference. Students should be informed of the requirements of a given class, and should be protected against having these changed, and should be free from arbitrary grading policy.

The Residential College Program is also a concern of ours.

In the past, the faculty and Administration have decreased their support for the program to the detriment of a large number of students who have, and may in the future, benefit from it.

The Academic Affairs Committee is continually reviewing Administrative proposals dealing with the academic life on this campus, such as the revised final examination schedule, the long range plan on academics, the reports to the trustees of our various divisions, and others. We are also responsible for the publication of the Course and Teacher Evaluation Guide, which is of vital importance in the student's attempt to have input into the educational quality of our faculty.

What the Academic Affairs Committee and the Senate needs is more student interest in its activities, and more dedicated and concerned students working for student rights. The type of editorial that criticizes the S.G.A. in this way serves to tarnish the reputation of the Senate, increase student apathy, and disillusion the people whom have spent a great deal of time working on these issues. I am appalled to find out that someone would jump to the conclusions that have been, without attempting to find out the truth behind the issue.

Peter Deliso is Chair of Academic Affairs Committee

On tuition hikes

Happy to hear about fees going up? More good news, tuition will undoubtedly be rising also. Maybe you are beginning to wonder, from whence do tuition increase come from, the Board of Regents of course.

Let me explain. The Board of Regents was set up in 1979 to oversee public higher education in Massachusetts, included in its functions was the responsibility of setting tuition. (You might be asking who sits on the Board of Regents - but we will leave that little tidbit for another time.) This year the Regents have come up with a tuition policy proposal establishing guidelines by which all future tuition increases will be set. How were increases set in the past, well they were, to a large degree, set by the arbitrary discretion of the Board. But don't let that bother you, its all water under the bridge now. (So what if they increased tuition at UMass by a total of 70 percent in 4 years. Care for a breakdown; 1979-80 up 16 percent, 1980-81 up 17 percent, 1981-82 up 21 percent, 1982-83 up 16 percent.)

A proposal has been drafted and no longer will increases be arbitrary. What a fine idea - to set tuition according to a tuition policy. As a member of the Committee on Public Policy I was able to get a look at a copy of the proposal. Oh-oh, major problems--denial of access for lower and middle class students, lack of stability in costs, increasing students portion of the cost of education, and danger of pricing UMass out of its education market.

Seriously folks, a tuition policy is a good idea, but the current proposal does have serious deficiencies. The Public Policy Committee and SCERA have written a position paper citing the inadequacies of the Regents recommendation; we would like to enlist your help in trying to work out the problems in the document. Tomorrow on these pages I will support the charges that I have made with facts and figures. Also in the near future, I will suggest ways you and I can channel our energies away from negative student sarcasm/cynicism and towards valuable positive student input.

Pornography explained

To the Editor,

I am writing in response to Greg Burke's criticism of a Feb. 29 article titled Porn and Violence Linked.

There are several inaccuracies in Mr. Burke's criticism, mainly misquotes and/or misinterpretations of the information offered in the article.

The article presented a questionable relationship between violent pornography and violence against women in the home and in society. Mr. Burke wrote that the article stated "statistical proof" of such a correlation, however, the word "proof" was never mentioned in the article.

The article cited "statistical data" based on one experiment conducted at UCLA which connected violence against women with pornographic movies.

In the study, one group of men viewed pornographic movies while another group viewed erotic movies. Mr. Burke said the article never mentioned the results of this experiment. Had he read the article carefully, Mr. Burke would have discovered the study "indicated that men who viewed pornographic movies were more likely to commit acts of violence against women than men who viewed erotica."

Another aspect of the article related to the year-old New Bedford gang-rape case and a photo essay in Hustler, one of the nation's leading pornographic magazines. In January 1983, Hustler featured a photo essay titled "Dirty Pool," in which a young waitress was depicted as being gang-raped on a pool table in a bar. Three months later, a 21 year-old woman was allegedly gang-raped on a pool table in a New Bedford barroom.

Contrary to Mr. Burke's interpretation of these two occurrences, the article did not state any direct "evidence" linking the Hustler photos with the New Bedford rape.

The article did not label pornography as a direct cause of violence toward women. It did not offer valid proof or evidence. It merely showed that there might very well be a connection between violent pornography and actual violence against women.

On joke SGA candidacies

To the Editor,

I write to you over my anger in regards to the $250 appropriated by the SGA for the Gumby/Camel co-presidential joke campaign. As a senior, my future is dependent upon the reputation our school deserves.

It has been years since UMass started turning around its image from that of a "party school" where academics rank last among student priorities, to that of a fine institution where an excellent education has been the goal of many. Still, however, the unattractive nickname lingers in the minds of the public. "ZooMass" is an image which is continually stirred up, and the recent national news coverage of our "fires" helps that image to flourish.

It is imperative that we students act as adults in a responsible and mature manner. Gumby and Camel have made a mockery of the SGA, the student body, and the University at large. I reach out to all students, and urge you in your own self interests to boycott their ridiculous campaign.

Jewish Caucus established

To the Editor,

Surprising as it may seem to most UMass students, there are many feelings of anti-Semitism present on campus. As reported in the Collegian on March 5, there were at least three seperate anti-Semitic actions committed against UMass students last week.

To deal with this problem the Undergraduate Student Senate unanimously recognized the "Jewish Caucus as official representative of students with concern for Jewish values and culture to provide an effective forum for the determination of issues concerning the Student Government Association and all institutions here at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst."

The first meeting of the Jewish Caucus is to be held on Thursday, March 8 at 4:00 in Campus Center room 802. All students interested are encouraged to attend.

The SGA presidential elections: the issues, candidates up for the job

Student input the issue for Rudolph and Dooley

By DAVID LINTON
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association co-presidential candidates Tim Rudolph and Donna Dooley said yesterday that they would revive the President's Council they consider inactive and institute referendums to gain student input in the SGA.

"The most important thing is getting student input," Dooley said. Reviving the President's Council and instituting referendums is part of a plan to create two way communication between the student body and the SGA leadership "because without communication you can't get anything else done," Dooley, Orchard Hill Area Government Treasurer, said.

The candidates said they would also publish a newsletter to students every three weeks to improve communications. Dooley said conducting referendums would be effective in measuring student opinion.

"If students know their vote is gonna make a difference then they'll vote," she said. "It's a cost-benefit problem. Someone is going to have to sit at those ballot boxes but in the long run it will be beneficial to the students."

Another major highlight of the Rudolph/Dooley candidacy, the candidates said, is their "innovations" to cut student phone bills, extending the 10 meal plan to cover weekend meals and wiring dormitories with cable television.

Rudolph, a student senator, admitted the plans for cable television and phone bills are long range issues to be instituted in a series of stages but avoided being specific on how the plans would be implemented or what kind of costs were involved. Rudolph said his main source of information concerning lowering phone bills were "trade manuals" on how the American Telephone and Telegraph (AT&T) divestiture has opened the field of telecommunications to competition with other telephone companies.

Rudolph said he would work with the Public Policy Committee of the SGA to introduce legislation in the Massachusetts state legislature to overturn an "archaic" law preventing state institutions from receiving cable television.

"Our innovations are long range planning. We're talking stages more or less. We don't want to be seen as the 'Wiz Kid' candidacy but these things are achievable," he said.

The candidates praised the lobbying efforts of Students Advocating Financial Aid (SAFA) to increase financial assistance to students and the SGA Public Policy Committee's lobbying efforts against tuition increases.

Both candidates said they opposed resolutions in the Student Senate on international issues like the Grenada invasion. Rudolph said the Cummuter Area Government was "not representative of commuters" and would restructure the body and write a new constitution, though this was done last summer.

Rudolph and Dooley: trying to start something

The Rudolph/Dooley candidacy can be summed up by the phrase "Wanna be starting something." Sure, it's catchy, but it actually means something. It means positive action to make life better for you, the student.

The difference between us and the other three candidacies is that though mindful of the world around us, our energy will be spent to better our immediate world in Amherst. Be it problems like the inability to hold a block party in Sylvan or the course overloads in many departments, our energy will be spent bettering UMass Amherst, not plotting the overthrow of the State Department.

We also want a more flexible meal plan. If students buy ID meals, shouldn't they be able to eat them on any day of the week? A feasability study is presently underway, and we promise results. We also feel that the logistics of the East Side of campus demand that Worcester D.C. be open on weekends. These are just two of the ways open the University to MCI and Baystate. These services are not available only because the rotary dial phones make it impossible. With touch-tone and 11,000 on-campus students, you can bet your phone bill that these long distance services will set up camp in Amherst.

Rudolph & Dooley

Unlike another candidacy our co-ed candidacy doesn't want to patronize women by reviving the defunct student escort service. We feel UMass Amherst should be safe enough that women don't need someone to escort them around campus. This can be accomplished through better lighting and an increase in police patrols. Where is the money coming from, you say? It can come from the same place that money came from to increase security in the past semester. When it's a matter of personal safety, money can be found.

We also have new ideas. We will work to overhaul the dorm phones and bring in touch-tone service. Touch-tone phones in which residential concerns will be presidential concerns.

Another change we bring to the political scene is respect for the wishes of the student body. Any major decision or SGA expenditure over $10,000 should be voted on by the students. We don't belittle your intelligence. Don't let others.

In closing, no matter who you vote for, it's important to vote. It's your $1.8 million. So, read all the literature available. Watch out for the "political animals." Don't be caught in the radical establishment "undertow." If you consider our experience and our new ideas, this whole political thing isn't so bad after all. On election day, let's all start something together.

Michaud still running despite no platform

By LISA MARIE CANTWELL
Collegian Staff

Though it was announced that Student Government Association Presidential Candidate John Michaud had withdrawn from the race during a candidate debate Tuesday night, Michaud said yesterday that he is still in the race.

Michaud, a 27-year-old Engineering major, has no previous experience in student government, and has not published any campaign information. His platform, he said, is a promise to "do a good job as president."

"I am running because I have been on campus for three and a half years, and in that time student government has seemed to me to be an incestuous and self-congratulatory group of people, who have only been concerned about their own politics," said Michaud. "Nothing makes me qualified to say that, it is just my impression."

Michaud also said he wanted to see "how an outsider would do. I don't think I phased too many people."

Michaud attributed his absence from the debate to his study schedule and an exam he "did not do well on" earlier Tuesday evening.

Elections Coordinator Mindy Ordway, said she received a verbal withdrawal from the candidate shortly before the WMUA/Collegian debate.

Michaud said he did consider retracting his candidacy but "since that time I have talked to my friends who support me, and would like to vote for me, so I will remain in the race."

Another factor in his decision to continue with his candidacy is the time and effort he has put into his campaign, and the students who supported his nomination.

"I went out and got 250 signatures. If my name was not on the ballot they would not be able to vote for the person they wanted to," Michaud said yesterday. "I've done all this, so I might as well go on."

The SGA presidency is a job often filled by two students, though former SGA President Jim Murphy held the post alone. One co-president represents the students to the Board of Trustees, with frequent trips to Boston meetings, while the other co-president remains on campus, working with the SGA and other student organizations. Michaud is the only one of the four candidacies running alone.

Michaud stated that he is not worried about taking on the dual role, even though he "does not know what the job entails or the day to day workings."

Michaud said he does not plan to beef-up his campaign or platform. "I am not going to actively campaign," he said, "and I might vote for Gumby and Camel."

No toys or disco for him

My name is John Michaud and I am a candidate for SGA president. On Tuesday, March 6, I did not attend the second presidential candidates' debate due to academic pressures. To the 10 percent of the student body that follows student government and takes it seriously, I humbly apologize.

I have not figured out what my specific plans will be if elected, but I do know that my performance will be just as good as, if not better than, the other unimaginative candidates.

I do also know that I will never ask students to go surfing with me in the middle of the winter, buy some trendy disco record, or play with stuffed animals (is one of the candidates illegally using a trademarked name to further his campaign?).

This is my platform and my platform is me. You make the choice.

John Michaud

When I tell people that I am running for this position, they usually ask me two questions: What are my qualifications and what is my platform? The answers to these questions are one and the same. My qualifications are that I have never been involved with or cared about student government and therefore am representative of over 80 percent of the students here at UMass. The way I figure it, 20 to 25 percent of the student body votes annually in campus elections, and of

Students compete for open seats

Campus Center Board of Governors and Residential committee members will be elected Monday and Tuesday during the Student Government Association presidential elections.

Candidates for the 19 BOG at Large seats include Mary Anne Been, Dawn Butler, Jane M. Donohue, Eric Ericsson, Robert J. Flynn, Jeffery Allyn Gray, Leora Hasten, Laura Koujian, Scott Lorimer, Frank McGovern, Kathy Williams and Heidi Parks.

Finances, student unity concern Patrick/Keller

By MARY-SHIELA LOUGHLIN
Collegian Staff

The team of Rick Patrick and Jim Keller, SGA presidential runningmates, said student financial issues are the first area they will address if elected.

"MTV (music television) and push button phones are all fine and well, but I feel we have a responsibility to address these issues foremost," said Patrick.

Specifically, they plan to work directly with the University resource fee, a fee which would encompass all of the debt service payments for all state-owned, non-academic buildings on-campus. Monitoring of the fee would ensure that students are not over-charged.

The structure of the fee is new, and Keller/Patrick said they will work to provide substantial student input. The candidates said they will also work closely with the Board of Trustees on the tuition policy.

The two Junior engineering majors said resource fee and tuition increases lead to an unfair shift in students entering the University.

"It will not be as publicly accessible as in the past," Patrick said. "As it is right now students have already been cut off by recent financial aid cuts."

Patrick/Keller said "unity" between the students and the faculty is an important goal in their campaign.

"We don't feel the students are well informed," Patrick said, "and we want to let them know what their student government is doing."

Patrick/Keller said they plan to inform the students through the use of resources such as the campus radio station, WMUA, and the Collegian by submitting editorials.

The candidates support women's issues. They also plan to lobby for additional emergency phones on campus, of which there are now five.

The candidates said that most of the important work is done outside the senate, and campus issues are important, as are domestic and international issues, which they said are equated with the students more than with the senate.

The Patrick/Keller campaign highly encourages student involvement. The candidates said they want to make students aware of issue facts and present them with solutions.

"We are for student involvement in decision making in decisions that effect students," Patrick said. "Eighteen thousand students is quite a resource," he said.

Action, not just issues: that's Patrick and Keller

Everyone's talking about issues, we're talking about action. Our experience represents a sincere commitment to student needs, and we intend to make the administration adopt this commitment. The University trustees and administration are limiting student input and are becoming oblivious to student needs.

When the administration faces financial constraints, the first thing to be cut is student payroll. Considering the amount of waste on this campus we will not stand for this. Seventeen percent of the $96 student activities fee we pay each year funds the administrative expenses of the student activities office. This year, this equalled $342,543, and we feel that some of this money can be better utilized for student interests without damaging the efficiency of the office. Now, one of the office's professional staff is leaving. We propose that students fill this position as they have in the past, as they do at other universities. This will lower the offices expenses and offer students both income and experience. This is just one example of how we feel student money can better benefit students.

Why, under circumstances such as these, should students be asked to pay more? We will take action against the proposed tuition hikes and force the Regents to link financial aid to tuition, as well as to conduct impact studies to understand the effect of proposed increases. Before we push for cable television and push-button phones, we will ensure that all students can afford an education.

Getting the administration to respond to student needs is what our candidacy is all about. Let's make the administration proactive, not reactive. Sure, they increased lighting around Butterfield dorm, but only after a woman was raped there. The University has an obligation to meet student needs such as this. It is the responsibility of the SGA co-Presidents to make the Trustees and the administration fulfill this obligation.

One of the means we will use to facilitate this is to develop student awareness of the issues, and unity in confronting them. We will use the University's media resources, the Collegian and WMUA, to do this. Once united, 18,000 students will be a powerful force in pressuring the administration for action.

The issues are here. For instance, 25 percent of students deemed in need of financial aid do not receive a cent. We propose a three-part plan to address this need.

We will work with student organizations such as the senate Public Policy Committee and SAFA to lobby for increased aid, and to get as many students registered to vote as possible.

As registered voters we can utilize our political power through letter drives to our representatives. Further, we as presidents will lobby face-to-face with the Board of Trustees and the administration. Together we will make a difference.

Keller & Patrick

The campaign is issues for Gumby and Camel

By KATE PUTNEY
Collegian Correspondent

Student Government Association presidential candidates Gumby Gosselin and Camel Murphy said they represent a coalition of students who are "concerned that the Student Government is losing its direction," and plan to use their prior experience in the SGA to get it back on track.

Murphy and Gosselin, both seniors this year, said they are unsure at this point whether they would serve in office if elected.

"The issues are the primary objective of this campaign, not winning the election."

Camel Murphy said that "the reason we've run and the reason we're staying in down to the wire is that the other candidacies have not shown that they have a practical knowledge of the issues — they haven't shown that they know how their job is going to work."

A former SGA president himself, Murphy feels that this "personally gives me a lot more background experience."

Gosselin and Murphy said they chose their pseudonyms "out of thin air for the most part," because they didn't want to make their names "an issue."

Part of their campaign is directed towards raising consciousness on social issues because "international issues are really sometimes national issues that affect students," said Murphy.

"Students are citizens," Murphy said, "and therefore their student government should deal with issues outside the boundaries of the University which affect them. For example, when Ronald Reagan indulges his military fantasies he endangers our financial aid, the funding of our education, and maybe our lives as well. It is a responsibility of student leadership to advocate for students interests — regardless of their origin. We are part of a society, which means that social issues are student issues."

The two said they want to see the SGA "taking stands when issues come out," and plan on "keeping an ear to the ground" in order to stay in touch with student interests if elected.

Gosselin and Murphy's platform also consists of getting control of profits from on-campus vending machines which currently go to the Dean of Students Office. They'd like to see these funds "given to area governments; students should control the money," said Gosselin.

They would also like to see more being done on the issue of rent control. The candidates feel their opposition hasn't really dealt with the issue.

"None of them, I don't think, have even confronted the issue, and what people have or haven't done in the past sort of shows what may happen in the future," Murphy said.

As far as the relationship they plan to foster with the administration, Murphy said, "you have to make them respect you first" and the administration will "make decisions that will affect the students ability to attend, such as tuition and housing regulations, unless the students stand up and confront them."

The real issue is vision

Why vote for GUMBY/CAMEL?

Because the other candidacies have shown that they have very little to offer you? None has any record of past service to you; they want you to vote for them based on what they might (or might not) do for you. In place of issues, they offer gifts like Senior Day or touch-tone telephones. Big deal. As a community of students we have real needs and problems and, while gifts are nice, they are also what one expects from an uncle, not a leader.

mentality this signifies is analogous to that of a child to young to master concrete operations (apologies to Piaget). We are part of a community, and, the extent to which we as students refuse to take part in it is the extent to which we are dumped on by it.

In fairness, GUMBY/CAMEL have seen some attempts to deal with talk about issues of importance. However, none have taken the time to figure out plausible courses of action. For example, they are all talking about lighting on campus, but none of them know how to get the money to build it. GUMBY/CAMEL suggested that it come from the money that the University is going to borrow for renovations. That's the difference; we have some idea of what is a solution, as opposed to a catch-phrase. We question how much leadership can be expected from people who don't think things out, and we want you to vote for us on that basis. Don't be fooled by people who will just say things to get elected.

The real issue is vision. Do you want candidates who aren't looking any further than election day, or do you want leadership that has an idea of what student government is about, leadership that sees beyond the end of the week and the edges of the campus?

Gumby & Camel

Times are tough. Women find it hard to walk around campus at night; the president of the United States is just crazy enough to send us all away to be killed; financial aid is down; students are being gouged and mistreated by landlords; the Regents want to raise tuition (so does the chancellor); and the buildings are falling down. In short, this is no time for our student government to lose sight of what it is and what it can be. Students are a powerful force when active, and student government must take the lead (or at least not lag behind) in activating them if it is to consider itself responsible leadership.

Yet we have candidates this year who think that student issues are only the ones that stand directly in front of us. The

The master of mime returns

MARCEL MARCEAU
FAC
Mon., March 5

By JIM FEIN
Collegian Staff

Mime and Marcel Marceau. The two, to the average person, are synonomous. Never before has an individual done so much to define an art form. So it was with high expectations that I entered the FAC this past Monday evening. I was not disappointed.

Marcel Marceau, for those of you unfamiliar with him, is "universally proclaimed as the greatest living pantomimist." His March appearance at UMass has now become an annual affair.

The two and one half-hour performance before a near-capacity crowd was divided into two segments, the first of which was entitled Style Pantomimes. Marceau, strictly a solo performer, did each of these pantomime skits without the use of any props.

The first of these skits, called "The Kite," was predictable yet convincing. Marceau prancing and swaying about the stage, keeping a firm grip on the kite above. The next two skits, "The Bill Poster" and "The Dice Players," were two interesting and amusing acts which put the show firmly on its feet.

In the former, Marceau applies the glue (getting his hands stuck together), then the poster, to the infamous wall he is so adept at creating. In the latter, Marceau, playing against two imaginary competitors, repeatedly casts his dice into a spinning roulette wheel, earnestly following their motion (tracing exaggerated circles with his head), erupting into joy when he won, and a dumbfounded, disbelieving gape when losing.

My favorite skit in the first segment of the show, however, was "The Angel," a captivating interaction between a man and his guardian angel. As the angel, Marceau soars through the 'heavens,' an atmosphere cleverly created by the intermittant flickering of blue and white lights, set to a background of various spacial sounds. The angel looks down upon the man, who sits upon a barstool at a saloon (complete with swinging doors and appropriate barroom music), drinking then romantically kissing some woman. The angel beckons the man to leave behind his 'evil ways,' which he does for a short while, only to be coaxed back by what appeared to be the devil.

After a short intermission, the second segment of the show began, which consisted entirely of Bip Pantomimes. "Bip" is the happy-go-lucky clown figure Marceau created back in 1947 which has now become his alter-ego. The first of these skits was "The Lion Tamer," a most predictable mimicry of the well-known circus act with one amusing twist; try as he would, Bip could not succeed in getting the uninterested lion to jump through a hoop (Marceau's one prop in this skit).

The internationally acclaimed Marcel Marceau.

Another good Bip Pantomime was "Bip Looks for a Job," a comical skit in which Bip unsuccessfully tries his hand at music (as a violinist and harmonicist) and at carpentry (he can't hammer a nail straight and later nails his hand to the wall). Crippled, he then resorts to begging from door to door, which he is quite successful at. The food he then buys attracts dogs and other various animals, which harass him to the point of frustration. However, the best Bip Pantomime was "Bip Plays David and Goliath."

In "David and Goliath," Marceau makes use of one prop, a tall rectangular, black box. Yet the scene he creates is quite tantalizing. In one instance Bip plays the big, burly, and assuredly confident Goliath. In the next he shuffles innocently about as the young, flute-playing David. Not before too long, Goliath, both frustrated and angry, is chasing David, fleet of foot yet seemingly worried. The transition which occurred when one character disappeared behind the black box, and another emerged, was flawless. At the skit's end, Marceau brought out, alternatively, Bip as David, and Bip as Goliath, much to the crowd's delight.

The show as not without its flaws. The final skit of the night, "Bip Remembers/The Turmoil of Life," was not totally coherent. It consisted of a few different scenarios, one of an execution. It seemed to be political in nature, but that was the extent of my understanding. Another flaw in the show was that a few of the skits tended to drag ("The Bureaucrats" and "Bip and the Dating Service"). I would not attribute this flaw to Mr. Marceau, but rather, to the art of pantomime itself, which tends to get boring during long stretches.

However, these flaws are relatively minor. Pantomime is a valid art form requiring a special mix of strength, stamina, concentration, agility, fluidity, and style. Marcel Marceau is the nearly perfect embodiment of these qualities, he is the master of mime.

Good friends will give you a break when you're broke.

The dinner was sensational. So was the check. The problem is, the theater tickets that you insisted on buying broke your whole budget. Enough to declare bankruptcy by the time the coffee arrived.

A nudge under the table and a certain destitute look in the eye were enough to produce the spontaneous loan only a good friend is ready to make.

How do you repay him? First the cash, then the only beer equal to his generosity: Löwenbräu.

UMass pulls it out and stays alive

By BRIAN MURPHY
Collegian Staff

MORGANSTOWN, West Virginia — Call them what you wish — exciting, inconsistent or lucky but they produce. Last night, the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team topped the University of Rhode Island 69-67 in a first round Atlantic 10 Basketball Championship game, as Carl Smith sank two free throws with four seconds left in the game.

"Carl Smith was the one we wanted to have the ball at the end," UMass Coach Ron Gerlufsen said. "We wanted to isolate him because he creates things, is innovative and has good instincts. He drew a foul and made the shots."

Smith had the ball and was looking for the last shot with 21 seconds to go. He drove down the left side of the lane pulled up and in adesperation move pumped faked twice and drew the foul fromfreshman Chris Scotti.

That freshman mistake, with four seconds to go, cost URI thegame.

For Smith, it was the second time he was the man-of-the-hour against Rhode Island. On Jan. 28 at the Cage, he hit a twisting double pump shot from the middle of the key with two seconds remaining to give UMass a 77-75 victory.

Tonight, with 4:27 to go, a Tony Tucker drive in the lane gave URI a 67-60 lead. The Rams were shut down the rest of the way as UMass scored nine points. Senior Edwin Green had six of the nine playing with three fouls.

Green's six straight unanswered points cut the Ram lead to 67-66 with 1:57 to go in the game. John Hempel was one for two from the line with 33 seconds left to knot the score at 67.

URI called a timeout with 29 seconds to go and inbounded the ball at midcourt. However, Green stripped Tucker of the ball and then Roland Fiore tied up Green and forced the jump ball with 21 seconds to go. UMass got the ball on the alternative possession rule.

"The game was typical of the way we played all season," URI coach Claude English said. "We didn't keep our poise. When you have freshman in there, those kind of things tend to happen. They'll learn from that."

The final score was the only time the Minutemen held a lead, as they let URI, who finished with a 6-22 record, jump out to 16-2 lead in the first six minutes. At that point, it looked as though the locals would be home to take their exams Thursday.

"We followed a trend we have been setting, getting off to a slow start," Gerlufsen said. "We dig a hole and then try to climb the mountain. It is not easy to play that way."j

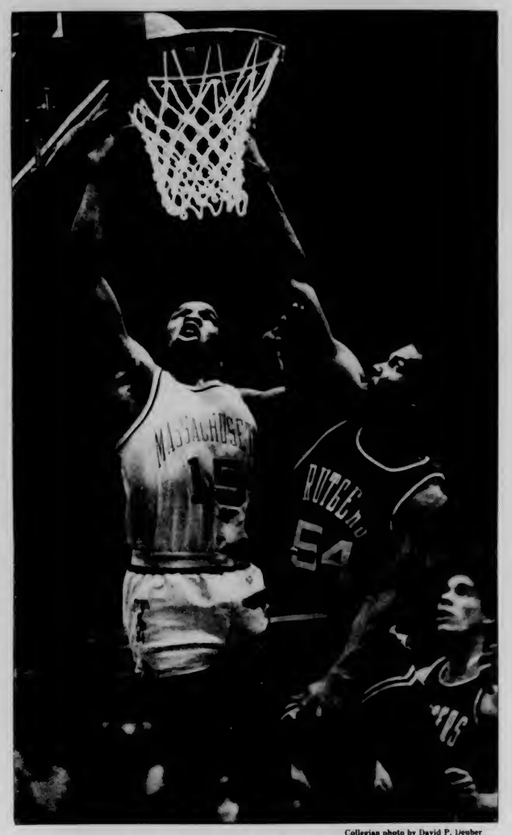
Hempel and Donald Russell changed UMass' dire situation. Hempel came through with one of his finest performances of the season, scoring 14 first half points. Hemple had 25 on the night (10-15). Russell chipped in nine first half points, 13 in the game and with a flurry at the end of half number one, the good guys pulled to within six, 39-33.

At the opening of the second half, UMass, now 12-16, scored from the inside and the outside to pull within three, 45-42 with 15:05 left. URI wouldn't fold however and in the next 5:30, they upped their lead to 57-48, and things were looking bleak for the Minutemen.

Then Monsieur's Hempel and Green (who played only 17 minutes in the entire game, 11 in the second half due to foul trouble) decided it was time to stop messing around. The Minutemen outscored the Rams the rest of the way 21-10, as Hempel and Green scored 11 of those 21 points to set upSmith's heroics.

Hempel led all scorers with 25 with Russell, scoring 13 points. Horace Neysmith scored seven, Green had six, Carl Smith had eight as did Bobby Braun and Craig Smith scored two. Kevin Compton led URI with 20 and Marc Upshaw added 16.

Last night's win enables the Minutemen to proceed in the Atlantic 10 tournament. Tonight, they will face the 15th ranked Temple Owls, the top seed in the conference. Temple finished 23-3 in the regular season, 18-0 in the Atlantic 10.



Temple has the league's MVP Terence Stansbury and the league's coach of the year in John Chaney.

"We can beat Temple or any team in the league when we play hard," Hempel said.

The Minutemen will have to play hard tonight. Gametime is 9 p.m. and WMUA (91.1 FM) airtime will be 8:45 with the pregame show.

The two times they have played this season Temple has won both, 83-66 at the Palestra and 65-46 in the Cage.

MINUTEMAN MUTTERINGS — Attendance was 2319 in the 14,000 seat coliseum. Neysmith had nine rebounds and Braun came off the bench with eight points and ten rebounds in 23 minutes. UM out rebounded URI 37-30.

Just a few thoughts...

Baseball is just around the corner as spring training gears up in Florida and Arizona. Each team goes in with high hopes and World Series expectations, but we all know on.y one will win...The World Champions Orioles remain virtually intact, with MVP Cal Ripkin, Jr. and playoff MVP Mike Boddikker leading the young Birds. They have a good chance of repeating, but will face stiff competition from Chicago, Detroit, Milwaukee, and the Yanks...Sorry I didn't mention the Red Sox, but it is Lent...The National League should feature the usual: Expos, Dodgers, Phillies, and Cards...Watch out for the Mets--the management has done such a fine job with Seaver and sig.ing Strawberry for 1 year. But the club w.ll be there, and as soon as you stop laugh.. you can read on.

It's hard to be.. e that when Jim Palmer won his first .ampionship in 1966, he made 7 thouss.. dollars a year. Now, his dandruff mak.. more than that. Oops, I forgot, accord.. to the commercial, Jim doesn't have any dandruff...Speaking of contracts, how about Steve Young? 40 million for 43 years. But some of the contract is going to charity and a scholarship fund for BYU...Nevertheless, Mr. Young seems to be set for a while. Now watch Young come to Massachusetts, buy one ticket, and win the Megabucks...More USFL news: in the Houston, San Antonio game Monday night, the lights went out in the 3rd quarter and most of the few people that were there left. Houston couldn't even get into their locker room because they couldn't find the man with the key...It may not make it as a league, but as a sitcom its got possibilities.

The possibilities are almost endless for the NBA playoffs, as the expanded format gives many clubs a chance to compete in the second season...One thing the Knicks don't do is shy away from the Celtics, beating them at the Boston Garden. Bernard King is showing MVP characteristics but this year is key to the Knicks. If they can advance far in the playoffs, they can put themselves in the elite of the NBA...

Men's track finishes season; outdoor meets begin in April

By M.E. MURRAY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusett's men's track team completed their indoor season over the weekend at Princeton, site of the IC4A Championships.

Bright spots for the Minutemen were Brian Osborne's fifth-place showing in the 500 meters and the two-mile relay team which finished sixth.

Osborne had already set two UMass school records in qualifying heats for the championship finals and then broke his own record when he reeled off an impressive 1:03.83, the fourth fastest 500 ever by a New England collegian.

Freshman Kevin Novak opened up for the two-mile relay team with a 1:57 half; junior John Keelan's anchor leg of 1:52.4 preserved the sixth-place finish; in between were sandwiched sophomores Ted White (1:55.4) and Tom Carleo (1:54.1).

Penn State University won the overall championship, edging George Mason 62-61. The Nittany Lions needed at least a fourth-place finish in the meet's final event to win, and they got it as the mile relay team nipped Princeton by three seconds.

With the return of snow and cold, its hard to believe but the Minutemen will open up their outdoor season just one month from now when they host Dartmouth in a dual meet April 7th.

Intramural officials are needed for softball and soccer. Application forms are available in Boyden 215. Any officials must attend meetings, either on March 12th or 13th at 7 p.m. in Boyden 215. For further information, contact the intramural office in Boyden.

Project DEEP at UMass is once again offering a Sport Diving Course in Key Largo, Fla., during spring break. The course is worth two credits in General Physical Education. A general meeting will be held tomorrow in room 10 Curry Hicks at 7 p.m.

Arab women face conflict, says panelist

By CRIS SCHUSTER
Collegian Staff

Despite facing and struggling against incredible odds, trying to rebuild their lives and their familes, women in Lebanon have not lost their determination to survive.

Kathryn Silver, a member of the Boston-based Women for Women in Lebanon, spoke at a panel disussion last night at the University of Massachusetts.

"Women face a threat to their very existence" in Lebanon, Silver said. "Imagine yourself as a woman trying to hold together the family, what's left of it."

To Palestinian women in Lebanon, conflict is a part of every day life. They have been uprooted and scattered into other lands, lost their husbands and sons, and as a result, are living a very unconventional life, Silver said.

"The big question is how are they going to restructure their lives," Silver said.

Before the Israeli invasion, infrastructure among Palestinians in Lebanon existed. This infrastructure gave women job opportunities and support.

However, the infrastructure collapsed after the invasion, leaving the Palestinians on their own and without a support network, she said.

Dominique Ghossein, also a panelist and member of Women for Women in Lebanon, said too many Americans have misconceptions about the Middle East.

"What exists here is a lot of misunderstanding, misinformation of the Arab World, more specifically of Arab men and of Arab women," she said. "Men are depicted as greedy, violent, rich, dirty, and ignorant. Arab women basically are victims."

Jeanne Butterfield, another panelist, criticized the women's movement in the United States for not paying much attention to the situation overseas.

"It's striking what an uphill battle it's been to put the situation of Arab women on the agenda of the women's movement," she said.

Butterfield said one of the problems of the women's movement is that historically it has never been strong in building international ties with other women.

Coalition works for student vote

SANDRA KONOPKA
Collegian Correspondant

After registering about 3,200 students to vote in the Presidential Primary Tuesday, a student coalition is looking for ways to get them to the polls, according to MassPirg Voter Register Coordinator Jay Holland.

Students from the Student Center for Educational Reasearch and Advocacy [SCERA] Office of Third World Affairs, Public Policy Committee, Student Government Association Office, and the Commuter Collective will call students the day before and the day of the primary to remind students to vote, said Holland. Also leaflets will be given out at the dining commons and around campus.

"We want to renew an interest in politics by reawakening this generation, and make students realize their potential in political power, just by voting," he said.

Holland said by voting, students can have a say in important issues such as financial aid, arms control and women and minority issues.

Women have better health, says lecturer

By LAURA YEE
Collegian Staff

Studies show that women are stronger, sturdier and biologically more advantaged than men.

As part of the Chancellor's Lecture Series, University of Massachusetts psychology professor and clinical psychologist Bonnie R. Strickland told more than 200 people last night at the Campus Center auditorium that "at every moment across the lifespan, from conception to death, girls and women are, on the average, more advantaged and live longer than boys and men."

In her lecture, titled "Gender Differences in Illness and Health," accompanied with a slide of statistical graphs, Strickland said patterns show that health and illness are linked to lifestyle, behavior and gender.

I am not trying to make the point that one sex is superior to the other," Strickland said. "We find too much of this value-laden thinking in our social and cultural history which has insisted, in spite of reality, that women are the weaker sex and need to be protected."

"The mortality rates for men exceed those of women for almost every disorder. This is especially true for the first two diseases, heart disease and malignancy. The exception where females have higher death rates than males, occur for cerebrovascular disease (strokes), probably because women are living longer and are thus more likely to suffer cerebral accidents such as strokes," Strickland said.

Despite studies that show women are living longer than men, Strickland said the death rate of all heart disease has been decreasing during the last 30 years for men and staying the same for women.

"These declines in heart disease mortality probably occur for a number of reasons including increased information and decrease in cigarette smoking," she said. Strickland attributes the stabilization of the mortality rate for women to more women in the work force and advertisements directed toward women.

Megabucks ticket sales soar at local stores

By RISA FREEMAN
Collegian Staff

"Come on in if you could use $13,000,000," urge signs distributed this week by the Massachusetts State Lottery Commission, promoting its "Megabucks" game.

The Megabucks jackpot shot up by $5 million from last week's total of $8 million, sending a flood of millionaire hopefuls to Megabucks vendors statewide. The jackpot total increases as the amount of ticket sales increases.

Locally more than 4,000 Megabucks tickets were sold by Wednesday at Augie's Tobacco Shop in Amherst, said store owner Sam Samuels.

This week's jackpot of $13,087,480 is the largest amount of money ever offered in the history of the Massachusetts State Lottery, said David Ellis, spokesman for the commission.

The largest ever offered in the U.S. was on September 2, 1983 in Pennsylvania, Ellis added. The jackpot of 18.1 million dollars was split by three winners.

"The sales (of Megabucks tickets) this week are unbelievable," Samuels said. "I expect we will average about two thousand every day, and Saturday will be the big rush."

With the odds of winning at almost two million to one, many wishful people are still standing in lines at supermarkets, coffee Wednesday and another bought 85," Samuels said.

James Reinle, a worker at the bowling alley at the University of Massachusetts collected $15 worth of cans and bottles and put the money toward the purchase of 15 Megabucks tickets.

"The tickets are virtually free and if I win, I'll share the money with my boss who I collected the empties with," he said.

Tony Manfredonia, 19, a sophomore economics major from Braintree, has been buying one or two tickets a week since the beginning of intersession.

"I bought four today because of the 13 million," he said. "I chose my numbers by the numbers of various verses in the Bible. I'm hoping for inspiration from God."

Jack Merrill, 23, a senior political science major from Pembroke, said he only buys tickets when the jackpot is over $2 million.

"I buy because I'm a greedy sucker like everyone else," he said.

Keith Dawson, 19, a sophomore English major at Amherst College, said he never bought a ticket before.

"I'm buying today for greed," he said. "If I win, I'm going to buy my fraternity house."

Don Kahn, a self-employed computer consultant from Leverett, bought 20 tickets.

"I think I'm going to try a progression. I was planning to use the computer but I haven't done it yet."

BUYING A DREAM - Local residents stand in line at Augie's Tobacco Shop in Amherst to buy a ticket for Saturday's $13 million Megabucks drawing.

Kathy Collins, 20, a junior psychology major from Weymouth, said she bought one Megabucks ticket a long time ago.

"I haven't played lately because there's not much publicity," she said.

"I figure it's 13 million this week so why not. I have just as good a chance as anyone else," she added.

One woman, while trying to choose her lucky six numbers said, "I feel like I'm determining my destiny by picking these numbers."

The deadline for buying tickets is 9 p.m. Saturday followed by a televised drawing on channels 5 and 7 from the Raynham Dog Track at 10 p.m.

Rape witness claims bartender threatened

FALL RIVER — One of six defendants in a barroom gang rape case threatened to kill a bartender if he told police "it was just me alone" who attacked a woman on a pool table, a witness testified yesterday.

Valdimiro Pacheco, a customer in Big Dan's bar in New Bedford on March 6, 1983, said he heard Daniel Silvia make the warning to bartender Carlos Machado.

"I heard him say, 'Don't tell them it was just me alone or I'll kill you,' " Pacheco testified.

He said he was sitting at the bar when he saw a group of laughing men hold a crying, struggling young woman down on a pool table.

He said Silvia was on top of the woman while at least one other man tried to force her to perform oral sex.

"I heard the sound of crying and heard her talking to the men," Pacheco, a Portuguese immigrant, testified through an interpreter. "I saw her talking to the others and try to get up."

Pacheco said when the woman struggled to free herself, another man "took her arm and was talking to her," then tried to force the woman to have oral sex.

The witness said another man unbuttoned his pants as he talked to the woman. Pacheco said the man then shoved the woman's leg.

Four area colleges expect tuition hikes

AMHERST — It's that time of year that parents learn how much it will cost them to support their children at Amherst, Mount Holyoke and other expensive colleges in this western Massachusetts center of learning. The price will be at least $12,000 and nearing the $13,000 mark

Amherst College spokeswoman Terry Allen said yesterday that annual tuition, room and board and other fees there will jump 6 percent from $11,700 to $12,400.

At Hampshire College, also in Amherst, which already costs $12,150 to attend, spokesman Russell Powell said trustees would review a proposal this weekend to boost fees 6.7 percent to $12,960.

Lawyer loses license, faces 1 to 3 years

CLINTON, Tenn. — A lawyer who helped her convict client escape and spent five months on the run will lose her law license and faces "prolonged hospitalization" for mental problems if she is put on probation, her attorney says.

Mary P. Evans, 27, pleaded guilty to escape Wednesday after prosecutors agreed to drop aggravated kidnapping and armed robbery charges and recommend a suspended sentence of one to three years.

The man she helped escape, William Timothy Kirk, 37, pleaded guilty to escape and armed robbery and agreed to accept consecutive prison terms of five and 35 years.

Criminal Court Judge James B. Scott will sentence Ms. Evans and Kirk on March 27.

He warned them that he can issue tougher sentences than those specified in the plea bargain.

As a condition for probation, Ms. Evans must continue psychiatric care for mental problems her attorney said she has had since adolescence.

French employees protest wage policy

PARIS - Thousands of public employees across France went on a one-day strike yesterday to protest wage policies, disrupting transportation and forcing schools and government offices to close.

Electricity was cut for varying periods in many areas this morning and public bus and train service on commuter lines around Paris was about one-fourth of normal volume.

Air traffic was halted at Charles de Gaulle and Orly airports near Paris as air traffic controllers called a four-hour strike. The state-owned Air France and Air Inter airlines canceled most flights.

Apparent murder-suicide shocks townspeople

SHREWSBURY - Neighbors and friends, shocked by the apparent murder-suicide of a well-liked mother and son said yesterday that the victims seemed happy, outgoing and friendly - as if they had few troubles in the world.

The deaths were "the least thing you would have expected," said Robert Adams, a teen-age acquaintance of Jeffrey A. Brazelton, 18.

The youth and his mother, 40-year-old Margo Brazelton, were found Wednesday in their nine-room, English tudor-style home in the affluent Worcester suburb of Shrewsbury.

The pair's father and husband, Roy D. Brazelton, the president of a prominent Boston-area grocery chain, Iandoli's Super Markets Inc., found the bodies when he returned home from work about 5:30 p.m., police said.

Police told The Evening Gazette of Worcester that Mrs. Brazelton was found lying on the kitchen floor with severe head injuries. Police said they found a large pipe wrench, believed to be the murder weapon, on the kichen table next to her body.

After he found his wife's body, Brazelton heard a car motor running in the home's attached garage, police said. He discovered his son in the front seat of his sports car, with a vacuum cleaner hose connected to the car's tail pipe leading into front passenger-side window.

Police Chief Robert K. McGuinley said investigators are treating the case as a murder-suicide.

"There were no signs of forced entry and nothing was out of place in the home," he said. "Everything seemed to be in order." He added that there was no sign of a struggle or an argument in the home, and that none of the furniture was in disarray.

Resident assistants try to organize

By ERIKA KLEIDERMAN
Collegian Correspondent

The first steps toward forming a resident assistant organization with administrative input were discussed last night in a meeting organized by the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA) residential team.

"We would like to participate in the decision making process so administrative policies don't come as a surprise to RAs, said Freeman Woodson, student team advocate.

Although only five RAs turned up at the meeting, a plan of action was established to form a new organization involving a constitution of proposed missions and recruitment of RAs.

"Ultimately we would like to have representative RAs involved from every dorm cluster on campus," said Woodson.

Eventually, when enough RAs have become involved three or four would represent the organization and go directly to the Residential Committee with concerns, he said.

The issues had been discussed at an earlier meeting, and the RAs said their concerns were RA classes, RA newsletters and a reorganization plan of the residential system.

This reorganization would consolidate the professional staff in the dorms and shift more responsibilities onto the RAs, Woodson said.

The organization is still in the initial planning stages, but the RAs already involved are enthusiastic and determined to gain the interest of other RAs, he said.

Today they will meet in the SCERA office at 2:30 on the fourth floor of the Student Union to write a constitution.

Prevention aids in crime decrease

By MIKE HOROWITZ
Collegian Correspondent

While the toal number of crimes at the University of Massachusetts campus rose in 1983, the number of major crimes decreased, including rape, robbery and assault, according to university police records.

Assistant Director of the UMass Department of Public Safety Lawrence Holmes said the campus police are educating students on crime prevention. We're making information available to prevent crime," Holmes said.

Alcohol played an important role in criminal offenses. The criminal incidents report of 1982 indicated a 9.1 percent rate of alcohol involvement in campus crimes. The figure remained fairly stable in 1983, inching up to 9.4 percent.

UMass police contend the numbers are arbitrary. In fact, the association is made at police discretion; when police mention drunken behavior in their reports is when the relationship appears in statistics.

Crime is most prevalent on the weekends. Of the 2,317 criminal incidents reported in 1982, 47.4 percent occurred on Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays, and 45.5 percent of the incidents occured between 3 and 11 p.m. throughout the year.

However, vandalism, which is often linked with alcohol misuse, is on the decline. The reported cases have dropped from 280 incidents in 1982 to 257 in 1983. "That's dramatic", Holmes said.

But despite 2,347 crimes on campus in 1983, police said no serious crime problem exists.

Rather it is the nature of a bustling, congested community to produce a certain degree of criminal behavior, Holmes said.

BOG approves lesbian, gay week funding

By RALPH ROBERTS
Collegian Staff

The University of Masachusetts Campus Center Board of Governors last night approved $1750 in funds for the Lesbian-Gay Awareness Week, and for the Union Video Center to produce a film depicting the strong points of UMass.

The Lesbian and Gay Week Planning Committee received $750 by the BOG to partially fund the project, which includes a series of workshops designed to promote lesbian and gay awareness.

Paul Throne, a representative for the planning committee, said that with this funding, the project can be a complete success.

Throne, who is also a BOG board member, said it shows the board's "responsiveness to the needs of the students not just at UMass, but for the entire five college community."

The BOG also gave a $1000 grant to UVC for it to begin work on a film designed to improve UMass' public image.

Charles Sennott, coordinator of the film plan, said the University has received some unjustly poor publicity, and this film could "reverse that mood."

"This University is an excellent institution. If the students show more faith in it, we could develop a paramount reputation," Sennott said.

"At first, I didn't think that students had a very positive impression of the project. I just hope they can now see what this can do. I wish anyone who's interested would come down and get involved," he said.

In other BOG business, board members expressed their desire to restructure their organization.

As it presently stands, any BOG actions can be vetoed by the Undergraduate or Graduate Student Senate.

BOG Chairman Mike Reilly said "it is time that the board becomes recognized as a totally autonomous group with nobody but the administration overseeing our actions."

"No student group should be controlled by another student group," Reilly said.

"We do a lot for the students here, and it's time that we get a little recognition in return," Reilly said.

Hillel celebrates Purim holiday

By CAROLYN ROSENBAUM
Collegian Correspondent

To celebrate Purim, the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation at the University of Massachusetts is presenting the annual Latke vs. Hamantaschen debate and brunch at noon Sunday in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union Building.

Purim is "a joyous holiday celebrating the Jewish community's being saved from destruction," said Rabbi Saul Perlmutter, director of Hillel.

"The holiday honors Esther, a Jewish queen of Persia who learned of a plan to kill all the Jews and intervened to save her people. The day is spent listening to readings from the biblical scroll of Esther, giving gifts of food to friends and charity to the needy and having a good time," Perlmutter said.

Plays, parodies and spoofs are features of the celebration.

In this spirit, three distinguished faculty members and a guest lecturer from Framingham will discuss the relative merits of two traditional Jewish foods: the latke, a potato pancake, and the hamantaschen, a three-cornered pastry.

For the latke, Richard Fein, placement director in the School of Management, will give a speech titled "Eat a Latke-Build a Career." He will be joined by Stan Berman, director of Dairy Operations for Boston Food Brokers, who will address "The Latke: The Untold Story of Jewish Survival."

For the hamantaschen, David Schimmel, a lawyer and UMass professor of education, will discuss "The Hamantaschen and The Law: Why the Noble Hamantaschen is the Key to Jurisprudential Wisdom." He will be joined by Bob Marx, an associate professor of management with a doctorate in clinical psychology, who will speak on "The Hamantaschen: The Way to a Well-Rounded Personality."

UMass has held the debate annually, since 1979, originally borrowing the idea from the University of Chicago where the tradition began in 1946.

"This is the first year however, that a parent of a UMass student will speak on the panel. We're pleased to welcome Mr. Berman to the debate," Perlmutter said.

The debate, which is free and open to the public, will begin at 12:45 p.m., preceded by a brunch at noon for which there will be a small fee. The lecturers will supply the makings for latkes and hamantaschen and helpers are invited to the Earthfoods Kitchen at 10 a.m. to help prepare these foods.

King speaks at Hampshire

MARILYN G. BOU
JANICE LOWE
Collegian Correspondents

Mel H. King, ex-mayoral candidate for the city of Boston spoke at Hampshire College last night on an array of issues.

He referred to Black History Month as Black Stories Month. He said, "In being people of color each one of us and our ancestors has their own story to tell. If one of our individual stories were to be left out we would become upset, since each one of us takes part in making not only Black History but also American history."

On the subject of history, King mentioned Rosa Parks and the consequence of her refusion to give up her seat on a bus. He said "Parks played the role of a catalyst by advancing the idea that self definition equals self determination."

Parks was not afraid to say "I am somebody, I am deserving." King also said movement for change cannot happen without definition of self." Just as the Civil Rights Movement was rooted in Black pride the strength of the Rainbow Coalition will come from diverse Americans realizing that they are responsible for each other. People who join the Coalition must assert themselves out of a vision and take leadership roles, he said.

In respect to the women's movement, King said, "there is only one candidate who can make the ERA a reality, for the ERA will never come to unless the mass of unregistered voters take an active participation in this and other issues. As a consequence new people would be elected to offices; these elected officials would be more receptive to accepting and confronting issues such as the ERA.

Workshop to discuss love

By YADIRA BETANCES
Collegian Staff

Communication in black male/female relationships will be the focus of discussion at a workshop tomorrow at the University of Massachusetts.

"Family: the Power of Black Love" will bring to the surface unresolved issues that need to be addressed, said Jacqueline Smith Crooks, Programmer/Advocate of the Third World Women's Program at the Everywoman's Center.

Smith Crooks said the workshop will deal with the intellectual, emotional and spiritual perspectives in a relationship.

She said men represent the intellectual aspect whereas women represent the emotional one. Spiritual, not necessarily meaning relegion, will bring about harmony when intergrated with the other two aspects, she said.

The workshop will be conducted in experimental exercises using small and large groups, she said. She and David Hooker, departmental assistant at John Adams in the Southwest residential area will serve as co-facilitators, she said.

Smith Crooks said although black men are less willing to discuss their personal problems in a relationship than women are, more than one-third of the participants who had signed up for the workshop are males.

"This is a sign of encouragement," she said. "Men are not willing to deal with issues and this is saying they are willing to give it a shot."

She speculated that those attending the workshop will do so "out of curiosity, to experiment conflicts in relationships, to hear what other people are thinking, to experiment what others are doing about the issues, to feel they are not alone to anticipate someone identifies with the issue and to find support and acknowledge what others feel and what they can do about it," she said.

"You have to communicate as men and women first," she said.

Drawing by Chris Winslow

Each year the International Women's Event at the University of Massachusetts celebrates the struggles and achievemeats of women. Like their male counterparts, women have been instrumental characters in making changes in society. Black women in the United States and in other parts of the world have also shared the struggles and achievements. However, because of their double burden as black and female, they have not yet been fully recognized. A spectrum of black women in histroy is detailed above in commemoration of the International Women's Event: Ida B. Wells, anti-lynch crusader; Mary McLeod Bethune, educator, White House adviser and founder of Bethune Cooke College; Harriet Tubman, underground railroad conductor; Sojourner Truth, pilgrim of freedom; Madame C.J. Walker, cosmetic manufacturer and Mary Church Terrell, champion of human rights.

Presidential elections here too

The Campus Center displays made me turn my head. "Hey," I thought, "where's Mr. Moderate Mondale's table?" I remember just a month ago when one could hear him being referred to as "Mr. Shoe-in." I looked around again. "And where's Mr. Fake democrat John Glenn's table?" Or, should I refer to him as Mr. Far Right Moderate democrat as he termed himself during a January speech in Boston? I laughed. I also remember when he too was referred to as a shoe-in for second place in the Democratic nomination.

So, why haven't we seen much of anything from these two around campus? What, they don't need us? Is that what they're saying? Was it that their UMass supporters were overly confident? Was the thought of setting up a table and holding meetings for a cause just too radically liberal for those boring "middle of the roaders" to even consider? Or, could it be that we don't want them? No. UMass even has a Young Republican's Club. That proves that some students will take just about anything even if it's going to hurt them. The old favorites made a bad move. I looked around to see what kind of a move the other candidates were making.

Seven or eight students were milling around the Gary Hart table. Many were picking up pieces of white, sloganless pieces of paper on which the candidate's stance on every issue was printed. There is no excuse for anyone not to know where Gary Hart stands. The Hart workers were informative, friendly, enthusiastic, and seemed genuinely pleased with the showing of newly developed interest in the upset victory of the New Hampshire primary, Maine caucus, and Vermont "beauty contest." Gary Hart needs the young. Here at UMass it seems he has got a lot of them.

The George McGovern table was at best attractive. His student supporters were handing out cute little red and white stickers sporting the all-American slogan, "McGovern, the real thing." The design was made to match that of the well-known Coca-Cola emblem. C'mon, George, Coca-Cola and the real thing, what is that supposed to mean? I doubt that it means much of anything to those of us who think. In 1972, George McGovern had the Massachusetts young. Now, he's trying to get them back all over again. Sorry, the Coca-Cola all-America stuff won't do it.

Jesse Jackson's table was there. No one else was. When Jackson's not around to do the screaming and the preaching, no one listens. It's his way of stating his ideas rather than his ideas that attract the young.

So, does this mean that Hart has got the Democratic nomination all sewn up? No. But Gary Hart and his supporters are not going to insult our intelligence with stickers to match our backpacks, or slogans that we can associate with "the American soft-drink," or with flashy speeches to dazzle us without fulfilling us or without even showing up. Hart's workers have told us just what their candidate is all about.

Believe it or not, it's working. So far, he has New Hampshire, Maine and Vermont. More importantly, he seems to be getting more and more of the young every day. And rightfully so.

Misinterpretation of a quote

To the Editor,

To the women and men of the five college community: I apologize greatly for the quote of the day which was published yesterday in the Collegian.

I chose the quote, reminding people that yesterday was International Women's Day. I never meant to make fun of International Women's Day. However, it seems that I mistakenly interpreted a quote which should not have printed at all. I tried to put a 1980s interpretation on an 1860s quote, which I should not have done.

Having been the Collegian's women's editor for a year, I am very well aware of the struggle women have had and continue to have in order to gain equal respect and treatment in the workplace and in society. I never meant to trivialize that struggle, rather to commend the effort of the women to overcome oppression and be accepted as equals.

The only thing I can say is that I read the quote as saying yes, a woman can be powerful and she can be a worthy opponent, but she does not need to be feared. Respected, yes; feared, no. Many men may be intimidated now by having a woman in a higher position in the workplace, but I used the quote to say that they shouldn't be.

Regardless, I realize now that I should have read the quote for exactly for what it said and not have attempted to put my interpretation on it. And more importantly, I should not have used it as the quote of the day. The quote should be read to remind us of the mistaken attitudes people held and some still have today. But a quote like this belongs in history books, and not in a newspaper.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Keller/Patrick for President

The Collegian Board of Editors is endorsing a candidacy for Student Government President this year for the first time in several years. Recognizing our responsibility to take a stand on perhaps the most important issue of the semester, we have decided to endorse a presidential candidacy.

We endorse the candidacy of Jim Keller and Rick Patrick. We feel they have a better understanding of the means to achieve progress, and a better working knowledge of the administrative and procedural processes needed to succeed as presidents gained through their experience as student leaders. We support their overall philosophy of raising awareness of important issues that enhance the quality of student education, enabling students to become more conscientious members of society.

The Collegian is endorsing Keller/Patrick for their stance on specific topics, such as academic reform, improved access to quality public higher education, increased dialogue between the student government and student representatives around campus, and better interaction with students in general.

The Rudolph/Dooley campaign, we feel, has not addressed vital student needs. Their campaign is based on fiscal responsibilities, impractical innovation, and involvement of students in senate decision-making through frequent referenda.

Although fiscal responsibility is a noble cause, they have consistently offered expensive proposals while calling for no fee increases without specifying where the necessary cuts will be made. Cable television and better phone service are good ideas, but not pressing issues. Decision-making through referenda is impractical because it is time-consuming and costly.

Leaders have to be able to gauge student opinion without falling back on referenda for every important issue that comes up. We need leaders, not vote-counters.

We could not consider John Michaud for our endorsement because he has no platform and he has shown little, if any, commitment to his SGA candidacy.

We feel the Gumby/Camel candidacy, while serving an important purpose in bringing neglected issues to the forefront of the campaigns, would not serve the best interests of the student body.

Their past experience and knowledge of the issues is commendable compared to the other candidacies, however, it is unlikely that the two seniors would, if elected, stay another year to fulfill their responsibilities, and thus their election would be a mistake.

We feel Jim Keller and Rick Patrick have focused their campaign on representing the diverse student body and have demonstrated enthusiasm and competence to reach their desired goals as co-presidents. We believe a vote for Keller/Patrick is a vote in the right direction.

Policy editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian Board of Editors.

Here again- SGA elections

Rudolph and Dooley have some interesting promises. Wouldn't you like to see a computer terminal in every dorm, cable TV, and long-distance phone service from MCI? Wouldn't you like to know how it could all be paid for? Nothing much in the way of campus racism, sexism and anti-Semitism have been raised in the campaign. The most disconcerting thing about the Rudolph/Dooley campaign has to do with its misconduct early on in the race.

Geoffrey A. Feller

The Collegian, a couple weeks ago, published a report of alleged misconduct of the part of the campaign involving the use of the campus newspaper's printing equipment for campaign ads and an endorsement in a student-financed newsletter, both in violation of established rules. The candidates refuted/explained the charges in a letter, which was expected. What should give anyone greater concern, however, is this comment in their letter: "For violations to have actually occured, the allegations would have to be officially presented...and ruled upon." It's like saying the Watergate break-in didn't occur until it was discovered. Interesting in a philosophical sense, perhaps, but it betrays an amount of carelessness with political morality on the part of Dooley and Rudolph.

The candidacy of Gumby and Camel is apparently directed towards those students planning to vote for Jackson or McGovern at the same time as the SGA race. Their pitch is similar to that of the Democratic hopefuls; make sure the issues are being raised by the other candidates by giving the Gumby/Camel team a following. They seem to be less than serious about their chances of victory, and using the names "Gumby" and "Camel" seems to be a tactic designed to make fun of the SGA. In many ways, that's like trying to make a mockery of the Marx Brothers. What's the point?

A funnier campaign is being run in low-profile by John Michaud. On residential issues, he says he doesn't know much but since half the students at UMass live on campus, he'll devote half his time to their concerns. Having had no experience at all in student government, Mr. Michaud says he would therefore be representative of most students at the university. With such a firm grasp of political reality, he makes John Glenn look like Franklin D. Roosevelt.

That leaves the Keller/Patrick campaign. Despite what Gumby and Camel have said, these two have raised issues in their campaign. An important part of their approach is to make the general student population more aware of the problems of racism and sexism on campus. Whether or not anything will be done about it remains to be seen, but Keller and Patrick deserve recognition for making a serious effort to address these issues.

On this basis alone, Keller and Patrick deserve to be elected. Dooley/Rudolph ignore issues and Gumby/Camel's status as a protest candidacy tends to trivialize the issues involved. On this, the most basic of student issues, Keller and Patrick come closest to a realistic solution. Communication is an important first step and they are willing to take it.

We should elect Keller and Patrick, holding them accountable for what they are saying now once they are in office. Even at this level, voting is our right and keeping an eye on our elected officials is our responsibility.

Are candidates misguided?

To the Editor,

I feel really bad for Tim Rudolph and Donna Dooley. They are both students at the University of Massachusetts and yet both have the mentality of eight year-olds. Both are running together for Student Government Association co-President and both are totally misguided about women and campus safety.

In yesterday's Collegian, both candidates said if elected for SGA co-Presidents one of their first priorities will be to see the "defunct" student escort service stay defunct. They said they did not want to "patronize women by reviving" it.

The student escort service is alive and well and operating nightly on campus. While not many women use it, some do, and it becomes a success each and every time it saves a woman from the fear of being raped.

It is naive to think by putting up lights rape will go away. A woman can be raped in a well-lighted or a dark area of campus.

I do agree with them when they say the campus "should be safe enough that women don't need someone to escort them around campus." But it is wrong to think a few lights will stop violence against women or violence against anyone. Lights will help, but so does the escort service. What this campus doesn't need is a co-Presidency team which is both misguided and ignorant of the issues.

On politics and ethics

To the Editor,

As I was walking through campus last Thursday, I was appalled to see a flyer using—or abusing—part of a design of mine which was used on the Fall 1983 Student Telephone Directory. The flyer included a poor reproduction of the illustration in a very unprofessional design with the lettering and my signature deleted, advertising SGA co-president candidates Keller and Patrick.

Permission to use the artwork was never asked for or granted by myself the artist, or anyone connected with the Dean of Students Office, from which the artwork was originally commissioned.

The responsible party or parties who produced this flyer violated several articles of the Code of Fair Practice, copyrighted in 1954 by the Joint Ethics Committee, including plagiarism, ethics, the purchasing of artwork, and alterations of artwork without consulting the artist, just to name a few.

Outraged at Ampersand

To the Editor,

I am writing to express my surprise and outrage concerning the distribution by the Collegian of the magazine Ampersand. Contained within the issue [distributed in yesterday's Collegian] were blatantly sexist, racist and homophobic materials primarily in the form of "jokes". A particularly offensive and harmful "joke" referred to "what it was harder to be, gay or black." I am surprised that the Collegian which claims to be non-sexist, non-racist and non-homophobic would facilitate the distribution of such a useless, ignorant and blatantly bigotted magazine such as Ampersand.

Those among us who are interested in combatting sexism, racism, and homophobia are not amused by jokes which trivialize the problems of being gay and/or black in this society. I sincerely hope that the Collegian will examine future issues of Ampersand more carefully before it is distributed, if the Collegian chooses to continue the distribution of Ampersand at all.

Politics through journalism

To the Editor,

I know the Collegian doesn't like me, but I'm still surprised when I wake up in the morning and read about my alleged attacking, alleged poster fighting, alleged harassment, alleged alleging, or any other alleged acts they can think of. I am flattered that the Collegian feels I'm interesting enough to continually feature on their front page and I wonder if a daily column about me isn't in order.

On the Editorial page they printed a letter to the editor by Marilyn Bou under the heading "Senate Controversy." In her letter she writes that she attended the Senate meeting the night before. That being the case, it would be impossible for her to have made the Collegian letter deadline of 3:30 p.m. The Collegian must have felt the letter important enough to allow her to bypass a deadline that they expect everyone else to make.

"Legislatures won't listen to students if they don't vote," he said. "It's obvious to them that their re-election doesn't depend on students."

"The past couple of weeks have shown that things can change in the election, and unexpected things can occur, regardless of what the polls say," he said. "Students can make a difference."

Although there will be no van service to the polls this year, because of lack of interest, on campus students will be able to get there either by walking or by bus, according to Holland.

Students in Precinct 4, which includes the Southwest Residential Area, Iota Gamma Upsilon, Kappa Kappa Gamma, Lamba Chi Alpha, Lincoln Apartments, Phi Mu Delta, Phi Sigma Kappa, Pi Kappa Alpha and Theta Chi, should vote at the Bangs Community Center in Amherst Center.

Students in Precinct 3, which includes the Central, Northeast, Sylvan, and Orchard Hill residential areas [excluding Butterfield], should vote at the Lutheran Church Lounge, next to Mark's Meadow. Polls are open from 7:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m.

Students are encouraged to vote,and a large turn-out is expected, according to Holland.

Arts

A punk odyssey

By CHARLES FRANCIS CARROLL
Collegian Staff

Looking for excitement? Check out this week's show at the Student Union Gallery. Hardcore California is a multi-media presentation of the San Francisco punk scene. The show includes an entire wall of street art posters, surrounded on four sides by a handsome selection of photographs from a number of up and coming rock photographers. The gallery reverberates with the barbaric yawp of video performance pieces. One might simply turn down the lights, turn up the volume, and punk out!

Peter Belsito put the exhibit together around the release of his second book, Hardcore California, last August. The show comes here from 'Frisco and leaves here at the end of the week for Seattle. For punkers the show is important because it formally recognizes punk as art and for non-punkers the show is important because it introduces punk art to the outsider without any risks.

But is it art? For those who think that art has been in decline since the Renaissance, Hardcore may prove their point. Even Abstract Expressionists may object, forgetting their own rebellious origins. Surrealists, at least some of them, and Dada-ists, will possibly identify with it, for many claim punk has its roots firmly planted in Tzara and Schwitters' graves. No matter what your bias, Hardcore will make an unforgettable impression.

Belsito explains punk art in terms of a "graffiti expressionism with a very heavy graphic element, direct and confrontational, for the most shock value." Mark Pauline's video performances are a case in point. The typical reaction to Pauline's carcasses writhing on the ground in front of blow-ups of world leaders with missiles shooting through them, sometimes injuring bystanders, is "that's weird...unacceptable...not art...it's disgusting." However, this is exactly the response Pauline is trying to achieve, hitting at the contradictions of a society which digests bleeding bodies on the Six O'clock News along with franks, beans, and beer. Pauline thinks that's weird.

Peter Belsito is originally from Leominster, the Pioneer Plastic City. He was a student here from 1971 to 1977. He left Amherst in a snowstorm and went to San Francisco. While a student, Belsito managed the Student Union Gallery. During this time he began designing posters for the Governor's Program Council. He also met Vito Aconci, and became friendly with the New York avant-garde artist. Aconci had him down to his studio where he turned Belsito on to new wave music. "I got the Dead Boys, the Ramones—Listen to this stuff, Peter; it inspires me." It was for Belsito the beginning of a punk odyssey.

The San Francisco scene was very tight and exclusive, but "if you hung around long enough, you could get in." Belsito learned quickly how to "sneak into Mabuhay Gardens." For bread, Belsito worked as a graphic artist for Determined Productions who make Snoopy products. Before long, he began finding work within punk and co-founded the magazine Damage in 1979 and Ego in 1981. He also opened Tool and Die, a storefront art gallery and cellar nightclub. Belsito has published two books, Street Art in 1981 and Hardcore California last year, as well as free-lancing articles for magazines like Seattle Rocket, Another Room, etc.

Belsito spoke candidly with me about his gut feelings about punk. Candidly? I should say morbidly, for it is Belsito's view that punk is dead and we are in a post-punk period awaiting a "new movement." He was there at Winterland in 1979 when the Sex Pistols split up on stage. "Johnny Rotten called everyone assholes and they walked off the stage." By the time Sid Vicious killed himself the next year, punk had come to a "self-destructive end."

After 1979, we began to hear a 6-7 disco beat breaking up the driving punk beat, and other styles too: reggae rock, rockabilly, punkry, Texas, gothic rock, horror rock, political, East Coast New Wave, artistics, even the English fusing with hardcore, a fusion of confusion for hardcore punkers.

Confusion and contradiction, according to Belsito, "comes in once you become a commercial product, as with the Clash." And yet, out of this contradiction have come some exciting and unexpected results, like U-2, Big Country, Midnight Oil, etc. There were many contradictions, not only in the music, but also in the movement. Hardcore began attracting people who didn't understand that slam dancing, a dance form where everyone bumps into each other, was not what it appeared to be, and they would go out to hurt people. The anarchistic setting for punk began dissolving into fascist thinking and violent behavior.

This came to a height when the Dead Kennedys came out with the song "Nazi Punks Fuck Off." "I was there the first night they played it at Tenth Street Hall. Allotta people were running around with swastikas, few of whom realized it was a joke. When punk first started, everyone wore swastikas to remind people of Nazi Germany in this day and age. Jello Biafra (leadsinger of the Dead Kennedys) pulled someone out of the crowd wearing a swastika and made a spectacle of him. There was definitely a football mentality taking over. I like football, but there's something wrong with people acting like apes. Original punks were gentle like hippies. People were totally missing the point of what was happening. Jello said, 'If we don't watch out, we are going to become what we hated so much in society.'"

While the styles have diversified, the Dead Kennedys have remained true to punk with an unadulterated hardcore sound. In Hardcore California at the Student Union Gallery, Peter Belsito has attempted to do the same visually. And, to my way of thinking, he has succeeded in giving us authentic insight. The show closes today.

Second half rally crushes UMass

By BRIAN MURPHY
Collegian Staff

MORGANSTOWN, West Virginia — The roller-coaster ride the University of Massachusetts has taken us on all season stopped last night as the 15th ranked Temple Owls blew out Massachusetts in the second half to take a 78-54 decision.

UMass played an excellent first half and went into the locker room with a 37-36 lead.

With 15:28 left in the game, it was still close, with Temple hanging onto a 46-43 lead.

But then the Minutemen went into one of their patterned letdowns as they shot only 20 percent (6-30) in the second half. That allowed Temple to outscore Massachusetts 32-11 the rest of the way.

It was a fitting ending to a season that was far from disappointing. UMass ended their season with a 12-17 record, the most wins in one season since 1977-78's 15-12 record.

"We have some specific goals, some of which we reached, some we didn't," said UMass head coach Ron Gerlufsen. "Our goal was to win as many as we lost and because we didn't I am disappointed."

Gerlufsen had nothing to be disappointed about in the first half. With Temple's starting point guard Jim McLoughlin out with the flu, the locals jumped on top early, 4-0, with hoops by Edwin Green and John Hempel and played Temple, 25-3, tough for the first twenty minutes.

The rest of the half was nip and tuck before Hempel connected on a satellite shot from the left corner with 40 seconds left to go in the half to give the good guys a 37-36 halftime lead.

At the half, UMass had five players who had scored between six and eight points. had six.

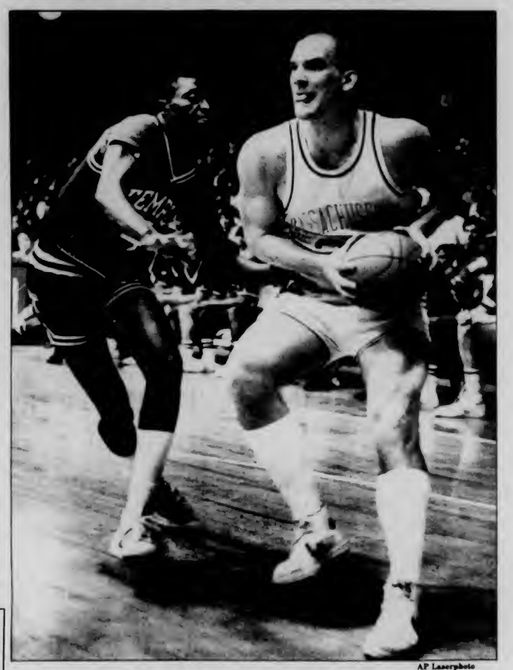
If it wasn't for Terence Stansbury and Granger Hall (10 each) the first half might not have been as close.

Unfortunately, the second half had yet to be played, and Temple would unload its talented arsenal in the last 15 minutes of the game.

Temple shot 59 percent (17-29) in the second half and scored from every which way they could. Add in UMass' second half scoring woes and the result is clearly explained.

"When execution breaks down we fall back on the jump shot because it is the easy way out," said Gerlufsen.

Hempel and Russell, the two stars in Wednesday's win over URI, self-destructed shooting a combined 3 for 15 in the second half. From the 15 minute mark, the good guys couldn't buy a basket. In the last 15:30, UMass managed only 11 points while Temple capped the contest with 32 points.



Stansbury, who was named the Atlantic 10 MVP on Wednesday, led all scorers with 21 points and showed the 6,300 in attendance why he is considered to be a potential late first round or second round NBA draft choice.

Hall, selected to the conference first team, had 16 points on 7 of 8 shooting along with 5 rebounds.

Hempel led UMass with 12 (5-15, 5 turnovers) and Neysmith and Russell added 10 each.

The game marked the last appearance of seniors Edwin Green, (8 points) and Craig Smith, (3 points).

Green made 2nd team all-conference and Carl Smith made the all-rookie team.

Gymnasts at EIGL's

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

Hit is the key word. In fact it has been the key word all season for the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team but this weekend in Pennsylvania at Temple University, the Minutemen will have to hit if they want to challenge the other seven teams that will be at the 56th Annual Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League Championships (EIGL's).

Presently in sixth place in the league with an 8-5 record, the Minutemen have been annoyed throughout the season with nagging injuries and the lack of hitting their routines. Of the eight teams represented at the EIGL's, UMass has only beaten two of them, Springfield and Temple.

"Everybody's psyched for the meet," coach Roy Johnson said. "We could have quite a few people make it into finals, but we have to hit. We haven't been a consistent team this year."

EIGL's are beginning today with team championships in which UMass hopes to move up to fifth place. Six events will be going on continuously both today and Saturday. The individual championships will be on Saturday. The top men in each event from Friday's meet will compete for the top three spots in the league. Both scores will be combined to find a champion.

In the floor exercises, Joe Demarco, Phil Gorgone, and tri-captains Jim Corbett and Willie Stevens, will have a fair chance of making it into the finals on Saturday. East Strousberg's Devot Garrett is on top of the league in the event with a high score of 9.75.

Ken Dougherty, who was second in the league in the pommel horse event with a 9.4 score, will be challenging Southern Connecticut's Daren Dembrow, first in the league with a 9.55 score, for the top spot. Bert Mathieson, who will be shooting for top all around, will have a good chance of making the finals. He is seventh in the league with 9.15.

Demarco, Eric Ciccone, and Mathieson are the favorites for the still rings event. Mathieson has been averaging 9.05 on the event, but Springfield's Jim Coelho, EIGL champion in still rings for the past two years, will most likely take first.

Gorgone will try to place in the vaulting event. Averaging high eights on the event, Gorgone is tied for seventh in the EIGL with a 9.45 score.

The parallel bars event will feature Stevens, Mathieson, and Dougherty vying for the finals. Mathieson, Stevens, and Sbarra will try to make it into the finals in the high bar event.

"I'd be satisfied with taking fifth," Johnson said. "I'm not satisfied for the whole year, but if we can move up one place then I'd think we'd gone in and had a good championship. If any other teams have a bad day we'll be right there to pick up another point."

UM women gymnasts in vital Atlantic 10 champs

By KEVIN DELUCA
Collegian Staff

Good teams work all season for that one moment when they have to do their very best or their season will be over. Great teams are the ones that succeed at that moment.

The University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team has arrived at that moment in their season as they travel to the University of Rhode Island at Kingston for the Atlantic 10 Championships tomorrow.

"It is an essential meet. We have to push ourselves to a 175 to qualify for (the National Collegiate Athletic Association East) Regionals," said UMass Coach Ken Anderson.

The Minutewomen (10-6) are seeded third at the Atlantic 10 Championships, behind Penn State and West Virgina but ahead of URI.

"I have seen scores in the 160's for both Penn State and West Virginia. I think it is anybody's meet. We were able to upset West Virginia this year and we are out to avenge our loss to URI (by .35). The team who hits is going to win," Anderson stated.

The following line-up will have to win it for UMass.

Robin Low, Jennifer Pancoast, and Tricia Harrity will be competing in all four events for UMass as the all-arounds.

Lisa Griffin and Elizabeth Janney will definitely be two of the three specialists in the vaulting event. Chris Cloutier, who normally competes in the vaulting event, is suffering from a hyper-extended knee and her status is doubtful. If she cannot compete, either Sue Allen or Tricia Camus will vault in her place. At last year's Atlantic 10 Championships, Griffin finished third in the vaulting event and Harrity placed fifth. Besides those two, Low and Janney also have good shots at placing this year.

In the uneven parallel bars event, Janney, Maureen Sutherby, and Camus or Cloutier will be the specialists. Pancoast and Harrity figure to have the best chance of placing. Last year Allen placed fourth in this event, but a fractured finger has kept her off the bars this season.

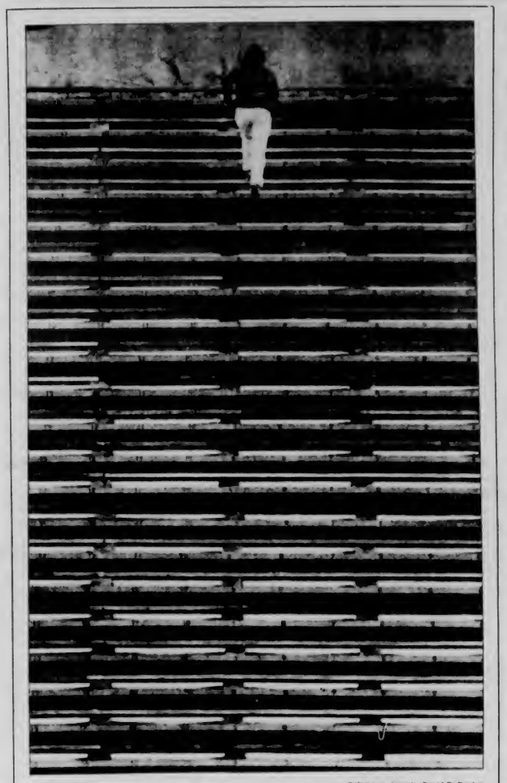
Janney, Allen, and captain Barbara Lord are the specialists on the balance beam. Any of the six Minutewomen in this event have a good chance at placing if they can hit their routines. Harrity was fourth last year.

In the floor exercise event, the strongest event for UMass, Griffin is one of the specialists. The other two spots will be filled by Allen, Camus, or Abigail Farris. Low and Griffin are the best bets to place.

The Minute women can definitely win the meet, but can they score a 175 when their season high is 173?

"We are capable of a 175. We did it last year. We are going all out for it," Anderson said.

"All out" includes rearranged routines and added difficulty, especially on the floor exercise event. Both Pancoast and Harrity have added a double-twist somersault to their floor routines while Griffin has added a double-twist somersault to her last tumbling run to go with the one she performs earlier in her routine. Low is going to perform a double back flip in her floor routine for only the second time in her competitive career.



"The kids have been working pretty hard this week," Anderson said. "I think they are going to be good this weekend."

SGA campaigners finish as Mass. primary begins

By ANNE McCRORY and JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts students will begin voting today to choose a new Student Government Association President, one day before they vote to choose the Democratic contender for U.S. President in the Massachusetts Democratic primary elections.

SGA elections voting will continue through the Super Tuesday primary elections, but SGA elections coordinator Mindy Ordway said she does not know how the primaries will influence SGA voter turnout.

The four SGA Presidential candidacies— Tim Rudoph and Donna Dooley, Jim Keller and Rick Patrick, John Michaud, and Gumby (Paul) Gosselin and Camel (Jim) Murphy— will share the ballot with three referenda questions, Ordway said.

The average turnout for an SGA presidential election is 14 percent, which matches the average turnout for most local elections, Ordway said.

Meanwhile, SGA presidential candidates are making last-minute appeals for votes, with personal on campus appearances and leafleting in off-campus residential areas.

Rudolph and Dooley have between 20 and 30 volunteers, and are conducting their campaign "on a more personal level," said campaign coordinator Rodman Snelling. He said the duo has been campaigning in dormitories and will continue through tomorrow night, introducing themselves and getting response from students on SGA issues.

Gumby (paul) Gosselin and Camel (Jim) Murphy, meanwhile, have been out leafleting residence halls, whith a new position paper on national issues affecting students, Gosselin said last night. About five or six students are helping to distribute in rooms and hanging the fliers on bathroom stalls, he said.

John Michaud, the only candidate running alone, said he spen only $30 of the $250 in campaign funds distributed by the SGA. Since his was a "last-minute decision to run," Michaud said he has no real campaign strategy, and is working alone on his campaign.

Patrick and Keller will be finishing up their sweep of on-campus residential areas with visits to Southwest and Sylvan Residential Areas Sunday and Monday evenings, Patrick said. The two have already visited the other campus residential areas, he said.

Patrick said the campaign, with about 30 workers, has been leafleting off-campus areas.

Campus residents can vote from 11:15 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. in the following locations: Orchard Hill and Central Area residents— Franklin Dining Commons; Northeast and Sylvan Area residents— Worcester D.C.; Cance, Moore, Pierpont, Washington, John Adams, John Quincy Adams, Patterson and MacKimmie Southwest residents — Berkshire D.C.; Melville, Emerson, Thoreau, James, Crampton, Coolidge and Kennedy residents— Hampshire D.C.

Commuters and Greek area residents can vote in front of the Hatch cafeteria between 9 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. today, and between 9:30 a.m. and 4:30p.m. tomorrow.

RSOs offered free publicity

By GLORIA ROSADO
Collegian Correspondent

Free advertising and public relations services are available to registered student organizations and student senate groups through the Student Government Association Communications Office.

A student controlled, non-profit organization, SGA communications provides free typesetting, layout and graphic design for flyer, pamphlets and posters, said office director Kelley Riley.

"Many RSO's are not aware of how we can provide them with important, positive publicity, but we hope to have a large response in the future from groups wanting the services of our professionals," Riley said.

The communications office usually creates a pamphlet or poster from ideas that organizations present, said SGA public relations coordinator, Jennifer Skoglund.

The office's newly created public relations division writes press releases and public service announcements for local newspapers and radio stations. The division also assists organizations in the production of newsletters, said Skoglund.

"It is important for RSO's to let the student know who they are and what they do, and possibly recruit needed volunteers," Skoglund said.

The SGA Communications office is located at 423 Student Union and is open weekdays from 9 A.M. to 5 P.M. A one-week production period is required for all jobs, and production requests must be submitted directly to Riley or Peg Jacobson, Production coordinator, or Skoglund for public relations jobs only.

Morality and war :

Professors urge re-evaluation

By JOANN GALLO
Collegian Correspondent

Feminism and morality must be taken into account if presen-day thinking toward war is to be changed, panelists at a University of Massachusetts Fellows lecture said Thursday night.

"The ideals that structure our way of life require an armed defense, civic virtue and being prepared to fight," said political science prof. Jean Bethke Elshtain. Women have been "completely outside the scheme of things because women can't be soldiers," she said.

Elshtain lectured with prof. Dennis Porter, chair of the UMass French and Italian departments on "From Machiavelli to MAD (mutually assured destruction): Reflections on War and Political Discourse" at the School of Management.

The lecture was sponsored by the Institute for Advanced Study in the Humanities at UMass.

Elshtain, who has written numerous articles on nuclear arms issues and women's studies, said that men have always been the "warriors" while women have had their own private domain within the family structure.

Women in this set-up represented "the beautiful souls," and their feminine virtues have kept them a separate category from men, Elshtain said.

"Men and women are in the same story, but they play different parts," she said.

Present-day thinking towards war, is abstract, and people tend to dissociate themselves from war, Elshtain said. She said prople must "break this habitual form of thought," and recognize that "war is destructive and implicates us in the business of mass killing."

Elshtain argued againsts Realists, like the 15th century political philosopher, Machiavelli, who believed that morals have no weight, and should be left out of political thinking.

Re-evaluating what kind of people we are and what kind of ideals we hold, in keeping with the Moral Mother ideal, would help us "move to a gentler world by working for a shared end purpose," Elshtain said.

"We believe that all the horrendous happenings (wars) of the past are justifiable in the name of progress," she said. The virtues of maternalism would expand our thinking toward war from the "basis of a moral community."

Porter said nuclear war is seen as "an extension of war by other means," but he argued that future wars will not be a war as we know it.

A lare war in the future will most likely not be declared, there will be no invasion no occupation of land, and no self-defense, Porter said, but there will be mutually assured destruction (MAD), he said.

Megabucks winners have money spent already

BRAINTREE, — A grandmother who longs to see Holland when the tulips are in bloom and a furniture salesman who sensed he was about to win big gleefully claimed their shares yesterday of the $18.2 million Megabucks jackpot, the largest in North American history.

Other winners were a 21 year-old carpenter who said he was relieved when he didn't win the whole jackpot and a Rhode Island couple who bet on three lucky numbers — including their adopted daughter's birthday.

Massachusetts lottery officials said seven of the 13.5 million tickets bought in the lottery mania last week matched the magic combination of 5-11-12-23-28-31. The odds of winning were 1 in 1.9 million, and each winner will receive $2.6 million, one-seventh of the toal pot.

As of Sunday night, only four of the seven ticket holders had contacted lottery officials.

Evelyn Buma, 67, a grandmother of six who lives in Worcester, found out she won the lottery at a Megabucks party at her country club Saturday night. Her winning ticket was the first she had ever purchased.

Mrs. Buma said she will indulge in a trip to Holland, the country of her ancestors, a new dress and a Boston Terrier.

John Ferguson, a 40-year old furniture store manager who lives in Candia, N.H., says he will share his prize with his best friend, data processor Jefferey Gengras, 39, also of Candia.

The men bought six tickets at a Lexington grocery store and made a deal to split the jackpot, no matter who picked the perfect combination.

David L. Tremblay, the carpenter, was relieved to learn the prize would be split among several winners.

"It's a lot less pressure," he said. "You probably would have found me in an institution if I won $18 million, going crazy.'

Karen and David Greene of Coventry, R.I. also bet on birthdays — their own and that of their adopted, 6-year-old daughter, Danielle.

The couple, dressed in casual working clothes, drove to lottery headquarters in their 1977 pick-up-truck. A new Mercedes Benz is on the agenda, they said.

Lottery officials expect the remaining winners to come forward Monday.

Senate hopeful Ray Shamie denounces career politicians

By DAVID LINTON
Collegian Staff

Republican U.S. Senate hopeful Ray Shamie denounced big government, career politicians and communism in a campaign speech at Amherst College this weekend.

Speaking before an audience of about 85 people, the Sharon businessman denounced what he termed career politicians and said the Founding Fathers intended that government be composed of people who had experience at a local level to bring a "common sense" leadership at the state and federal levels.

"They (Founding Fathers) weren't career politicians, which is what we have now. We've moved away from representative government," he said.

Shamie said he never wanted to become a politician. He said he was drawn into politics because he was frustrated with growing government regulations and concerned that U.S. military strength is declining.

Shamie said U.S. congressmen lack the political courage to solve problems like the deficit and social security, which have large constituencies supporting opposite solutions. Special interest groups prevent congressment from taking the necessary steps to solve these problems, he said.

"I am told that politicians are in the second oldest profession. I hope that they don't come to resemble the oldest profession," Shamie said.

Praising free enterprise and competition as "what made America", the Senate hopeful said the country faces the threat of "government domination" and communism.

"The communist threat is real. The Soviet Union, not its people but its leaders, want to rule the world," Shamie said. "They want us to live and work like the people in Poland."

Shamie said if the United States could promote democracy and respect for human rights in other countries, including the Soviet Union, "the brotherhood of man could be realized." He said this country must convince the Soviet leadership that war is not in their interest and that "what counts is power — raw power."

In a question and answer period following his speech, Shamie said he supports school prayer and personally opposes abortion but added that those issues should not be dealt with at the federal level. He also said the first piece of legislation he would support would be an amendment to balance the budget.

This is Shamie's second bid for a U.S. Senate seat. He was defeated by Democratic Sen. Edward Kennedy in 1982. In that race, he became the first Republican in 20 years to hold Kennedy to less than 60 percent of the vote.

New trend noted

UM women now marry later

By WENDY LEWIS
Collegian Correspondent

More women today are postponing their decision to marry, and women at the University of Massachusetts are part of this trend, according to several UMass professors.

In the past, college women married after graduation, but today many women continue their educational or career pursuits after receiving their bachelor's degree, analysts say.

George Levinger, a professor of Social Psychology at UMass, said women who marry early often have difficulty defending their decision among their peers, and some seek counseling.

According to age data from a 1982 Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Office (SAREO) report on "The Entering Class at UMass," more women than men planned to work for a master's degree and the number of women planning careers in engineering and business increased at a greater rate than men.

Levinger said most people who have careers eventually want to marry, and the 1982 SAREO survey indicates that since 1975 "raising a family" has become an important objective for both male and female students entering college.

UMass sociologist Roger Libby said the increasing economic independence of educated women was a key factor in their decision to postpone marriage.

He said the consciousness raised by the Women's Movement is another reason women assume lifestyles other than marriage today. Many women are no longer "enthralled" by marriage, Libby said, because they need a "flexible" lifestyle to accommodate their careers.

In addition, he said, many people are no longer afraid they "should not marry at all," and career women often times delay marriage because they believe raising a family would conflict with their work.

Myra Hindus, coordinator of the Working Woman's Task Force at the Everywomen's Center, said some women fear being discriminated against if they become pregnant. She said some employers use subtle means to discourage women from taking time off to have a child and for this reason, all working women should have a thorough understanding of the rights of pregnant workers and laws protecting pregnant working women.

In the past, Levinger said, social taboos against premarital sex encouraged women to legitimize their sexual relationships by marrying early. However, today's more liberal society allows women greater choice in planning their lives, he said.

Libby predicted that by postponing marriage, both men and women have more time to consider their decisions, and eventually base decisions on their own needs, not on tradition.

As a result, Libby claimed, the divorce rate could decrease, as studies indicate the "divorce rate is higher among those who marry early."

Conferences are big business

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

It was an unusual, but not impossible, request, and so the floor of the Hatch cafeteria was lined with mattresses and its windows covered with newspapers.

These preparations for a meditation conference last year, where attendees needed a place to levitate, demonstrate the University of Massachusetts Conferences' dedication to personalized service.

Providing space, facilities and accomodations are only part of the duties of the $1.8 million a year business, according to director Elizabeth A. Dale. Dale said the service generates a "positive feeling about the University," has a "mutually beneficial" relationship with the town and recently received a $5,000 grant from the state Commerce Department in recognition of its revenue base. The money was used to compose a slideshow on the service's capabilities and the lure of the western Massachusetts location.

Conference Services draws its clients, all of whom must be planning some kind of educational venture while at UMass, from sales and marketing techniques, while 25 percent of all business comes from returning clients, Dale said.

About 250 programs are scheduled a year, and more than 25,000 people are attracted to the area to patronize local businesses and restaurants as well as area tourist attractions, she said.

Conferences include various societies' meetings, special olympics, summer outward bound programs and special events, like a marriage encounter weekend which drew 25,000 participants last year. And Dale said a summer conference scheduled for 1986 will bring $250 million from the American Institute of Biological Sciences, with participants arriving from around the world.

Prospective clients can expect to pay mid-range prices of $60 to $70 per person a day, with deluxe "gold key service" rates at up to $95 a day, Dale said.

Revenue, which has doubled since 1979 and is expected to increase 20 percent next year, supports the agency, and profits go toward capital improvements, like new food equipment and audio-visual aids.

Guests are housed in the 100 rooms accessible to Conference Services in the Campus Center Hotel, with area inns available for the overflow and dormitories used to house summer guests, Dale said.

Professor donates award

ByGLORIA ROSADO
Collegian Correspondent

A University of Massachusetts entomology professor who recently received the J.E. Buzzart Memorial Award from the Entomological Society of America, has donated his award money to the UMass entomology department.

Ronald J. Prokopy received the $1,000 award as recognition for his research work in insect behavior and biological pest control. Prokopy said the money will be used to bring outside speakers to the department.

In truth, this award belongs not to me, but to all students, technical assistants, and colleagues who, over the years, have contributed the major share of our research efforts," said Prokopy.

Prokopy is an internationally renowned expert on the behavior of fruit feeding insects. He regularly lectures, conducts research programs worldwide, and is a consultant on fruit flies in Europe, South America, the Far East and The United States.

Prokopy developed a new pest control concept called Integrated Pest Management(IPM). IPM helps to reduce the amount of pesticides used by fruit farmers. In the past orchard farmers sprayed their fields according to spray schedules which anticipate insect problems before they exist. The key is to first determine if there are any pests in the orchards, said Prokopy.

In 1978, Prokopy directed a five year research program called the Massachusetts IPM Apple Project. One-quarter of the apple acreage in Massachusetts is now under the project and other New England states have adopted the IPM programs.

The reduction in the use of pesticides and in fruit damage has had a significant economic value as well as the ecological benefit of not spewing a lot of chemicals around, said Prokopy.

"We can reduce pest levels but we will never be able to get rid of them completely. We just have to learn to live with insects," Prokopy said.

Prokopy has been in the field of entomology for 25 years.

He received his B.S. and Ph.D. in entomology from Cornell University. He joined the UMass faculty in 1975. Before coming to the Unversity, he held academic appointments at Democritos Research Center in Athens, Greece; the University of Texas; the Swiss Federal Research Station in Wadenwill, Switzerland; and the Institute of Pomology in Skierniewice, Poland.

Student barely misses Megabucks

One University of Massachusetts student said he won $400 for the first time in a lottery this past weekend, but he was a little disappointed. He missed sharing in the $18.2 million Megabucks jackpot by one number.

"I feel very, very, lucky, but I still am greedy that I missed by one," junior accounting major Todd Sharek said last night. Seven tickets yielding $2.6 million each had the winning combination.

Sharek, 21, a Delta Chi fraternity member, chose the combination 5 11 12 19 23 28 for his six numbers, and all matched up except his 19, which turned up as 31. He bought the ticket last Monday at Augie's Tobacco Store in Amherst.

A regular player of the weekly lottery, Sharek said he won this week for the first time. He will use the money to buy a new wardrobe.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The art of subversion

A coalition — a group of diverse subcultures who, form a cohesive bond in order to establish goals in which they have common interest in attaining.

The Rainbow Coalition is such, in that, they have formed a power-base that allows those who felt they had no voice in the political drama of today, to rid themselves of the anomic so prevalent in today's society.

We as students of higher learning, possess the means to utilize our facilities of reason and intellect when attempting to make sense of the acrobatics found in the political arena, (in particular the presidential election campaign of '84).

The media's illumination of a statement by Jesse Jackson may be an attempt to subvert, thus divide the power base of the Rainbow Coalition.

There is no justification for such vulger and base ethnic statements when refering to a people. I am of the opinion that a presidential candidate must use discretion and exercise prudence and sensitivity towards the elements of a diverse culture he or she may come to represent as the leaders of a nation.

However, one must analyze the historical context of the relationship that Jewish Americans and Black Americans have in common.

There are many variables to consider as to the connotations and implications of such word usage (as the semantics used by Jesse Jackson). The media makes light of certain events and statements and disregards others to manipulate the minds of the populas. What was the purpose of the Jackson incident?

We must be evermindful of what the Rainbow Coalition represents; who is represented by it, and what may change within the social fabric because of its influence and very existence.

A house divided will not stand in the face of the tempest of adversity...an army cannot withstand the onslaught of its enemy if the ranks are filled with suspicion and infraction.

We must seek to eliminate institutional stratifaction based on race, religion and subculture affilition that has perpetuated its negativity throughout the generations of Western civilization.

We must be constantly aware that as the young minds of today we will be the leaders of tomorrow.

We must actively contend with and defeat the legacy of race and ethnic antagonism. It is our world, our society, our culture. We must progress towards a "synthesis of humanity."

Conflict is inevitable, yet it is good. Intelligent discussion instead of racial animosity is more positive. We cannot allow ourselves to be carriers of antiquated, irrational myths and stereotypes of various ethnic subcultures.

The question— will we be the young minds who attempt the synthesis that we may leave our children a hope in the future? Or will we be like certain decadent elements of the old establishment who foster the maintanence of a mentality that overruns the minds of men and women with tenacious weeds that could destroy the beautiful garden of humanity...

Explanation of SGA endorsement

Last Friday the Collegian endorsed the candidacy of Jim Keller and Rick Patrick for SGA presidency. Soon afterward we began receiving letters from people who didn't understand or disapproved of our decision.

We believe that our primary responsibility is to report the news as accurately and as fairly as possible, while encouraging debate on the issues through the editorial/opinion page. We also believe it is our responsibility to take a particular stand on issues of concern to students. These decisions are made by a two-thirds majority vote of the 11-member Collegian Board of Editors. They are not based on personal preferences — they are decided upon in the same manner as in the Student Senate, with discussion preceding any vote. Candidates were judged on interviews with Collegian, two debates, and campaign literature and other criteria.

While endorsing candidates for political office can be more controversial than endorsing issues of importance, it is still the right and responsibility of a newspaper, particularly if it is the "only one on campus."

The Collegian's credibility will not be eroded by this, or any other endorsement. Our news department and reporters will continue to be as fair and factually accurate as possible. And the Board of Editors will continue to endorse candidates and issues that they feel are beneficial to the overall student population.

In endorsing Keller/Patrick for SGA presidency, we are not attempting to speak in the name of students, nor are we abusing our power, as some have suggested. We are simply taking a stand, and we hope that you consider our point of view. But even more importantly, we hope that you take the time and vote for whom YOU think are the best candidates.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian Board of Editors.

The future is in our hands

The second week in March is rapidly approaching. This week is significant for two reasons. The Massachusetts Presidential Primary is Tuesday March 13th and the elections for the S.G.A. president and Campus Center/Student Union Board of Governors are on March 12th and 13th. The importance of these elections cannot be stressed strongly enough. In the presidential primaries a statement will be made by the voters of this state about their preferences as to who should be considered to run this country over the next four years. In the S.G.A. presidential elections we, as students, will be able to decide who should be president and which issues are important to us.

David Valade

I cannot stress strongly enough that people become informed of the issues in this year's elections. The president elected will be making decisions on many matters that will concern us as students. The amount of money spent on education, the amount of available financial aid, and many other decisions that effect the quality of our life as students and as citizens of this country will be decided by the person we elect. You can voice your opinions in non-student areas such as the future economic and defense policies of this country, but to do this you must know how the candidates stand. We need a president who will address the issues that are important to a majority of the people in this country.

There are issues of importance to be decided in the S.G.A. presidential race. The people that we elect will, for the next year, be the voices of student concerns. We need co-Presidents who will be a strong voice, who will work to preserve the rights that we as students have gained in recent years.

Important issues have been raised by candidates such as violence on campus, the need for Academic Grievance Procedures, and possible tuition and fee increases. It is imperative that we elect a president that will represent our needs, both here within the S.G.A. and at the Board of Trustees in Boston. It is in this election that we will tell the S.G.A. what is important to the students at this university.

David Valade is a UMass student.

Remember to vote!

SGA endorsement applauded

To the Editors,

Your recent decision to endorse a candidacy in the SGA Presidential race has caused an outpouring of emotions, both positive and negative. These feelings will likely cause the Collegian to be the center of controversy for some time to come; but, what else is new?

A very good argument can be made concerning whether or not you should have endorsed, but not about whether or not you can endorse. Freedom of the press is just that — and it's guaranteed by the first amendment. People can yell and scream until they are blue in the face, but I for one will not be convinced.

I applaud the Collegian's decision to endorse. It shows an impressive willingness to meet the issues of the day head on. The Board of Editors has made a tough decision in face of certain controversy, and deserves credit for standing up for their beliefs.

Election endorsement questioned

To the Editor,

As a journalism major, I was somewhat ashamed by the Collegian's decision to endorse a candidacy for the SGA presidency. Recognizing that the election of a new president is one of the most important issues of the semester, the Collegian decided to interfere in the democratic process and throw their support toward one of the candidacies (Keller/Patrick).

I'm confident that the Collegian will reply that by their endorsing a candidacy they felt they were serving the best interests of the students. In theory, perhaps so, but let's look at the facts.

The Collegian holds a monopoly of the news on this campus. In most cases, what they report or editorialize on is all the information that most students will acquire. By endorsing one candidacy over another, no matter how well intentioned, the Collegian unfairly took advantage of this news control and committed a fatal abuse of power.

For some time now, the Collegian has been experiencing "growing pains." They have been itching to take a stand on an issue and thus clearly demonstrate their power.

Pertaining to the Collegian, I sense that there are no articulated guidelines, no ethical philosophy worthy of the name that undergirds the way the Collegian works. The Collegian presumes to speak in the name of the students and to offer themselves as their surrogates in the battle with those who would diminish liberty, despoil the world, or assault the common good. If this is so, then I believe the students have the right to demand that the Collegian should worship at some higher altar than that of professional expertise.

The Board of Editors, in trying to make the Collegian into more than it is, felt they were taking the responsible, journalistic approach in endorsing a candidacy. Unfortunately, the Collegian failed to realize or chose to ignore the fact that what they report on is as good as the gospel to most students. In failing to take into account this absolute, the Collegian Board of Editors seriously eroded one of a newspaper's most important aspects: it's credibility.

Cable and phones "available"

To the Editor,

On Friday's editorial page, Geoffrey A. Feller rather sarcastically stated that Rudolph and Dooley have some interesting promises. He asks, "Wouldn't you like to see a computer terminal in every dorm?", and then goes on to say that it would be impossible due to financial constraints. This is certainly not true. As President of Central Area, Tim Rudolph more than doubled the number of computer terminals in the dorms and secured a personal computer available to all area students. By the way, there was no increase in cost. An arrangement was made between Central and the University Computing Center, where Central would pay half and UCC would pick up the rest of the tab.

"Cable TV" is about to be introduced to Orchard Hill area at minimal viewing rates, and with installation paid for by the cable company. "Long distance phone service from MCI" is available now, and if you don't have a touch tone phone, then you can buy a simple adapter from Radio Shack. That, Mr. Feller is how it will be paid for.

Mr. Feller tried to make himself seem to be the "average student", bewildered by the presidential campaign. Obviously, he is a lackey of the Keller/Patrick campaign and will stop at nothing, including lies to smear the candidacy that Keller/Patrick fear most.

The Committee-to-Elect Rudolph/Dooley
Laura Koumjian

Editor's note: After consulting with the author, we have concluded that Mr. Feller is not connected with any campaign, and is, indeed, an "average student."

Walter Mondale...will Gov. Dukakis give him a boost back into the race?

Candidates look here for victory tomorrow

By JAMES SIMON
Associated Press

BOSTON — As Gary Hart and Walter Mondale considered last-minute campaign visits to the state, their Massachusetts strategists worked feverishly yesterday on get-out-the-vote drives for the up-coming presidential primary.

Hart and Mondale, who lead all polls going into tomorrows's primary, both are considering stops in Massachusetts today to help sway voters who might make up their minds in the final hours of the volatile campaign, aides said.

"It looks pretty good, but not definite that we'll get him back" said Jack Weir , Hart's statewide campaign coordinator, who was trying to set up a rally in Boston's Dorchester neighborhood for tonight.

The Colorado senator, who leads Mondale in most Massachusetts polls by 20 percentage points, received a rousing welcome Saturday from more than 1,000 supporters in Worcester. He refused to predict a victory in Massachusetts, citing the way voters have changed their minds in the closing days of other state primaries.

Mondale's telephone canvassing indicates that Hart's momentum may have peaked in Massachusetts, said Mondale state campaign chief Edward Pliner.

"It's always a tough thing to judge, but I think Hart's momentum is starting to slow a bit," Pliner said. "We are behind. I don't think the polls lie. But I'm getting a sense the voters are starting to focus on Gary Hart and what his new ideas are, if there are any, and look at the differences.

"That's what our goal was, to get people to start looking at the differences. We didn't have much time to turn it around here. We sort of just ran out of time," he said.

Mondale also has stopped his television advertising in Massachusetts and put the money in Southern states to counter Hart's heavy advertising there, he said.

Gov. Michael Dukakis, Boston Mayor Ray Flynn and other prominent Mondale supporters in Massachusetts will continue their campaign appearances right up to election day, he said while labor unions will continue to contact their members.

Former Sen. George McGovern continued his tireless campaiging in Massachusetts yesterday with a call for a special U.S. envoy to Northern Ireland to help end the strife there.

McGovern, speaking as Boston held its annual St. Patrick's Day parade, said the envoy could help find a common ground between the religious and political groups in Ireland.

"The McGovern family has its roots in County Leitrim and County Cavan. The time has come for those of us Irish descent in the new world to come to the aid of the old," he said.

McGovern says he will drop out of the presidential race if he does not finish first or second in Massachusetts. He plans to address his final Massachusetts campaign rally today in Boston with folksinger Arlo Gutherie and Kathleen Kennedy Townsend, eldest daughter of the late Sen. Robert Kennedy, who will introduce him.

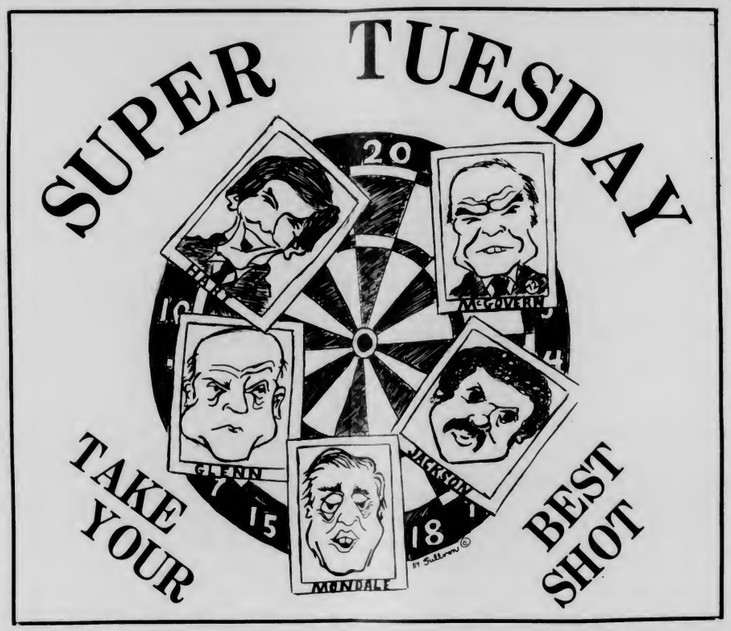
'Know- nothing' Party likes Hart

University of Massachusetts history professor Joseph M. Hernon has announced that the Know-Nothing Party has given their rubber-stamp endorsement to presidential candidate Gary Hart.

Speaking to a small but enthusiastic crowd at Herter Hall Friday afternoon, Hernon explained the ideology of the party that represents "hundreds of thousands of voters."

Hernon said the Know-Nothing Party, of which he is the chairman, is mostly comprised of UMass students. It takes its name from a defunct American political party of the 1850s.

"Our party represents all of those people who will vote for the image of candidates, and our slogan is 'Nothing Matters'. We need to run a Know-Nothing against a Know-It-All, and we hope people will join in with the tidal wave of mindlessness going on and get the elections over with," Hernon said.



"The issues are unimportant; the candidate's image is the message. Since the Democratic party has already lost its soul, why not nominate an Atari Democrat?" Hernon said, "Gary Hart certainly has the best image, so we're proud to give him our rubber-stamp endorsement."

Hernon also said that people should vote for television personalities Automan or Linda Lace as Vice-Presidents, depending on their political alignments.

"If you're an Atari Conservative, then you should write in Automan, who represents the machinery of the polls and tells people what they want to hear. If you consider yourself a left-winger, then you should write in Linda Lace, who represents the mindlessness that people listen to," Hernon said.

"Let's show the country that Massachusetts is just as dumb as the rest of the country by voting for Gary Hart," Hernon said. "Let us confirm the decline of education in America and let us prove that a nation that lives by polls, dies by polls."

– LARRY BOUCHIE

Student efforts, early and late

In the final hours before "Super Tuesday," University of Massachusetts students are canvassing, telephoning registered voters and arranging for van service to the polls.

The number of volunteers recruited for any campaign is vital to that campaign's successs, and in what promises nationally to be a two candidate Democratic contest between former Vice President Walter Mondale and Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado, momentum is the key.

The Hart campaign got some. Mondale's did not.

Students for Gary Hart became a UMass Registered Student Organization (RSO) February, 1983 — the first campus campaign in the country, according to state Sen. Gerard D'Amico, D— Worcester. Hart visited the campus in March last year. Now, he has more than 60 supporters working to get the nomination.

"I feel good about UMass— we definitely have the potential to win the primary," said UMass Students for Gary Hart coordinator Dave Nelson, 23. Nelson, a junior political science major, said participation in the organization has grown considerably since Hart's recent victories, and now has more than 200 supporters.

But the Mondale campaign on campus never quite got off the ground. Organized just three weeks ago by student's concerned that no group had formed to unite Mondale supporters, they have suffered from a lack of momentum, late organization, and administrative hassles which prevented the 25 member group from attaining RSO status, said group coordinator Jim Finkle.

"Once they (students) get behind a candidate and see he has a chance, they're willing to give up a lot," Nelson said. Workers in the campaign have paid their own expenses when materials and immediate funding run low.

"To run a successful election effort anywhere, including a college campus, you need to gain some kind of momentum," Finkle said." Unfortunately, Mondale was not able to visit this campus— if he had, that would've been momentum enough. Now it's too late. I don't think we're going to be able to coordinate any kind of credible effort before Super Tuesday...and the vote from this area will not be high at all because of that."

UMass appearances by George McGovern and the Rev. Jesse Jackson, on the otter hand, drew student interest in those candidate's campaigns. McGovern notices now plaster bulletin boards and Jackson's rainbow bumper stickers adorn bus stops. Jackson has gained the support of several noted faculty members and Third World community leaders, while local politicians, including Hampshire County Democratic Chairman Ken Mosakowski, have endorsed the 1972 Democratic nominee.

McGovern supporters have indicated they are optimistic about the area's vote tommorrow in favor of their candidate, and Jackson backers are determined to get their contingent out to vote.

But it's all a question of who gets to challenge Reagan

Five Democrats continue fight

By the time they now reach us, there are five left to choose from. Anyone who's listened much has heard quite a lot about them for quite a long time. But if you still haven't read enough, then here's more. Because the most important thing is making sure that someone different occupies the White House in 1985.

JESSE JACKSON While as many black leaders supported as opposed his plans before his announcement, Jackson, who simply may have no more money to continue after tomorrow, achieved several goals worth the trip, most notably publicizing on the highest level the road blocks the first black or minority candidates will have to move around, and showing it can be done. But nobody should be counting him out yet. His plan for cutting the deficit with a zero percent growth in the Department of Defense and new taxes on salaries over $25,000. He has been stressing voter registration throughout his campaign with the with more vigor than any other candidate and with the best reason: many of his supporters are unable to vote. In a characteristically flamboyant visit to the University, Jackson also made clear his cohesive view of the world's people and the implications that would present in foreign policy, but has come under attack both for an Arab League contribution to his civil rights group, PUSH, and for an off-the-record slur for which he apologized. The events took a bigger (more recent) media life than his rescue from Syria of a downed American pilot, and without 10 percent of the vote in two primaries, Jackson has lost federal matching funds.

JOHN GLENN Early on it looked to some the most conservative Democrat who could more than match Reagan as a movie hero would be the best challenge. Sen. Paul Tsongas endorsed him for basically that reason. Glenn, who is most photogenic when defending his military career, says he would maintain current aid to El Salvador, but opposes covert aid in Nicaragua and might end El Salvador's aid if death squads continue. His defense recommendation would be the highest of the five, five to six percent above the current year's. He favors a "quiet moment" in public schools, and is the only of the five without a pro-choice abortion stance.

Glenn is not expecting much in terms of strong results from the Massachusetts primary. Glenn has concentrated his efforts on the Florida, Georgia, and Alabama primaries. Some experts are predicting a last place finish here. His organization is virtually unseen in western Massachusetts, but he claims to have support in Boston.

WALTER MONDALE How strong is Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' political machine in Massachusetts? Only as strong as Walter Mondale, and if the polls are correct, Walter Mondale will slip in the Bay state. Dukakis and House Speaker Thomas "Tip" O'Neil are the two top Massachusetts pols to endorse the former vice president and senator from Minnesota, but their opinions don't seem to be enough to get Mondale the commanding victory he needs to break the fall he has taken thus far in New England.

The labor vote will also get its first real rest tomorrow. Massachusetts labor leaders are endorsing Mondale, and their work can be measured in the results. If Mondale does well in Framingham, Lowell, Fall River, Pittsfield and Worcester labor will probably be credited with having delivered its vote.

Mondale won't be getting a very strong student vote. His organization has been weak at UMass, and his local volunteers conceed that it hasn't been much different statewide.

GARY HART The underdog all America is pulling for after the 1984 Olympic hockey team failed. The insight ripe in the press is that voters know nothing about him, and are looking for the best-looking contender who isn't Walter Mondale. If that's true, it says bad things for the rest of his campaign and even worse things for the American public (or at least its Democrats). In any event its almost too clear a case showing the primary and caucus system needs changing: being a frontrunner needn't by definition mean being without worth. Hart would cut the deficit in defense and COLAs and with new taxes for corporations and salaries over $100,000. He has by far some of the strongest and most enduring support here at the University, and with more visits here by him than any other, has shown he would be a president who at least knows where the University is. Being what he calls "the first candidate for President in history to reject contributions from political action committees," Hart can use the flood of contributions his victories are providing.

GEORGE McGOVERN In his 15 to 13 percent miss for second place in the opener at Iowa, he lost out on being the candidate everyone turned to when they decided not Mondale. Did his media-proclaimed "late start" mean that much? In any event, McGovern has said the obvious going into tomorrow: if he can't do well in Massachusetts, where he has campaigned the last few days straight, his mission to at least keep them honest in their campaigns will be ended.

McGovern has a unique jobs bill. He has proposed that a nation-wide rail transportation system be built which would utilize state-of-the-art technology and machinery and create a need for a new highly skilled labor force. It is a rough draft plan right now, but he is sure American technology and labor could handle such a project. "By the year 2000 we could have the finest railway system in the world," he said while at UMass last semester. His plan is a logical alternative to military spending.

– PAUL BASKEN
and KEN BAZINET

Incumbent sole GOP candidate

While the Democratic dog fight for the nomination continues, President Reagan will try to stay clear of stray paws and wait for the dust to settle.

Former Vice-president Walter Mondale's inability to clinch the democratic crown in the early primaries has, so far, postponed any direct criticism of Reagan. Meanwhile, Reagan seems to be anjoying the show saying the Democratic contenders don't have enough promises to go around.

But when the dust settles, Reagan will have to defend his economic policies at home and military muscle flexing abroad. Reagan now enjoys the highest public approval rating of any incumbent president since President Dwight Eisenhower, according to recent polls. But those ratings are often subject to change in the face of foreign and domestic events beyond anyone's control. Former President Carter's doom, for example, was largely decided by events in Iran.

As an incumbent, Reagan has the advantage of the news media, and other resources his office affords, to help in using the masterful acting ability he learned in Hollywood for a good public relations campaign.

Reagan will also take credit for the current economic statistics as proof that Reaganomics is working and that Americans are better off now than they were before he took office. While the economy seems to be improving, the condition of many Americans is not.

THE NEIGHBORHOODS
Friday, March 9
Bluewall

By JIM FEIN
Collegian Staff

Have you ever heard of the Neighborhoods of Boston?

Not the North End, Mattapan, or Jamaica Plain, but the band the Neighborhoods.

If you're not a junior or a senior, chances are, most likely, you haven't.

Upperclassmen might, however, recall the days when the Neighborhoods were the biggest draw of any of the local rock and roll bands who frequented the valley. A line to enter the Bluewall, characteristic of that of a Friday afternoon happy hour, and Bluewall crowds of a thousand people, were not unheard of. I can remember my first semester, freshman year, waiting for two hours outside the Hatch, just to see this band!

That was three and a half years ago.

Today the Neighborhoods are a changed, more mature band. The band remains, as it always has been, a threesome. Original members David Minehan (guitar, lead vocals) and Mike Quaglia (drums) were joined by Lee Harrington (bass) about a year and a half ago to form the current line-up. The Neighborhoods, often characterized by the brisk, breakneck pace of their music, still play at the same speed. The difference, however, is in the more elaborate, thought-provoking, lyrics.

Take, for example, "Shake With a Vengeance" one of the newer songs the Neighborhoods played before a moderate, yet energetic crowd, which kept dance floor space at premium throughout last Friday evening:

Meet me in your party dress in a schoolyard
after sun goes down
Meet me where the children played, where ghosts heve taken over now
Today was a day that could end all days
A day that could shut me down
Shake! With a vengeance. Shake!

This song typifies the Neighborhoods music: intelligent lyrics set to an irresistable dance-rock beat.

The Neighborhoods played two sets of their fast, dance-orientated, rock and roll. The material ranged from early in their career ("Arrogance," "Think it Over," and "Electricity"), to more recent times ("Fire," "Real Stories," "Rhyme, Rhyme," and "This Town"), with an added cover thrown in for good measure (the Who's "Can't Explain"). The band also lplayed, as an encore, "No Place Like Home," one of the two songs from their one and only record, a single released in 1980. That record, which also featured (the hit) "Prettiest Girl," sold very well throughout the Boston area. The success of that record, coupled withe their 1979 victory in Boston's first annual, Rock and Roll Rumble, established the band as one of the premier groups in Boston. Yet it is at this position that the Neighborhoods remain, some four years later.

There are two reasons for this stall in the band's advancement towards success. The first is the failure of the band to sign with a major record label when they were approached. This type of a move would have ideally given them exposure on the national level, thus increasing their chances for wide-scale success. However, after witnessing the demise and subsequent break-up of several Boston bands who did choose to sign with major labels (among them the Atlantics, Private Lightning, the Nervous Eaters, and the Rings), the Neighborhoods choice to remain independent now seems a wise decision indeed.

Yet the Neighborhoods, though they planned to release another record on the independent level, never did so. Whether this was due to 'legal implications', or a lack of capital on the behalf of the independent label, is uncertain. Nevertheless, because they failed to release a record in the meantime, their following, though most devoted, has not grown appreciably, until recently, when they were featured on the cover of the Boston Globe's Calendar supplement.

Over the past several weeks, the Neighborhoods have been hard at work recording material for a new record. This record, a seven-song e.p. in the final stages of production, is scheduled for release by the end of April, according to the band. Whether it will be released by a national or an independent record label is, as of now, uncertain. However, with the seemingly imminent release of some new vinyl, the major obstacle in the band's quest for success, the lack of material for a potential listening audience, now seems about to be overcome.

Then the Neighborhoods will make some headway in their quest for success. Whether or not they will achieve that success depends, to some extent, on luck. However, the fact that the Neighborhoods have the talent to achieve wide-scale success has always been evident.

David Minehan: not just another pretty face.

HOUSING EXEMPTION APPLICATIONS

Frosh, sophomores and Stockbridge students who wish to live off-campus for the Fall Semester 1984 should apply for an exemption from the on-campus housing regulation. Housing Exemption Applications are now available in the Housing Assignment Office, Room 235 Whitmore. Applications are due no later than Friday, March 30, 1984. Applications will not be accepted after this date. Please submit all applications to the Housing Assignment Office, 235 Whitmore.

Important Notes:
Please Read Carefully

Signing a lease is not valid grounds for receiving an exemption from the on-campus housing requirement. DO NOT SIGN A LEASE UNLESS YOU HAVE RECEIVED AN EXEMPTION. Any student who signs a lease without prior approval from the Housing Assignment Office is responsible for all on-campus fees and will be required to reside on-campus.

Students who are granted an exemption from the on-campus housing regulation will lose their housing assignment for the Fall 1984 Semester on the last day of this semester, unless prior arrangements are made with the Housing Assignment Office. Thank you.

UM gymnasts finish sixth at EIGL's

ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

The season showed promise of being more but the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team could not get it all together during the season or at the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics Championships (EIGL's) last weekend at Temple University in Pennsylvania.

Although the three seniors, Jim Corbett, Bert Mathieson and Willie Stevens made it into the individual finals on Saturday, the team as a whole scored a 245.15, its second lowest score of the season, on Friday.

The Minutemen performed well in three events— rings, vaulting and the floor exercises, but had many breaks and problems with the pommel horse, parallel bars and the high bar. It was a weekend of extremes. The Minutemen had four season highs and two season lows at the EIGL's.

"We didn't have that much trouble," coach Roy Johnson said. "Just a couple of people had trouble. Three guys missed on parallel bars, four guys missed on high bar and pommel horse had a lot of breaks."

Southern Connecticut ran away with the championships for the 10th year in a row. Connecticut scored 270.65 to nudge out East Strousburg in second with 268.6 points and Syracuse in third place with 268 points.

UMass started out in the still rings event and scored average with a 40.95 score. The long horse vaulting event went very strong for the Minutemen as they scored a season high 45.85 points. Tri-captain Stevens led the pack with a season high 9.5 score with his vault. Performing a double front somersault with a half twist, Stevens made it into the finals with that score but had some problems on Saturday and scored an 8.8 for an 11th place finish.

Tri-captain Jim Corbett also performed in the individual finals on Saturday by receiving a season high 9.45 score on his layout tsukara vault. Corbett finished in 9th place with that score and a 9.2 score in the finals.

Although he did not reach the finals, Phil Gorgone performed a strong vault, double front somersault piked, for a 9.35 score.

Then came a disappointing parallel bars performance in which the Minutemen posted their lowest score of the season, 37.25. Stevens had the high score in that event, 8.85.

The high bar event was not that much more pleasing to the team as it recorded a 39.3 team score. Tony Sbarra mustered an 8.75 score for the high of the team.

The floor exercises were not the best the Minutemen could produce, but the team scored an average 43.55 total.

The pommel horse event, which was the team's worst event last season, turned out to be exciting and one of its better events this season, however the Minutemen cointinued to have their problems at the championships as they scored a 38.25 total.

The only highlight of the event was that Mathieson scored a 9.2 to perform in finals, and after scoring a 9.05 on Saturday (came home with) a fourth place medal. The 9.2 score was a season high for the senior.

"It's not a good way to end the season," Johnson said. "I thought it would be a fantastic season."

Shown here performing on rings, tri-captain Willie Stevens made it to the finals this weekend in the vaulting event at the gymnastic championships at Temple University. Stevens placed 11th with scores of 9.5 and 8.8.

Women's swimming finishes up

By TOM SCOLLINS
Collegian Staff

When the season is over, athletes tend to look back and reminisce about the high and low points of a season.

For the University of Massachusetts women's swimming team, the 1983-84 season, the recent New England Championships have to be looked upon favorably.

Eleven Minutewomen qualified for the championship and two UMass swimmers took second places as the Minutewomen took a sixth place finish. Hometown favorite Maine won in their own backyard (the championships were held in Orono) with 815 points.

Boston College took second with 794 points while UMass claimed 227 points in the final standings.

Senior Jean Bushee broke school records in the one meter and three meter diving events. Bushee now holds all normal one and three meter diving records of six and eleven dives.

Bushee's total of 409.35 in the one meter, good for second, not only broke her own school record set in 1982 at the same tournament, but qualified her for the zone A NCAA diving qualifying meet to be held at the U.S. Naval Academy in Annapolis, MD this past weekend.

"She shines in championships and thrives on the number of spectators," said Coach Valerie Turtle.

Bushee finished fourth in the three meter event with a new school record of 382.92 surpassing Gina Perrone's mark set in 1982, when Perrone finished fourth in the same tournament.

Junior co-captain Elizabeth Feinberg was the other second place finisher for the UMass squad. Feinberg placed second in the 200 yd. freestyle, beating her old school record and personal best with a time of 1:57.39.

Feinberg was beaten out by 9/100 of a second in that event. One of the strongest swimmers on the team, Feinberg placed third in the 100 yd. freestyle and was consolation finals winner (9th place) in the 50 yd. freestyle.

In other races, the 800 yd. freestyle relay team of Nancy Stephens, Lori McCluskey, Allison Uzzo, and Feinberg took fourth place. The 200 and 400 yd. freestyle relay team with Sue Freitas, McCluskey, Stephens, and Feinberg swimming in both races took sixth place in both events.

The 200 and 400 yd. medley relay teams both took seventh place in the tournament. Sue Freitas, Dinde Battye, Maura Sweeney, and Feinberg swam for the 200 team while battye, Sweeney, Janice Rowan, and Lori McCluskey comprised the 400 team.

Also earning points for the Minutewomen were freshman Allison Uzzo in the 500 yd. and 1650 yd. freestyle. Uzzo placed seventh in the 500 yd.event. Cinde Battye placed in the 200 yd. backstroke. Nancy Stephens earned points in the 100 yd. butterfly and Janice Rowan did the same in the 200 yd. breaststroke.

For three of the swimmers it would be the last time they would swim for the University. Seniors Rosemary Kelsall, Caroline Freitas, and Maura Sweeney were all honored on the last day of the tournament. Senior Jean Bushee was also honored but she continued her season this past weekend in Maryland.

Amherst hockey loses ECAC Div. 3 final to SMU, 4-3

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

It was a study in contrasts, the little state school that doesn't recruit, plays in a high school rink and stays in HoJo's against the private school in the private rink with the out-of-state monsters who grew up with a stick in their hands.

But when the ECAC Division III finals were over Saturday night little Southeastern Massachusetts University was a 4-3 overtime winner over Amherst College at the ORR Rink.

"I tell you what, we've got all Massachusetts boys, no recruits, no big budget, but we've got a trophy," said tourney MVP John Finley, the SMU goalie who let but nine goals in three tourney games and kicked out 39 Jeff shots Saturday night.

It was a storybook ending right down to Findley handing his father Joseph his MVP plaque, his stick and the game puck after the contest. Findley's other son, and the team's only other senior, Tom also played a solid game from his right-wing position against Ameherst.

The winning tally came 3:14 into overtime as Corsair forward Ed Pomphrett broke away into the clear after a pass from center Doug Ell and drove a shot past the lower left of Amherst Goalie Myles Keroack, who had 37 saves in a good effort.

SMU, which finishes 18-5-1 on the year, trailed initially on a goal by Kurt Wever in the first period (3:42) that gave Amherst, (16-6-1) a 1-0 lead.

Center Mike Trayers gave SMU a 2-1 lead with a pair of goals, one with 3:15 to go and another with only 23 seconds remaining in the period.

Defenseman Scott Glennon then blasted home a shot from the right point to give SMU a then-imposing 3-1 lead going into the last period. But the Jeffs, sparked by a rowdy crowd of 700, fought back— hard.

In the span of 52 seconds Larry Vitale and J.P. Martens notched goals and it was deadlocked at 3-3. Both goalies held their ground for the rest of the third period and the teams went into overtime.

Amherst, the tourney's number 1 seed, laid down a barrage of shots on Findley to open the extra-stanza but rookie coach Jack Arena, himself a player last year, and his team faltered just enough on defense to allow Pomphrett the opening he needed.

NCAA committee selects top seeds

KANSAS CITY (AP)— North Carolina, DePaul, Georgetown and Kentucky were made the top seeds in each region in the NCAA basketball tournament pairings announced Sunday.

The top-ranked Tar heels, who have lost twice in 29 games, will meet the winner of the first round game between Temple and ST. John's in the East Regional.

Georgetown moved out of the East into the selection committee the West, takes on the winner of the first-round game between Miami of Ohio and Southern Methodist.

Dpaul is the top seed in the Midwest region and Kentucky in the Mideast.

Kentucky, which was rated first in the Associated Press Top 20 earlier this season, meets the winner of the Alabama-Birmingham vs. Brigham Young game in the Midwest, and DePaul, goping to give retiring Coach Ray Meyer his first national championship, will go against the winner between Alabama and Illinois State in the Midwest.

Aming the teams conspicuously absent were Bucknell, 24-5, Tennessee Chattannooga, 23-6, and onetime collegiate powerhouse UCLA.

It will be the first NCAA tournament UCLA has missed since 1962, not counting two years ago when the Bruins were on probation.

The tournament, biggest and richest in collegiate gistory, begins tuesday with the champions of the 10 weakest Division I conferences meeting in a "preliminary round" in Philadelphia and Dayton. Those five winners will advance to first-round action around the country, beginning Thursday and running through the weekend.

The regional semifinals and finals will be March 22-24 in the East and Mideast and March 23-25 in the West and Midwest. Teams reaching the Final Four in Seattly March 31 are guaranteed more than $600,000 each.

SJJ Strategy

Super Tuesday Meeting

by Tracey Bryant
Nummo Staff

The UMass Students for Jesse Jackson (SJJ) held what was probably their most important meeting of the semester. It was the final strategy meeting in preparation for "Super Tuesday" - the Massachusetts primaries on March 13.

Since Thursday the SJJ have been canvassing, calling and leafletting to circulate key information about Jackson's positions on issues, his goals and ideas and the significance of his campaign. On Tuesday they will provide voting vans for Jackson supporters through the day to transport them to the poles and back to their dorms.

The meeting not only decided what work was to be done, but also provided the fuel - the fervor for the students to carry out the tasks.

UMass professor, Michael Thelwell, guest speaker, stressed the need for action at crucial points in the campaign. He added, "No one can flunk out of school in a week."

Many feel that the movement behind the Jackson campaign, termed the "Rainbow Coalition," is the fruition of the Civil Rights Movement. The Jackson theme/request that people reclaim the democratic principle - 'put the power back in the hands of the people' was reiterated several times during the meeting.

Thelwell said, "We can have a significant role in what the political agenda of the country is - through the Jackson candidacy. (It is and will continue to force) a broadening of the democratic process."

He also told students that Republicans get elected when there is a small voter turn-out, and that Reagan has no respect for the voting power of Blacks, Hispanics, students and the poor.

Thelwell explained that Reagan could get elected and disrespect our voting power because we have not exercised it. "We have not given him any reason to respect us," said Thelwell, "because we don't exercise our right to vote. We have to let everyone know that we - the students, Blacks, Hispanics, the poor, (and others concerned) made the margin of difference."

Assistant to the Chancellor, Bill Strickland, also attended the meeting. He believes transformation of the Democratic Party is key in changing the country's direction. He said, "It is not enough to get Reagan out; Reagan couldn't have done what he did without the compliance of the Democratic Party. We must transform the government - (by bringing in) new people. There's only one candidate that can bring new people into the Democratic Party. "

Strickland also said that people must not let the media confuse their understanding of the political process. "The media was confident that Mondale was unstoppable," said Strickland. "Media analysis...is often wrong and...has the purpose of confusing us."

The SJJ's primary goal at the moment is "getting people out to vote." They say that the Jackson campaign doesn't have the money or media behind it (as some candidates do). But they point to the Chicago mayoral race in which Jane Burn had $10 million for her campaign, but Harold Washington won because "the people turned it around." They say that Mondale's $13 million didn't mean anything in Vermont or New Hampshire.

One SJJ student said, "We don't have to worry about what the South will do (-they're predicting widespread support for Jackson), we want the North to make its statement.

Editorial

by Prof. Michael Thelwell
UMass/Amherst

Some six thousand students of the university will be voting - or at least are registered to do so next Thursday. Many of us will be participating in the political process for the first time. We do not agree on everything, but most of us believe with good reason that this country cannot afford another four years of Reaganite mismanagement and victimization of the poor and the young to the benefit of the rich and the selfish.

But many of us, wanting our first votes to be effective, to mean as much as possible, are not sure that our single vote can make any difference. Beset and beleagured by the claims of the different candidates, some of us are genuinely confused. How do we choose between the candidates? How can we make our single vote mean something significant? This is an important question because EVERY VOTE IS NOT EQUAL. YOUR VOTE CAN MEAN A LOT, OR IT CAN MEAN NEXT TO NOTHING.

It is perhaps this real doubt that a vote can make a difference that kept one-half of the eligible American voters away from the polls in 1980. Ronald Reagan was elected by 27 percent of the eligible voters. Twenty-three percent voted for Carter and 50 percent did not vote.

Of that 50 percent, 17 million were young people of student age. Another 15 percent were ethnic minorities, mainly Blacks and Hispanics. All of them poor.

Reagan's strategy is simple. He can rape the economy, ransom our futures to astromomical deficits, to an expanding cold war, revive the draft, ravish the environment, and starve the poor because, the young, the poor and the racially excluded do not vote.

His expectation is that these groups can be victimized because we have given him no reason to respect us.

WE CAN CHANGE ALL THAT

How do we do this? First of all by voting. But voting is not enough, it is only a beginning. We must also vote intelligently. We must vote effectively.

There is only one candidate in the race that is speaking strongly, clearly and courageously to the undemocratic nature of the political system in this country. One candidate tells us: YOU HAVE THE POWER. OUR TIME HAS COME.

One candidate seeks to change for all time the nature of politics in this nation. One candidate has the vision and the courage to challenge the system that has kept us separate and powerless. One candidate gives us a good reason to vote and hope of success. ONE CANDIDATE REPRESENTS NOT THE TIRED, DISCREDITED OLD POLITICS OF OLD MEN BUT THE POSSIBILITY OF A NEW BEGINNING, A NEW MOVEMENT A NEW FORCE, A NEW MORALITY, A NEW VISION, A NEW ALLIANCE. THE RAINBOW COALITION CAN BE A NEW AND VITAL FORCE IN THE POLITICAL LIFE OF THIS COUNTRY.

Your single vote can have power. It can help bring a new movement into being. Your vote can help deepen and strengthen the democratic processes of this country. A vote for the Rev. Jesse Louis Jackson on Tuesday, is worth ten votes in November.

This is the most exciting political possibility in this nation since women were given the right to vote. YOU CAN HELP DEFINE THE FUTURE. YOUR VOTE CAN BE POWERFUL. JOIN THE COALITION OF THE FUTURE. STRENGTHEN THE RAINBOW. Your first vote can be the most important vote you will ever cast.

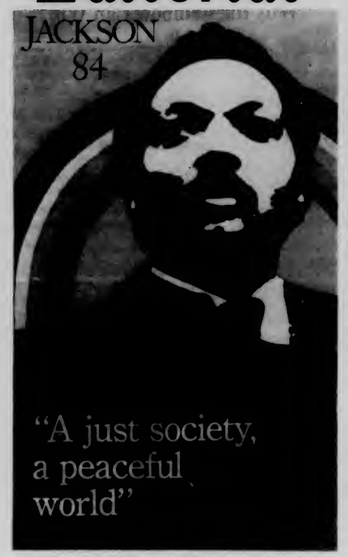
by Prof. Phil Green
Smith College

I should perhaps begin this appeal to NATION readers by saying, "As a Hymie myself..."

There are two salient aspects fo the 1984 election. First, it is absolutely necessary to defeat Ronald Reagan, for reasons too numerous, too awful, and too obvious to bear rehearsing here. Second, for the first time in half a century there is a transforming political movement on the American electoral landscape: a movement that promises to reshape our politics by bringing into play the needs and wishes and interests of millions of voters and potential voters who heretofore have felt, whether or not they participated in politics, that their deepest political desires would always be frustrated or simply ignored.

That movement is the Rainbow Coalition. Its presidential candidate and its most inspirational leader is Jesse Jackson. But at this moment, both the immediate program of retiring Ronald Reagan, and the longer run hope for fundamental political change, are profoundly endangered by events of the past few weeks. The prospect before us is one that all progressives must think about very carefully, as we contemplate our responses to the unmistakable derailment of Jesse Jackson's campaign for the Presidency.



The worst that can happen is very often what does happen, and in this case the worst is particularly grim to comtemplate. If Jackson's campaign continues to falter, and enthusiasm is finally replaced by a sense of loss and betrayal, then it will not be only Jesse Jackson who has suffered. It is quite possible that at that point significant numbers of people in the revitalized Black community - the Rainbow Coalition's most potent contribution to the Democratic Party -will conclude that regardless of how or why, the first time a Black person became a serious presidential candidate "they" (the white media, Jews, white Leftists) turned on him or deserted him in the crunch, and made certain that his campaign would be a failure.

There follows in this scenario an all-too plausible conclusion, in which Black voters sit on their hands (compared to the expectations Jackson has raised) rather than jamming the polls in November: an outcome that would mean a disastrous defeat for any Democratic candidate. At the very least, regardless of this election's outcome, if white liberals switch decisively to McGovern or Hart, leaving Jackson with only a Black base for his candidacy, then the possibility of a viable rainbow coalition will be foreclosed for at least another generation; we will continue to alternate between conservative destructiveness and liberal stasis.

Of course the most likely winners of the Democratic nomination are far preferable to Ronald Reagan. But even Gary Hart, with all his talk of the Party of the Future, is only an intelligent liberal who has adapted himself to the conservative agenda. Any such presidency could only be a stopgap.

The facts, after all, are simple. Since the death of FDR, the Democratic Party has won a majority of the popular vote in only two of nine presidential elections, only once handsomely (and the second win was by a man we would once have thought of as a rather decent liberal Republican).

Editorial

Nowhere in the Democratic Party today is there any candidate other than Jesse Jackson who gives the faintest hope of permanently reversing the fortunes of the Party, or liberalism, or of anything to the Left of that.

As for George McGovern, the most obvious alternative for progressives, he is certainly a decent man who is "right" on most of the issues. But issues are only secondarily what politics is about, especially in a time of crisis. Primarily politics, as Ronald Reagan has well understood, is about consciousness and action: how we change the one by engaging in the other.

A vote for McGovern is a vote neither for mobilizing action, nor for a change in consciousness. It is a vote for nostalgia; a confirmation that for many Americans on the Left, true happiness can only be attained by losing.

Jesse Jackson's campaign, contrarily, is not about adopting other people's agenda, or being right, or losing honorably. He alone among the candidates is trying to mobilize the unmobilized to change their lives. The votes he gets are not "thrown away" in the conventional sense by which we apply that phrase to voting for also-rans. They are expressions of determination and hope, and a clearcut signal for the future, to those excluded people who are looking for that signal.

But...as a Hymie myself, I cannot evade the obvious issue, nor should anyone. Four things, it seems to me, must be said. The first is that Jesse Jackson is not an anti-Semite. Anti-Semites intend derogation, and do not apologize for it by saying they didn't mean anything by it. Jackson has made his apology clear, and that issue ought to be settled, regardless of how much we wish he had confronted and settled it sooner. One apology per error is exactly as many as are required.

Thus we must join with him in protesting against what he rightfully calls his "hounding" by the media wolfpack. And it's worth remembering that there's only one candidate in the Democratic race who in virtually every campaign speech he makes identifies Jews as a specific element of his coalition - of the Rainbow Coalition. That candidate is Jesse Jackson.

Second, the response of certain Jewish organizations and their spokesmen to the Jackson campaign has been contemptible (and I do not speak here of the J.D.L.). It is impossible to forgive persons such as Nathan Perlmutter and Hyman Bookbinder, who have the chutzpah to tell us what Jackson's positions and statements mean to "the Jews," when thousands of us Jews find those positions and statements not only sensible but vitally in our interest as we see it.

Who elected Perlmutter and Bookbinder to speak for "Jews." Who made them the judges of what is "Good for the Jews" and "Bad for the Jews?" They have stereotyped all of us; they do that more than anyone else does it int his day and age; and thus they have become our own worst enemy.

Understanding

Third, Jesse Jackson's most serious error - and it is not yet clear that he is aware of this - is to take the Perlmutters and Bookbinders of this world at their word when they claim to speak for Jewry: and so to imitate their kind of stereotyping, identifying a "Jewish" this and a "Jewish" that when he is only talking about this person or that organization.

They do it with malice aforethought; he does it out of naivete and habit. However, though we expect no better from them, we must expect better from him. A leader takes on responsibilities, and this leader's responsibility is to learn not to make the kind of insensitive stereotyping statements that needlessly endanger the movement he leads. This is his obligation to the Rainbow Coalition.

Finally, and above all, white members of the Rainbow Coalition have an obligation too. It is an obligation of understanding, to begin with. As a Black colleague has written, "Jewish and other white supporters of Jackson's programs and goals are now in the position that Black Americans have been in for decades, i.e., forced to assess the importance of a candidate's policies while conceding the candidate's shortcomings.

Blacks have never had the choice of a white presidential candidate who stood unequivocally for Black aspirations, and who was not without some taint of racial antagonism or insensitivity. Coalitions across racial lines are burdened by three hundred years of history."

Out of this understanding we must make our commitment clear. American white progressives must now demonstrate for all to see that we are serious about social transformation: that in the pithy words of Ronald Reagan, we intend to stay the course. It could be said that that's an obligation we owe to Jesse Jackson, for coming forward when leadership was needed, to face what he knew would be an unparallelled degree of exposure, harassment, and death threats for a presidential candidate.

But that is not really the point. If we really want to change the shape of the future, this is an obligation we owe to ourselves.

Students for Jackson Statement

Anti-semitism and racism are twins; children of the same mating whose father is Hatred bred upon his concubine Ignorance. They have no place in civilized societies, much less in an institution of higher learning. Those who one night paint swastikas on the door of a Jewish student will on the next night burn a cross at the door of a Black.

We strongly support Chancellor Duffy's unequivocal and immediate response to the three recent acts of anti-semitism here. We agree that the perpetrators, when and if they are found, be at least expelled if they cannot be jailed. The community will be a healthier place.

Some of us are Jewish, some Black, others Caucasian. We all with a single voice deplore and condemn this mindless, vicious and hurtful behavior.

Editor's Note: Nummo News, speaking for our community completely supports the above statement.

In "takin a solo/a poetic possibility/a poetic imperative," Ntozake Shange points out that we, as a people do not demand the "singularity" - personal style, uniqueness, from our writers that we expect from our musicians. She says, "we cd all sound the same. come from the same region. be the same gender. born the same year. & though none of the above is true, a black writer can get away with/ab scond & covet for him or herself/the richness of his or her person/long before a black musican or singer cd."

She continued "...that means ther is absolutely no acceptance of blk personal reality....as a people we have so claimed 'the word'/we dont even pay attention to who is speakin...."

Ntozake Shange's point, though wonderfully made, is not mine. I feel that the reality she discusses is fading, and a sadder one is replacing it.

Shange says, "if i asked: is this james brown or clifford jordan? you wd know. if i said: is this fletcher henderson's band or the black byrds? you wd know..../pick one, ayler or coltrane....charlie parker or ben webster. most of you wd know....you never doubt bessie smith's voice....we wd all know/..."

My point is "no," we no longer know. If she was disappointed by the monolithic treatment afforded our writers, imagine how she would feel to learn that we do not know Ayler from Coltrane, or Parker from Webster; and some of us only know James Brown from Clifford Jordan because we wouldn't know Clifford Jordan from himself.

And if someone says Bessie Smith, we automatically say "Blues" or "Jazz," without even recognizing the sound of her voice.

Our history and culture is becoming monolithic to us, because we are not marking it. We allow others to judge it, describe it and define it; while we wander down many obscure paths searching for some elusive formula for success; that couldn't possibly have anything to do with our past, or present selves.

We are losing something very precious and when they redefine it, we will be able to feel the injustice, but not explain it.

On the last televised music awards show (-I think it was the Grammys,) they redefined gospel music. They had one category called "Gospel," in which primarily white performers competed, singing gospel more sedately than in its original form. And then a category entitled, "Soul Gospel" for primarily Black performers who sang gospel in its traditional form.

Gospel music is a Black art form. What they have done, or are trying to do - is fundamentally redefine gospel music and its origins - by calling and using a derivative of the original gospel sound as the base or fundamental premise; while calling the traditional, original music a derivative.

Thus the focus and original meaning - the initial thrust of the music is lost. And another great art form or achievement is attributed to false authors, while the real innovators, creators - owners, are robbed.

That is why it is so important to have an Annual Black Musicians Conference, and Black Classical (Jazz) programming on WMUA. We should also have an Annual Black Writers Conference (at UMass), a Black Dance Conference for the area, and a Black Artists Conference. We should also have programs and conferences for the artistic expression of other Third World and ethnic groups.

UMass and the Pioneer Valley are better than most schools and areas in their presentation of many diverse cultural programs. But having all these conferences, concerts and classes is ineffective if we do not attend, encourage and support them.

We as a community at UMass have many resources we are not fully utilizing; we tend to leave the burden of running our organizations and putting on such programs to a few. The more people involved in organizations and programs, the less work and time depletion for everyone; (and the better qualityof what is produced).

Colleges are institutions of learning and while academics is the focal point of the college career, there are many more facets involved in true education and knowledge. Even if people do not have the time or energy to participate in organizations and the planning of the events, students should feel it their duty, as well as a pleasure to support these programs.

What is not used is taken away; and that much harder to reclaim!

TV Bound

by Segun Eubanks
Nummo Reporter

The Black Mass Communications Project, which for years has offered the valley music and education over WMUA radio, has begun a video and television project called the BMCP-TV production network. Director Raymond H. Giles, said the project was developed to do video promotional production for Third World organizations in the area.

Giles stated that the production network has been under consideration for two years, but the actual planning and development of the project began this semester. The network will be operated by a production crew of producers, directors, actors, and writers that Giles is in the process of coordinating.

If the network is to be successful, the production crew must "work with a team concept," said Giles. "We must work closely together to produce quality programs that will benefit our organizations." The crew is being trained by the Union Video Center, and Giles added that there are still positions available for Third World students interested in becoming involved with the network.

"Television is the most important medium of our time," said Giles. It is imperative that Third World students, especially those majoring in Communications, learn about television production on a first hand basis. "Although radio has proven very valuable, TV has a much higher potential for expansion," said Giles.

BMCP-TV is working with UVC to produce programs that will be aired on Student Union and Campus Center television. The network is also currently negotiating with area cable companies to develop programs to be aired on cable stations. Giles says that working with cable can help the network develop programs of professional quality.

The network is considering programming of news/documentaries, campus-wide events, theatrical productions and possibly national events. If everything goes according to schedule, programming should begin in mid-November, with the first production to be a documentary on the Augusta Savage Memorial Art Gallery in New Africa House.

Giles thanks CCEBMS for helping to plan the production network. For more information and crew applications, contact Raymond Giles at the BMCP office, SUB 402, 5-2426

African Students Association

The statement of purpose reads: to create, foster and cement closer relationships among African students on campus; to encourage them to study the fundamental problems facing the African countries and to suggest solutions for these problems; to disseminate true and adequate information about the African people, their history, culture, traditions, problems and aspirations; to foster and cement greater understanding and cooperation with the American people in general and the University community in particular.

These goals are noble for a newly formed non-budgeted organization. With zeal and determination, though, the African Students Association (ASA) strives to offer what educational and cultural events it can.

While "this all depends on money," Mulu Geta, President of the ASA reaffirms existing members' committment "to make the organization real strong, to disseminate true (African) culture, drive and determination and their struggle" within the college community.

The ASA is a Five-College organization with a present membership of 65 Africans who study and live in the area. It extends associate membership to Afro-American students as well, and feels a duty to create closer ties to address U.S. "ignorance of the African continent, to deconstruct the kind of thinking" that defines African and other Third World peoples as inherently backward, not taking into consideration centuries of economic and cultural exploitation.

Because the ASA did not form until the Spring of 1983, it missed the 1983-4 SGA budget deadline. For the next year the organization will have to approach scheduling of events "program by program." The ASA asks for help from other organizations to cosponsor or to grant monies for such propsed events as a panel discussion on the crisis in the Horn of Africa and an African UN representative's visit.

Geta acknowledges not only the many limits facing the organization, but members' perseverance as well, saying, "Of course, we're used to that; Africans are trained by the best professor-that's poverty."

The ASA thanks the Afro-Am Department for supplying an office, 423 New Africa House, and extends an invitation to any and all interested students to call 5-0210 or to stop by for information.

An Anniversary and an Objective

by Danette Wilson
Nummo Staff

This year, the Asian American Student Association (AASA) celebrates its tenth anniversary, since its conception in 1974. "Its main objective is to unite all Asian American students on this campus." "It's purpose is to help all members achieve a better understanding of their culture." AASA has also influenced some students to join the Senate.

The co-chairpersons are Michael Wong and Carolyn Lee. The organization was formed by some of the UMass faculty, who were first students. There are about 30 active members. At the first meeting there were about 90 students who attended;there is a lot of student impact which is hidden because many of the students are shy and this is a large institution.

Co-chairperson, Michael Wong, feels that "If students want to become American citizens, they should be aware and know about the country and the politics of the country." Letters are sent to the SGA to make them aware of the accomplishments of the organization.

There is close contact with the Asian faculty, because of the need for their suport. Many people have helped the organizaton along, like Judy Toyama and Jeffrey Mar among others.

In commemoration of this special year the AASA are sponsoring a series of events: (See Announcement Pages for more details.)

FOR AN END TO REAGANISM BUILD THE RAINBOW COALITION
VOTE FOR JACKSON
GIVE THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY A CHANCE

We support Reverend Jesse Jackson as the Democratic Party candidate for the President of the United States because the great danger facing the American people in this election year is the continuation of the policies Ronald Reagan has so deftly foisted upon this nation, with the begrudging but "bipartisan consensus" of Republicans and Democrats. Following the pollsters instead of risking leadership, too many Democrats have played tame puppy to the Reagan wolfhound.

THE ONLY WAY TO STOP RONALD REAGAN AND HIS DISASTROUS POLICIES IS THROUGH A REVITALIZED DEMOCRATIC PARTY. NO DEMOCRAT OTHER THAN JESSE JACKSON IS INSPIRING A MOVEMENT OF AMERICANS WHO HAVE GIVEN UP ON OR NEVER BEFORE BEEN INVOLVED IN THE POLITICAL PROCESS. THESE ARE THE PEOPLE OF THE RAINBOW — BLACK, WHITE, BROWN, RED, AND YELLOW–WHO REPRESENT THE FOUNDATION FOR REAL CHANGE IN THE PARTY AND THE COUNTRY. ONLY THE RAINBOW COALITION CAN REDRAW THE POLITICAL LANDSCAPE AND GIVE PEACE AND JUSTICE A CHANCE.

A vote for Jackson is a vote for a domestic policy committed to basic economic security, fundamental democracy, and equal protection under the law for all Americans. A vote for Jackson is a vote for a foreign policy based on mutual respect, reciprocity, negotiating, and the measuring of human rights by one yardstick. A vote for Jackson is a vote for a new empowerment of women of women, Blacks, Hispanics, and all those desirous of and striving for a new Democratic Party and a new future for America.

Instead of a vote for Gary Hart, which is a vote for ambition masquerading as a new vision; or a vote for Walter Mondale, which is a vote for the erstwhile front-runner; or a vote for George McGovern, whose perspective is so close to Reverend Jackson's, but who will no longer be a candidate on March 14.

VOTE FOR THE FUTURE
VOTE FOR CHANGE
VOTE FOR JESSE JACKSON

These are Jesse Jackson's positions on the central issues:

PEACE AND DISARMAMENT

Peace — "As President one of my first acts would be to launch an unprecedented and aggressive peace campaign to put a halt to the nuclear arms race and establish a speedy but rational process for arms reductions. I would never endanger this nation's security, but we must be willing to take some risks for peace."

MX, Other Weapons — "I oppose the MX missile, the B-1 Bomber, the Neutron Bomb and deployment of the Pershing and Cruise missiles in Western Europe."

DOMESTIC POLICY

THE ECONOMY

Full Employment — "There is no more pressing domestic issue than to put America back to work!" I would enact a new, full employment policy and program to assure a productive job for everyone willing and able to work."

Budget Deficits — "To eliminate the deficit I would increase taxes for corporations and wealthy individuals, reduce unemployment and reform farm policy. I support the elimination of the massive waste, fraud and abuse in the military, and a cut in military spending."

Reindustrialize and Rebuild America's Cities — "President Reagan gave the corporations and the rich most of the $750 billion, three-year tax break. Rather than reindustrialize, re-educate and retrain workers they used the money to engage in record mergers, replace workers with machines and ship American jobs to cheap labor markets abroad. I would tie tax breaks to reindustrializing America and rebuilding America's cities."

WOMEN

Equal Rights Amendment — "Without passage of ERA over half of our nation's population is denied equal protection under the law. Additionally, seventy percent of all poor children live in a household headed by a woman. Thus, if women are left unprotected they cannot protect their families. And, if the American family cannot be protected, our children cannot be protected."

Economic Equity Act — The federal government should establish strong criteria to assure equal pay for jobs of comparable value. I would support all legislation designed to achieve that end. In addition, I believe the Justice Department should be creative and intervene by filing Amicus Curiae briefs on behalf of women to force government and the private sector to equalize pay for women.

Reproductive Rights — "I support the right of a free choice relative to abortion. I am opposed to the Hyde Amendment because it denies equal protection under the law to poor people. I oppose a Constitutional Amendment outlawing abortion because one's personal or private religious or moral views should not be imposed on public policy."

JESSE JACKSON for PRESIDENT

PEACE

JUSTICE

Massachusetts Democratic Primary
MARCH 13, 1984

ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT

Energy — "Nuclear energy is too costly and too dangerous. It is not a question of whether we will switch to the safer and more economical forms of renewable energy, but how quickly and how orderly we will make the transition."

Environment — "Corporations can no longer be allowed to poison the earth, contaminate the water and pollute the air at cost of life. If another nation would do that they would call it chemical warfare, and it would be disallowed."

FOREIGN POLICY

EL SALVADOR
"We must stand with the church and the poor of El Salvador in their fight for justice rather than the oppression of the landed gentry. American economic and military aid to El Salvador must be linked to improvements in its human rights record."

NICARAGUA
"America should not be trampling on its ideals and democratic principles by covertly attempting to overthrow the Nicaragua Government. A just settlement can be negotiated in Nicaragua with creative and courageous leadership on all sides."

MIDDLE EAST
"Israel must be allowed to exist within secure and internationally recognized borders. The Palestinians must have the right to self-determination or a homeland. The sovreignity of Lebanon must be respected and Lebanon must not be partitioned. We must have normalized ties with the Arab world — our interests are too many and our friends are too few — and we must talk to the PLO. America must use its diplomatic, economic and military might to reconcile the warring factions — just like President Carter at Camp David reconciled Egypt and Israel."

SOUTH AFRICA
"We cannot define democracy as majority rule in North America, and then define democracy as minority rule in South Africa. We cannot maintain our moral authority if we impose economic sanctions against Poland when that country suppresses a 'Solidarity' labor movement and imposes martial law, but then become the number one trading partner with South Africa when it crushes a solidarity labor movement, imposes martial law and denies Blacks basic human rights and dignity."

GRENADA
"Vietnam was popular for a while, but it was wrong. Nixon was popular for a while, but he was wrong. The invasion and occupation of little Grenada may have been politically popular, but it was wrong."

Campaigns prepare last minute push

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts campaign workers for the five Democratic presidential hopefuls said yesterday that issues, not personalities, are coming to the forefront as voters in 13 states prepare to make pivotal decisions in today's "Super Tuesday" primary elections.
Former South Dakota Sen. George McGovern was the only candidate who campaigned in Massachusetts yesterday, rallying support in both Boston and Springfield while Gary Hart, Walter Mondale, Rev. Jesse Jackson and John Glenn campaigned in the South.
Springfield Hart campaign worker Dan Calegari said that issues are becoming more important because of his man. "Gary Hart is the only candidate who has stuck to pushing the issues. He's the only candidate with a chance to defeat Reagan in November," Calegari said. "Mondale said he had a chance, but that's a big lie. Reagan is our opponent now."
Mondale supporters at the University of Massachusetts said the momentum Hart gained when he won the important New Hampshire primary is fading.
"The popularity Hart enjoyed after New Hampshire is leveling off," said Mondale supporter Margret Maxwell. "We're not happy about the polls (that show Hart leading by 20 percent), but they don't elect the candidates, people do, and from what we've seen, a lot of them are undecided.
"People today have come up to our table, talked about the issues and read our literature. When people know what Mondale stands for, he'll get the votes," said Maxwell.
Mike Nauls, a UMass student for Jesse Jackson, said that his table was also flooded with questions about Jackson the candidate they support.
"People are making the decision on who to vote for soon and now they're getting information to make a good decision," said Nauls. "Those undecided people will make or break this election. We're confident."
The McGovern headquarters in Northampton was empty except for worker Jessica Smith, (everybody else was at the rally in Springfield), but she said that the 1972 Democratic presidential candidate will do well in the Bay state.
"We're really coming together now," said Smith. "He (McGovern) is in the state campaigning and that will help a lot. The polls are off, he's still in the race and will do well here."
All of the workers for the respective candidates said they would spend much of today phoning voters, offering rides to the polls, greeting voters at polling places, handing out leaflets and talking up their man to potential voters before setting in front of the television tonight to watch the results.
Nauls expressed the sentiment of most of the campaign workers saying, "A lot of states will be voting, it's Super Tuesday and all, but if my candidate does well in Massachusetts I'll feel all the time and effort has been worth it. It's just tough waiting to see what happens."

Referenda on SGA ballot

By LISA MARIE CANTWELL
Collegian Staff

Students voting for the next Student Government Association (SGA) President today, will also have the chance to respond to three referendum questions, including an idea to change the Minuteman mascot, input on the bus schedules, and student government adequacy.
A group of students last semester brought the idea to change the mascot, input on the bus schedules, and student government adequacy.
A group of students last semester brought the idea to change the mascot to the SGA because they found that it was militaristic and sexist, said Scott Stern, assistant to the speaker. At this point in time, there are no formal suggestions on what to change the symbol to.
The bus referendum asks voters if the schedules should be altered to provide better service, by either rearranging existing runs, or increasing fees and service. "It is to get some ideas," said Stern. "But the survey does not mean changes will definitely be made."
The third question, which asks students if they feel adequately represented by the SGA, was debated at the meeting of the Undergraduate Student Senate last Wednesday. Some student senators said this particular question had negative implications making it harder for new students participating in the SGA. Others said the question shows concern.
All of the referenda are advisory rather than binding, and the results are considered and voted on in the senate. In binding referendum voting results according to the constitution, would be carried out.
Commuter area and Greek area students can vote in front of the Hatch in the Student Union today, between 9:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. Residential area students can vote between 11:15 a.m. and 6:30 p.m. at the following locations — Orchard Hill and Central Area residents- Franklin Dining Commons; Northeast and Sylvan Area residents - Worcester D.C.; Cance, Moore, Pierpont, Washington, John Adams, John Quincy Adams, Patterson and MacKimmie Southwest Area residents - Berkshire D.C.; Melville, Emerson, Thoreau, James, Crampton, Coolidge and Kennedy residents - Hampshire D.C.

Regents to discuss tuition hike

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Board of Regents of Higher Education will debate and vote on a proposal to regulate tuition increases at state schools today at their monthly meeting in Boston.
Estelle Shanley, spokesperson for the regents, said the tuition proposal, which has been recommended by the board's committee, will be the main item for discussion by the board.
"The legislation that created the Board of Regents mandates that they come up with some kind of blueprint to regulate tuition policies in the future," Shanley said.
"The vote is by no means a decision to raise tuition. That decision will come once these guidelines are set down."
The proposal, Shanley said, will eventually lead into debate over raising the cost of tuition at state schools including the University of Massachusetts.
Fran Pheeney, chair of the Student Government Association's Public Policy committee, will testify against the tuition proposal at the 2:00 p.m. meeting in Boston.
"The proposal has many faults," Pheeny said yesterday. "The access for the economically disadvantaged is limited and it has a provision to raise tuition 15 percent a year. I will lobby against it."
At the meeting last month, the regents continued discussion on a proposal to equate the percentage of actual tuition costs students pay at the various public colleges and universities across the state. Chancellor of Higher Education John Duff said then that schools could face a potential 12 to 15 percent overall increase.
Meanshile, four of the five college area schools have announced tuition hikes for next year. Hampshire College's yearly tuition will rise to $12,960 next fall, Mount Holyoke raised its tuition 6.4 percent to $12,450, Amherst College went up six percent to $12,400, and the trustees at Smith College decided on a 7.7 percent increase from $11,830 to $12,740 to attend their private school.
Gov. Michael S. Dukakis made news of his own concerning the regents when he recently swore in the first of the at least six new members of the board.
Betty Rawlings, a former board member who was not reappointed by the Gov. Edward J. King when her term expired in 1982, is the first of the Dukakis appointees.
Rawlings, a Smith College professor of education and a doctoral candidate at UMass, will be the only black on the Board and joins Sr. Janet Eisner as the only women on the panel.
Dukakis is expected to appoint two other women, Sr. Kathleen Harrington of Fall River and Mary Lou Anderson of Worcester to replace two executives of high-tech firms, Ray Stata, president of Analog Devices, and David Beaubien, vice-president of EG and G Inc.
The terms of three other regents, John Fox, Fr. Francis Nicholson and An Wang, president of Wang Laboratories, expire next August.

Candidates gear up for Super Tuesday showdown

McGovern to voters: 'look into hearts' today

BOSTON — George McGovern, hoping to duplicate his 1972 success in Massachusetts, urged a large and enthusiastic noontime rally yesterday to vote with their conscience in today's Democratic presidential primary.

"What I seek to do is to commit the wastes of war to the works of peace," McGovern told about 1,000 supporters in chilly sunshine. "I call on you today to look into your hearts, look into your consciences."

The former South Dakota senator, accompanied by folksinger Arlo Guthrie, predicted that he would finish first or second in Massachusetts, one of nine states balloting on "Super Tuesday." If he falls short of that goal, he has said he will drop out.

McGovern was the only candidate for the Democratic nomination to campaign yesterday in Massachusetts, which was the only state he carried in his landslide defeat at the hands of Richard Nixon in the 1972 general election.

His rivals — former Vice President Walter Mondale, Colorado Sen. Gary Hart, Ohio Sen. John Glenn and Jesse Jackson — spent yesterday stumping in the South.

Democrats campaign in last minute vote push

BOSTON — With polls showing Sen. Gary Hart with a clear lead going into the Massachusetts primary, strategists for the Democratic candidates concentrated yesterday on plans for winning a maximum number of convention delegates in the election.

Hart, who leads former Vice President Walter Mondale by as much as 2-to-1 in some polls, could wind up doubling his current number of national convention delegates through a big win in Massachusetts.

"This is our first chance to pick up a substantial number of delegates," said Jack Weir, statewide coordinator for Hart.

"We're working on turnout...but the key thing is the delegates that go with the votes."

Hart has won 27 convention delegates so far, not including those from Saturday's Wyoming caucuses where only preliminary figures were available.

Mondale, who has 148 delegates, also hopes to add some of the 100 Massachusetts delegates up for grabs today to his total, campaign aides said.

Prosecution rests case in rape trial

FALL RIVER, — The prosecution rested its case yesterday against two of six men charged in a barroom gang rape after a policewoman testified she interviewed a hysterical rape victim who "couldn't believe what had happened to her."

"She was hysterical and in a state of shock," said Detective Sandra Grace, who interviewed a 22-year-old woman just hours after she said she was raped.

"I got the impression that she couldn't believe what had happened to her," Grace said.

Grace was among 20 witnesses called by prosecutors in the case against Daniel Silvia, 27, and Joseph Vierira, 28, who are charged in the March 6, 1983, gang rape of a woman in a New Bedford bar.

Meanwhile, a police officer testified in a seperate morning session that two defendants admitted they held a screaming woman on a pool table while she was raped.

Detective Kenneth Gormley testifying in the morning trial of four men, said the admission came from defendants John Cordeiro and Victor Raposo the day after the incident at Big Dan's Tavern.

Gormley said a contrite Cordeiro came to the police station with John Machado, the owner of the bar, to talk with police.

"He told us that he wanted to tell us what he did," Gormley said. "He said he was sorry. He said he was drunk, but that was no excuse for what he had done."

Dissident discusses Soviet Union

Urges increase in Soviet study

By DAVID LINTON
Collegian Staff

The American people must increase levels of study of the Soviet Union in order to achieve consensus and consistency in foreign policy, a Soviet dissident said last night in the Campus Center at the University of Massachusetts.

Yuri Tuvim, a former Soviet research scientist who emigrated to the United States in 1976, told a standing room only audience of about 100 people that he was surprised at the amount of ignorance the American public had of the Soviet Union.

"What we must do is study the Soviet system. Then we can make the right decisions," Tuvim said."Democracies cannot conduct foreign policy without the consensus of its people."

Using a drawing of a pyramid to show his explanation of the Soviet system, Tuvim said, "This is a concentration camp ruled by a mafia — by criminals. They are not communists, they are not socialists, they are gangsters."

While a student in school in the Soviet Union, Tuvim said he studied in a room with one dim, yellow light bulb and thought he was lucky because he believed that there was a student like him in the United States who was being exploited by capitalists.

"I was a committed communist," he said. "I was an idealist and now I am a dissident, an enemy of the people."

Tuvim who is now an American citizen said applying for emigration in the Soviet Union "is like Russian roulette. You don't know what is going to happen to you. It is like jumping off a cliff."

Because he had relatives abroad, Tuvim said he was lucky to be able to emigrate because to stop him from leaving the Soviet Union would have brought more publicity to his cause.

The difference between democracy and totalitarianism, he said, was personal freedom. He said the Soviet people are slaves who are not productive because they have no personal freedom. The Soviet system is filled with a lot of tension and is "explosive", Tuvim said.

"Our system of freedom threatens the Soviet Union just by our existence," he said.

The Soviet rulers want to get rid of democratic governments, Tuvim said, but by confusing the American public with disinformation not by war.

Tuvim said supporters of the nuclear freeze movement are doing what the Soviet leaders want. He said both appeasement with the Soviet Union and a military build-up are extreme solutions to relations between the two countries.

"Shear armaments should be substituted but we have no substitution," he said.

The lecture was sponsored by the University of Massachusetts Republican Club.

School prayer and its effects

By NANCY A. BUKAR
Collegian Correspondent

A proposed constitutional amendment to allow a moment of prayer in public schools is currently being debated in Congress and, if passed, its effects will be felt by everyone in and out of public schools, accordihg to two University of Massachusetts professors.

Dean Alfange, professor of political science, said the passing of the prayer amendment would "provide for a major breach in Thomas Jefferson's doctrine of a separation between church and state, where Jefferson advocated a distinct separation between state involvement in the church."

Alfange also said the passage of the amendment would be a guarantee for the majority to "dictate their religious views on children." The amendment would be "an unfortunate thing," he said.

Sheldon Goldman, also a professor in the political science department, said he believes the main quesiton is the amendment's effect on the people of minority religious views.

"There is a potential for disruption with a dominant religion imposing their views on minority religions," he said.

Goldman cited three aspects to be considered if the amendment passes.

First, there would be a change in the relationship between church and state and a weakening of First Amendment guarantees. Secondly, "Supreme Court civil liberties decisions will be up for grabs," he said.

Thirdly, Goldman said he believes the amendment would be a bad precedent because a constitutional amendment would overturn the previous Supreme Court ruling of Abington versus Schempp (1973). The Abington ruling established that prayer in public schools was unconstitutional, and the passage of an amendment that overrules a Supreme Court decision could have a serious effect on the government, Goldman said.

Goldman also said that school children of minority religions could feel persecuted if the proposed amendment passed. He gave the example of Roman Catholics living in the Bible Belt, where he said, "the public schools would become religious schools. It's going to make life uncomfortable for those who are in the minority religion."

The founding fathers of the Constitution did not believe in state involvement in religious affairs. "They saw great harm in this—it's a violation of a principle," said Goldman.

Police report jewel heist

By BOB BURGESS
Collegian Staff

A jewelry store in the Amherst Carriage Shops was robbed of an undisclosed amount of gold and diamonds after it was entered Friday night through a hole made in an adjacent store wall, Amherst Police said yesterday.

Police said the break-in at Henry Polissack Antique Jewelry store was discovered about 10 a.m. Saturday after an employee of the business next door noticed a hole in that store's bathroom. The employee first became suspicious when she found the entrance's key cylinder had been removed and put back in place, and that $250 cash was missing from a desk drawer, police said.

According to police, the owners of the jewelry store were then notified. Police said the owners have not yet assessed their losses.

Police are investigating the robbery, which occurred after 6 p.m. Friday, and called it "a professional job."

In other weekend action, Amherst police reported three arrests and seven accidents, one involving the injury of a three-and-a-half-month-old boy.

Police said the infant was taken to Amherst Medical Associates Friday night after the car he was in, driven by a 26-year-old Northampton woman, struck the back of another vehicle on the corner of North Pleasant and Fearing streets. He was later transferred to Cooley Dickinson Hospital with head injuries. Police said no citations were issued.

A 14-year-old boy sustained head injuries and facial lacerations Saturday afternoon when a car operated by a 22-year-old New York City woman collided with his bicycle on South Pleasant Street, police said.

A Community Service officer observed "suspicious activity in a motor vehicle" Friday night about 10:40 p.m. in the Lincoln lot, and when regular officers arrived, a mirror and some white powder were found. Police said the person possessing these items was not arrested, but will be asked to report to police after they "analyze the contents."

Police also answered a call of a disorderly person Sunday at Hampshire College, and later arrested a 25-year-old Bay Road man on a motor vehicle warrant issued by Leominster State Police.

Students 'sea' the world

By RISA FREEMAN
Collegian Staff

Most students at the University of Massachusetts spend a typical day taking notes in classrooms, socializing in the Hatch or studying in the library.

But six UMass students spent last semester studying and traveling around the world on an 18,000 ton ocean liner.

Every semester, the University of Pittsburg sponsors a 100-day around-the-world voyage called Semester at Sea, where students earn from 12 to 15 credits learning about various aspects of the countries they visit.

"It was the best 100 days I ever had," said 22 year-old Mitchell Sack, a senior economics major from Leonia, New Jersey.

Sack said he had been at UMass for three years and did not want to spend his whole senior year in Amherst. He said he had the opportunity to go around the world and would not get to do it again.

"Seeing the pyramids in Egypt was probably the most exciting part of the trip," Sack said. "We watched the sunrise over Cairo while standing on the big pyramid."

Another highlight of the trip, Sack said, was walking along the Great Wall of China.

While on board the ship, Sack took courses in economic development, modern diplomacy, politics and government in the Middle East and current events.

"I learned more in these courses than here (at UMass) because you talk about something in class then you actually go see it," he said.

I learned to appreciate living in the U.S. by seeing how other people live."

Another UMass student, 21-year-old Carl Ingersol, a sophomore Russian and Chinese major from Cambridge, said he went on the trip to get away from UMass and "become wizened and experienced." Ingersol found the pyramids "really amazing." "It was the first wonder of the world I've ever seen," he said.

After traveling to ports in the Middle East, China and India, they arrived in their last port of Morocco. The students were given a video-tape of the television movie, " The Day After" which someone in the U.S. mailed to them Ingersol said.

"It was really scary," Ingersol said. "When we saw it we were in the middle of the Atlantic Ocean with nothing in sight to reassure us that the movie wasn't true. The ship did have a nuclear response planned for a nuclear war, however," he added.

"We were free to allow and make things happen and therefore, we appreciated every experience," Ingersol said. "The world is what you make it."

DVP to present Jeremy Rifkin

Social scientist and author Jeremy Rifkin will speak on "The Age of Transition" tonight at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom, in a lecture sponsored by the University of Massachusetts Distinguished Visitors Program.

Rifkin has written seven books in the past five years, dealing with associated economic, political, cultural, philosophical, and theological issues. One of his better known works is the book Who Should Play God?, which questions the various impacts that genetic engineering may have on society.

A Chicago native, Rifkin has appeared on several nationwide television shows, and lectures at colleges and communities across the country. Rifkin has also served as an advisor to congressional committees and various labor and mangement organizations.

An Interfaith Statement of Support for Reverend Jesse Jackson

FOR JUSTICE

FOR PEACE

We support Jesse Jackson because of WHAT he stands for alone among the candidates; Peace in the Mideast; An end to US military involvement in Central America; A halt to the arms race and a massive reduction in military expenditures; Equal rights for all citizens regardless of race, creed, gender or sexual orientation; And the restoration of social programs designed to end the shameful conditions of poverty in America and to create jobs for all.

We support Jesse Jackson because of WHO he stands for alone among the candidates; the excluded, the dispossessed, the forgotten and ignored people of America.

For the first time in many years there is a movement in American politics that represents the unrepresented. That movement is the Rainbow Coalition. Jesse Jackson is its candidate. Join with us in the Rainbow Coalition. Vote for Jesse Jackson.

Panel discusses women

By YADIRA BETANCES
Collegian Staff

The role of women in Latin American and Caribbean countries and their struggle for liberation were the topics of a panel discussion held last Saturday as part of the International Women's Event.

Speaking on the panel were Doris Pizarro from the Sindical Laboral Institue of Education in Puerto Rico, Sonia Rivera from Circulo de Cultural Cubana and America Ugante from the Committee in solidarity with Guatemala, who has been in exile in the United States since 1982.

"Women in Guatemala have suffered for many years some kind of exploitation, oppression and discrimination and now women and men have joined and are struggling to destroy this."

"Women are strong," she said, "they want to have a free country for their children and men and women together are going to do it," she said.

Before 1959, Rivera said, Cuban women were either maids or prostitues. The first step towards their liberation was the "raising of their consciousness to teach them they were valuable human beings capable of occupying any position in the society if they were educated enough to do it," she said.

Through the founding of the Confederation of Cuban Women in 1960, women who rebelled against Batista's regime helped raise the consciousness of other women, Rivera said.

She said the confederation joined women and divided the work between the sexes.

Pizarro said Puerto Rican women are subjected to a triple exploitation—national, economic and sexual. Mentioning the fact that Puerto Rico has been a colony for 491 years, out of which 86 years have been dominated by the United States government, she said "the political situation aggravates the traditional inequality which has existed in our society."

Police report stolen Camaro

University of Massachusetts police reported that a 1975 Chevrolet Camaro was stolen from the parking lot across the street from the engineering laboratory on Governor's Drive between 3:30 p.m. and 5:30 p.m. on Friday.

According to police an assault occurred at 5:30 p.m. Friday in the New Africa House. Police said, the complainant said someone had asked to have the art gallery in the building opened. The subject failed to produce identification when asked and then punched and kneed the complainant, police said. The complainant gave a description of the suspect and was taken to University Health Services, police said.

A 20-year-old Cambridge man was arrested for disorderly conduct and outstanding warrants at 2:24 a.m. on Friday, police said. According to police two men were discovered in the basement of Pierpont Dormitory and failed to produce identification at the security desk. The police said they escorted them to their car in order to get some identification. In the police cruiser the two subjects became uncooperative and then struck the officer and a struggle followed, police said. The second subject ran from the scene and was not been arrested, police said.

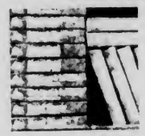
Accusations fly in SGA election

On the first day of Student Government Association voting, two candidacies charged each other with campaign violations, but no formal charges have been filed.

Three University of Massachusetts students, including a worker for the Tim Rudolph/Donna Dooley campaign, said they made a video tape Sunday night of SGA presidential candidate Rick Patrick ripping down Rudolph/Dooley campaign posters in the MacKimmie Dormitory area.

In response to those charges, Patrick said posters he put up in the McKimmie dormitory area early Sunday night were replaced by Rudolph/Dooley posters by Monday morning.



Rodman Snelling, campaign coordinator for the Rudolph/Dooley campaign, said he and student senators David McCarthy and Bill Collins made the video tape at 3:30 a.m. yesterday in the MacKimmie lounge in the Southwest Residential Area.

Collegian staff members who have seen the film said it shows a figure in a long dark coat running down some steps, quickly ripping down two campaign posters, and running out. The film quality is poor, and the figure's face is not visible, they said.

SGA Treasurer Eric Nitzsche also said yesterday that the Rudolph/Cooley campaign had so far spent $10 more than the $250 in campaign expense money allocated to each campaign by the SGA. Nitzsche said he was not sure if he would press charges.

Why we need a new mascot

The Minuteman has been the University mascot for more than a decade. It is an historic symbol, regionally and nationally. Its authenticity is not in question; the question is whether or not it is a good symbol in this day and age for the University of Massachusetts.

The University Peacemakers think not. After receiving numerous complaints about the brutality of the Minuteman image, the Peacemakers studied the pros and cons of the issue, and concluded the following points:

1) The Minuteman symbolizes war, which is hardly the highest human achievement. Furthermore, the historical context of Minutemen fighting to liberate the Colonies from the British through armed struggle refers to a medium for political change which is no longer viable or acceptable within the United States.

2) Nowadays, the Minuteman represents the Intercontinental Ballistic Missile, or I.C.B.M., which, along with other nuclear missiles, threaten to destroy civilization. Not exactly the most altruistic aspect of America.

3) The term Minuteman is sexist. The term Minuteman Ladies is also sexist as is Minutewomen, putting women in a subserviant role to the dominant Minuteman. It is a clear example of institutional sexism.

4) The fact that he is a white man with a gun doesn't really represent the racial mixture of America and the University.

5) Several advertisers, particularly with the military and alcoholic beverages, use this image for their own purposes, such as the R.O.T.C. frisbee with the Minuteman looking up at a bomber on it and a Budweiser poster depicting a sweaty, charging brute with blood in his eyes. This use of our mascot further exploits our school.

The University Peacemakers determined that the Minuteman does not represent the student body nor does it reflect the ideals and progress of the era in which we live. Peacemaker Libby Hubbard proposed that there be a campus-wide campaign to choose a new name, one which is elevating and not denegrating. That is why there is question about the mascot on the ballot. The Peacemakers are asking you to support the drive for a new, noble image for the University.

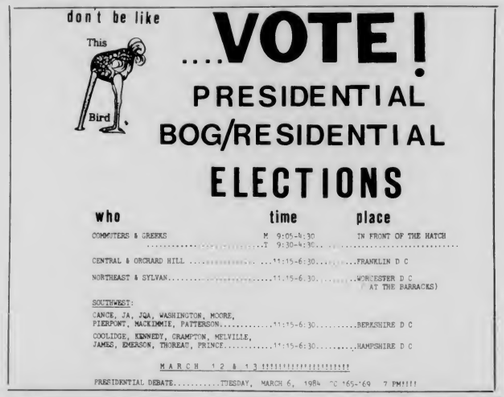
Why we must stop tuition hikes

The Board of Regents have put together a tuition policy proposal that will serve as the guideline for present and future tuition increases. A comprehensive tuition policy has been needed for some time and it is encouraging to see the Regents formulating a strategy for implementing tuition charges. Unfortunately the plan presented has major difficulties that must be ironed out before the policy can be termed fair and equitable. It is especially important that any tuition policy be wisely developed for it will have ramifications several years into the future. Problems with the present policy include, denies access to public higher education for the economically disadvantaged, a lack of stability in student costs, a shifting of the burden of the cost from the taxpayer to the students, and the danger of UMass pricing itself out of its market.

Reports from financial aid services and President Knapp's office strongly suggest that lower and lower middle income students are being denied access to public higher education. One of the primary goals of the Regents policy is "...to maximize student access to higher education regardless of a student's financial circumstances." In fiscal year 83 4,783 students, 23.7 percent of those determined to have financial need, received no financial aid whatsoever. Unmet financial need will continue to grow unless the Regents proposal delivers increased financial aid concurrent with tuition increases. Regents spokespeople refute the claim that access is being denied and cite the fact that enrollment is not dropping. Maintained high enrollment does not prove equal access, it can mean more economically privileged students are attending public higher education institutions and lower income students are being dropped out of college enrollments. Statistics on this campus reflect that trend. The average family income for dependents on this campus has risen 66 percent over the last three years, during the same period applicants with family incomes under twenty thousand dollars have dropped 22.4 percent. It is clear to these eyes that the economically disadvantaged are being squeezed out of public higher education.

A second major point of the Regents proposal is to provide stability in educational costs. This is an admirable goal but once again it is not reached. The plan calls for tuition increases of no more than 15 percent in any one year. The Regents note that this figure is a cap and does not necessarily mean a 15 percent increase will occur every year. It is difficult to believe increases will not reach this level in view of the fact that, on this campus, prior to 1983-84 when a freeze was put on tuition, tuition increases exceeded 15 percent for four consecutive years. Over a four year period tuition could rise as much as 60 percent; hardly a stable tuition fee. When a cap is established it should be less volatile than the one currently advocated.

Another disturbing aspect of the plan is the emphasis on shifting the financial burden of the cost of education from the Commonwealth to the student. The policy suggests that students should bear no more than 33 percent of the cost of their education. The Regents stress that the 33 percent figure is a ceiling and not a floor on costs, but it is interesting to note that of the four types of institutions the Board presides over none are currently having students bear more than a 29.7 percent share of the cost of education. It is not difficult to envision yearly 15 percent increases until students are bearing one third of the cost of their education. Under the Regents proposed arrangement students bear, along with increasing costs, an increasing portion of the cost of education. Not only does shifting the burden of cost undermine the philosophy of public higher education but a figure of 33 percent may not be realistic in terms of our situation.



In a survey of the National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges (NASULGC) UMass-Amherst tuition and fees were found to be higher than 90 percent of the schools within NASULGC. Furthermore. Massachusetts ranks 48th in the nation in terms of tax dollars given to public higher education per $1000 tax dollars. It would seem that Massachusetts taxpayers are not bearing a disproportionate share of the cost of public higher education.

One final problem that could occur is UMass could price itself out of its market and into a market where it could not compete. If costs continue to rise UMass could lose its share of the people attending the university due to its relatively low cost. UMass would then be forced to compete with schools like Amherst and Boston University. It would be extremely difficult for a state university to compete with schools having vastly superior resources. UMass could get caught betwixt and between with nowhere to go and eventually lose its reputation as an institution of quality education.

It is up to us, as students, to work towards a better tuition policy. The Public Policy Committee will have a table outside the Hatch to start a letter writing campaign to state senators and representatives. I ask and urge you to participate, furthermore try to involve your parents — it is our and our parents dollars and cents which are being spent — we have a right to a fair and equitible tuition policy. Letter writing campaigns do have an impact. Please stop by and see us at the table or on the fourth floor in the Student Senate office. (SUB 420). Help keep public higher education a reality and not an illusion.

SGA elections make me angry

I was going to wait until after the elections to write this, but I'm so angry I can't wait. Things have gotten way out of hand, and I'm disgusted.

The campaign for Student Government president began several weeks ago, and has degenerated ever since. It has reached the point where the issues don't matter. The only thing that matters is who can make the other side look worst. It would be great if everyone could cut the crap and do something worthwhile.

Sound like sour grapes? It's not. There have been so many outrageous campaign violations and improprieties it makes me sick. Particularly as the Editor of the editorial page, where I continuously get letters from "average students" who can easily be traced back to the campaigns, and which inevitably condemn the "other side" for every reason they can think of. And then they accuse us of partisanship (something completely different from endorsing candidates, which is a decision of the full Collegian Board of Editors).

Josh Meyer

Want some examples? How about one candidate (side A) getting caught ripping down a poster from the other campaign, at 4 in the morning. And, coincidentally enough, a lackey for Side B getting it all down on videotape. While that same other side has been systematically ripping down all of the Side A, they've been shrewd enough to have their "workers" do it for them, to avoid the embarrassment of getting caught. But the pettiness and incredible waste of energy on worthless aspects of the election process doesn't stop there. And how about Friday's paper, with the endorsement? Anyone besides me notice they were ALL GONE by Saturday morning?

How about coincidental crank phone calls to the Collegian editors in the wee hours? Or the Adolf/Doolittle campaign accusing the Killer/Ratpack of using anti-semitism (the wave) in their platform, even though Killer is Jewish? Or Gumby/Pokey trashing everyone else, when they have no intention of staying if elected? Come on. Let's get down to brass tacks, as one not so astute candidate said several times in a debate, without even specifying exactly what a brass tack is, or how it's different from other kinds of tacks. One more stupid remark and I'm going to blow lunch.

Today is the last day of elections. If you have learned anything from all this, I hope it is that you must actively seek out the best candidates and vote for them, and ignore the extraneous garbage. For me, the choice of who should win is obvious, not only on the merit of their stances on important issues, but also on the basis of their decision not to "play the game" of trashing the other candidates. But my opinion doesn't matter. Yours does.

Know before you decide

Since the Iowa caucus, the media has boosted the popularity of Gary Hart. In doing this the campaigns of George McGovern, Jesse Jackson, and John Glenn have suffered. When voting in the Massachusetts primary today, people must realize that it is not just a two way race between Walter Mondale and Gary hart, as the media has implied.

Once again it seems the media has turned the race for the Democratic presidential nomination into a popularity contest. The media's focus seems to be on Hart's youth versus Mordale's established frontrunner status. In doing this, the media has neglected to clearly present the candidates' stances on the issues.

The media seems to have a great influence in determining who people vote for. It makes one wonder: If a different candidate had received the coverage that Hart has been getting, would he be dong as well as Hart is now? Before the Iowa caucus, Hart was seen as nothing more than a "dark horse" candidate. Remember, this is not a popularity contest—the person who wins may become our next president. Gary Hart should be judged by his policies and not by his youth and resemblance to the Kennedys.

Artie Stile

Students, like the press, have a definite influence on the outcome of this nomination, but along different lines. Students, especially in Massachusetts, have great potential in all elections. If the student vote was not so potentially powerful, the Democratic candidates would not bother to start support groups on campuses. Students must realize that this nomination does concern them and their votes do make a difference. However, it is sad to say that due to student apathy, this potential power has remained just that, potential.

Those who plan on exercising their right to vote should do so with a knowledge of the candidates' records and their views. Take the time to find out where all of the candidates stand on all of the issues.

The race is far from over. The final candidate will not be chosen until July. Remember how the momentum was taken away from Walter Mondale by Gary Hart's second place finish in the Iowa caucus, leading to his success in New Hampshire, Maine, and Vermont. It is not out of the question that the momentum may once again change hands, and perhaps the Massachusetts primary may be the key turning point.

When going to the polls today, look beyond the images the media has created and make your own choice. Remember, McGovern, Jackson, and Glenn, as well as Hart and Mondale, still have a chance to win the Democratic party's presidential nomination. This is not to say that Walter Mondale and Gary Hart are not worthy candidates, but rather that all of the candidates deserve a good look. So, today make your own educated decision, do not let the media make it for you.

Of primary "importance"

To the Editor,

I am writing in response to the editorial by Rita Murphy, titled, "The primaries: Who cares?" In her article, Ms. Murphy complains of an overabundance of Presidential candidates and a lack of issues in the current primaries. It is imperative to realize that with a candidate comes his or her given platform. Maybe a candidate may have a weak or shallow platform, but a variety of candidates can only enhance a political election.

Ms. Murphy must realize that the media is the main link between candidates and the American public, and they are the ones who make or break a politician's dreams. If a voter does not trust the media's beliefs, it is up to that person to select a candidate who would best fulfill their own political desires. It is a voter's personal choice, and contrary to popular belief, Ms. Murphy, there is a choice.

There are currently 163 Independent candidates who are registered in the primaries. Included in them is Hugh Bagley of California, who has called for the annexation of Mexico as our 51st state. Or how about Rebecca Robot from Baltimore. This actual droid promises "high tech jobs for people." And we can't forget the ever so popular Richard Grayson. He has two main platforms. One is to move the Capitol to Davenport, Iowa, and the other calls for immediate nuclear warfare.

So you see Ms. Murphy, things aren't so bad after all. If you still feel apathetic with those same old boring Democratic and Republican candidates with their dull ideas, don't feel like you don't have a choice. There are 163 other candidates who would just be overjoyed to know that they were receiving your support.

Campaign is a serious one

To the Editor,

Howard Glantz's letter on March 8 referred to the Gumby/Camel campaign as being a joke and a mockery. He is missing the point of the entire campaign. Yes, the figures are cartoon characters, but the purpose of the campaign and the issues it addresses are very serious.

Tuition, campus lighting, and student empowerment are only some of the issues that have been addressed by these two candidates. If you compare their stands on the issues with some of Rudolph/Dooley's comments, such as: an escort service for women is patronizing, then I think that you will find them more well thought out and mature than most of the "serious" candidates.

It's silly to think that this campaign will stir up "ZooMass" images in "the public." Nothing that Gumby/Camel stands for implies in any way a wild, party image. UMass is known all over for its strong, innovative student political scene.

Gumby and Camel have brought issues into the campaign which would otherwise have been ignored, and they have done it with a sense of humor. It is Glantz's lack of a sense of humor, not Gumby/Camel's lack of seriousness which is the problem. We shouldn't be penalizing people for being unconventional. I too think we should be responsible and mature, but I don't think we should be stuffed-shirts and bores.

Time for something else?

To the Editor,

I started writing a letter of how the Collegian has been so even-handed and fair concerning the SGA presidential elections. I was genuinely impressed with the two page spread of the candidates in last Thursday's edition. I thought that it was good that the Collegian was presenting the facts and leaving the opinions to the voters. I was going to turn the letter in on Friday afternoon, then I opened up Friday's edition and my stomach started turning.

The Collegian presidential endorsement is quite inappropriate. Maybe it's time for another, more unbiased newspaper on campus.

Randy Perlmutter

Gumby/Camel sound off

To the Editor,

Throughout the course of the last few weeks the GUMBY/CAMEL campaign has taken abuse in the Collegian. Headlines consistently refer to us as a "joke" campaign and quotations that have been attributed to us have contained misprints that imply the exact opposite of what we said (Example: In one article the word "can't" read "can"). We're not really bothered by these incidents — accidents happen — but when the Collegian Board of Editors sees fit to lie to the student body, it's time to complain.

We expected and accepted that, because we wouldn't give a definite commitment to stay next year, the Collegian would endorse the Keller/Patrick campaign. However, we are furious that the board would fabricate facts in doing so. The editorial states that, "We feel they have a better understanding of the means to achieve progress, and a better working knowledge of the administrative and procedural processes needed to succeed as presidents gained from their experience as student leaders. Bull. Rudolph/Dooley have more experience than Keller/Patrick, and all of them put together have less pertinent experience than GUMBY or CAMEL, individually. Yet, our experience was characterized as, "commendable". One hardly needs a degree in semantics to see what's going on. We can sympathize with the Board's feeling that Keller/Patrick is better than Rudolph/Dooley, but there is no excuse for deliberately misrepresenting the truth in a public forum.

The heart of the matter is that the Collegian acted on fear, coupled with a rather bloated sense of its own importance. As such, we can hardly expect this letter to appear until after the election, and/or in its original form; it will surely be followed by an editorial note, which will serve little purpose other than to give the Collegian the last word. None of this will alter the fact that its Board of Editors has deliberately attempted to use the students in an effort to determine the outcome of this election. The ends obviously justify the "journalistic" means.

Jim Murphy
Paul Gosselin

Editor's Note: Editor's notes are not used simply to give the Collegian the last word. We only use them when they are necessary.

Is it patronizing women?

To the Editor,

I wanted to be the first to congratulate the innovative candidacy of Rudolph/Dooley in their effort to give women's issues the place they deserve in university life. I refer, of course, to the March 8 platform statement in which the candidates state that "unlike another candidacy, our co-ed candidacy doesn't want to patronize women by reviving the defunct student escort service."

I am offended by this type of thoughtless verbiage and lack of sensitivity concerning what patronization is all about. Though Rudolph/Dooley claim that "we don't belittle your intelligence", I feel they do.

To other people who care about people I suggest that perhaps we should not patronize these candidates by assuming they need our vote.

The sorrow of 'Tis Pity'

'TIS A PITY SHE'S A WHORE
by John Ford
March 14-17
Rand Theatre

By LORENA NOZZOLILLO
Collegian Staff

If you think that the Rand Theatre's production of John Ford's 'Tis Pity She's a Whore is a stuffy, old-fashioned period drama you're in for a surprise. This play is filled with enough scandal, sex and violence to make a Harold Robbins novel pale in comparison.

It is a deeply complex play that deals with the tragic consequences of obsessive love. The story primarily centers on the incestuous love affair between Giovanni (Lawrence W. Devine) and his sister Annabella (Laura Gewurz). Despite the fact that Annabella is pregnant with her brother's child, she weds one of her many suitors, Soranzo. Of course, it's just a matter of time before Soranzo finds out the truth and plans to seek revenge on Giovani.

However, he never has a chance to complete his revenge, for, as in any good tragedy, everybody conveniently drops dead in the final act, including Soranzo. The characters either die of natural causes brought on by some traumatic event, or they are simply murdered in cold blood.

This is not any easy play to watch; the plot is filled with hatred and violence and almost all the characters are either liars, hypocrites, or murderers. There are cruel and violent over-tones throughout the whole play. For example, Annabella is beaten by an angry Soranzo when he discovers she's pregnant. Also, in one instance Putana (Elaine J. DeConinck), Annabella's hand servant, is sentenced to have her eyes gouged out.

Most of the characters are of a violent and corrupt nature. There is Grinaldi, (Matt Canfield) a murderer who escapes justice through the protection offered by the hypocritical cardinal (Greg A. Kinnison).

Soranzo becomes corrupt with his desire for revenge but ends up being betrayed by his own servant. Even Giovanni ends up killing his beloved Annabella.

The comic relief to all this violent tension is provided by Richard F. O'Neil as Bergetto, one of Anabella's suitors. O'Neil's stage persona was a pleasant relief and he was definately a favorite with the audience.

Unfortunately there were also a few unintentionally comic moments. When a blind DeConinck stumbles onto stage, blind-folded, she looks more like someone playing pin-the-tail-on-the-donkey than a woman who has just been cruelly tortured.

Even though most of the characters are villianous, the cast seems to enjoy playing such vile roles. (even if they do have a tendency to ham it up a little) 'Tis Pity She's A Whore is an intense drama that explores the dark areas of hatred, hypocrisy, even love. It needs to be presented with the right amount of camp and theatrics to make it watchable, 'Tis Pity She's A Whore will play at the Rand Theatre March 14-17.

Laura Gewurz confides in Elaine Deconinck in a scene from the Rand's 'Tis Pity She's a Whore.

Chasing after melodies

STEPHANIE CHASE; ANNE-MARIE McDERMOTT
Thursday, March 1
Fine Arts Center

By PETER WISSOKER
Collegian Staff

Violinist Stephanie Chase made her Amherst debut last week before a small but receptive audience at the Fine Arts Center.

Chase performed pieces by Mozart, Brahms, Ysaye, and Janacek. On the latter two, she really shined. Accompanied by pianist Anne-Marie McDermott, Ms. Chase, the winner of the Bronze medal in the Tchaikovsky Competition in 1982, played with an invaryingly clairvoyant tone quality which was quite beautiful in its own way, but which seemed inappropriate at times, particularly for the piece by Brahms.

The problem with Ms. Chase's playing is that it has emotion but not much soul. Clearly, it is a personal judgement to say that soul is necessary, but for pieces such as Brahms' "Sonata No. 3 For Violi And Piano," a certain amount of emotional evocation is needed to keep the piece afloat.

I found that Ms. Chase's rendition dragged.

On the pieces which demanded mostly technical percision, like Ysaye's Sonata for Violin solo "Ballade" Op. 27, No. 3, which opened the second half of the concert, her style fit in perfectly and the result was phenominal. Ysaye, the piece's composer, was first a violinist and second a composer. He wrote solely for solo violins. A latter day disciple of Bach's, Ysaye provides the musician with a masterpiece to perform, if they have to required skill. And this is where Ms. Chase comes in. Her reading of the piece was perfect, and I found myself at the edge of my seat by the time it was finished.

Anne-Marie McDermott, who accompanied Ms. Chase on the piano, provided a good counterpoint for Ms. Chase's playing. While tonaly they really only blended once or twice during the evening, Ms. McDermott's playing was always strong. During the Brahms in particular she performed even the most difficult passages brilliantly. As a duet it worked out quite well.

Ms. McDermott kept the concert interesting when Ms. Chase began to wane, but usually Ms. Chase held up her end perfectly and I would consider it to be an evening at The Fine Arts Center that was well spent.

IM Hockey playoffs begin

By SCOT COOPER
Collegian Staff

The UMass intramural hockey league will conclude play Monday night, with rescheduled games taking place to finish up the regular season. Playoffs will get under way Tuesday night with all eight playoff teams skating.

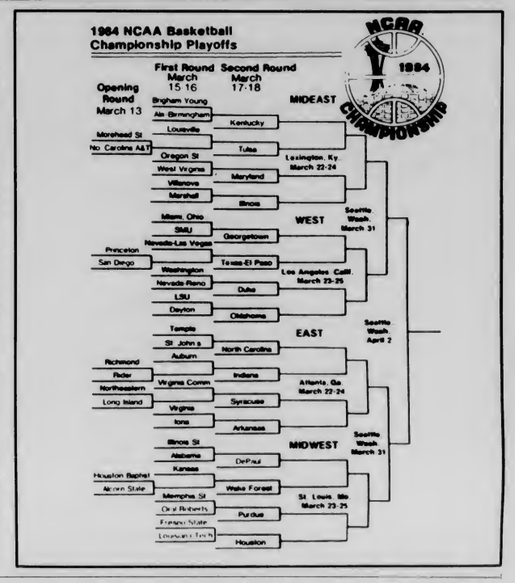
The Nads came one game short of an undefeated season last week when they were stopped by What the Puck, 7-4. Tom Jango's Nads finished up the regular season with a lock on first place and a 9-1-0 mark.

What the Puck gained sole possession of second place and will face the third place team in the quarter finals. The Nads will play the fourth place team, but the final two playoff spots in the Jo Jo Starbuck division are still up for grabs with one night of action left.

Yukon Jack, the champions the past two seasons, gained first place in the Ice Capades division with an 8-0-2 record. An asterisk has to be next to Yukon's undefeated season because they lost a game to Mass Consumption, but were awarded the game by forfeit. Mass Consumption, with two losses, will battle Phi Sigma Kappa in the first round of the playoffs.

Phi Sig clinched third place with a 6-0 rout over Pi Kappa Alpha. Doug Chapman paced the "Five Cigs" with three assists.

The remaining playoff spot in the Ice Capades division is available for either Pike or the Bladerunners. The Bladerunners need to win their last game and hope for a Pike loss or Pike will finish in fourth place.



All playoff series will be one game, single elimination with the division finals Wednesday night, and the league finals on Thursday at 9p.m.

The top bets for the title are the Nads, What the Puck, Yukon Jack and Mass Consumption. Those four teams were the final four last semester, and had little trouble skating their way to the top of the heap this semester.

Yukon Jack must get a strong effort from Goalie Bob Montana, to win again. Montana's teammates led by Matt Lyons, John Bonnish and John Sullivan, gave him an average of six goals a game, but Mass Consumption's goalie Rick Hanlon is one of the stingiest in the league. Phi Sig will need three upsets in a row to take the title.

The Nads seem to be the team to beat overall, with the ability to score often and quickly, their most potent weapon. The Nads are still stinging from their loss in semi-finals last semester and would like nothing better than to get the seniors on the team an intramural trophy.

Early season favorite Moosehead, had a miserable second season and missed the playoffs completely. What the Puck, paced by Joe Gorrasi, Scott Dickson and Fred Findler played steady hockey all year and won when they had to. Their season series with the Nads included a 7-3 win, but the Nads shut them out 4-0 in their first meeting.

Women gymnasts take third place

By KEVIN DELUCA
Collegian Staff

There were no big surprises Saturday at the women's gymnastics Atlantic 10 Championships as an excellent Penn State squad ran away from the rest of the field with an 182.35, West Virginia finished second with a 177.05, and the third-seeded University of Massachusetts lived up to its seeding with a 171.55. Hose school University of Rhode Island was fourth at 169.4.

The Minutewomen had gone into the meet looking for a 175 in order to qualify for the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference Championships, where they would have their last chance to qualify for the NCAA East Regionals.

"The ladies went into the meet with a good attitude," said UMass Coach Ken Anderson. "The beam was a tough event to start on. It was very loud in the gym, so it was hard to concentrate. All six kids fell off the beam, which was the difference in not getting that 175 that we needed."

As it turns out, despite not getting a 175, the Minutewomen will be at the University of Vermont in Burlington this Saturday for the ECAC Championships and that last shot to make the NCAA East Regionals.

"Penn State and West Virginia are not going. They wanted the weekend off before Regionals. We have to hit cold. We need a 177 to make the Regionals," said Anderson.

UMass got off to a rocky start at the Atlantic 10 Championships with no one hitting their balance beam routines. Tricia Harrity had the high score for UMass with an 8.7 Robin Low managed an 8.5 and Sue Allen had the third-highest UMass score with an 8.3 Bernie Robertson of Penn State won the balance beam event with a 9.35.

The Minutewomen moved next to the floor exercise event, where Low's crowd-pleasing routine earned her a 9.35 and third place, behind Pam Loree (9.6) and Diane Drum (9.5) of Penn State. Minutewoman Tricia Camus did her best floor routine of the season and scored an 8.9.

Lisa Griffin, who had had a tough time (for her) in the floor exercise event (8.7), made up for it in the vaulting event, where she led UMass with a 9.2. Griffin's full twist on-full twist off vault gave her third place. Kathy Pomper (9.35) and Loree (9.3) of Penn State were first and second, respectively.

UMass then headed for their last event of the day, the uneven parallel bars.

"We went into the bars with a real 'go for it' attitude, which I was happy about considering that it is our weakest event," Anderson commented.

Camus started the Minutewomen off on the bars and broke out of a personal slump with an 8.2. Maureen Sutherby earned an 8.25, the third-highest UMass score and a personal high for her. Chris Cloutier hit her bar set for an 8.55 while Harrity got the highest UMass score, an 8.95. Jan Funderburk of West Virginia finished first in the event with a 9.45.

Funderburk was also the top all-around at the meet. Her total of 36.95 edged Loree's total of 36.9. Harrity was the top UMass all-around with a 34.45 total.

The Minutewomen now travel to UVM for their last chance at earning a berth in the NCAA East Regionals.

Violence from sports fans: Do we need it?

By M. E. MURRAY
Collegian Staff

It has come to light that officials at Syracuse University's Carrier Dome have video-taped unknowing sports fans in the act of screaming obscenities at opposition team players. Individuals, according to published reports, have been removed from the stands and shown footage of their unruly behavior.

A hard-nosed attempt as social-control with a 'Big-Brother' attitude? Or a mudging "see how silly you look...?"

While one may argue that an illegal or unethical approach has been taken to deal with rowdyism, one may counter that it appears to be a method of pinpointing an individual and demanding an explanation for a behavior that has sometimes led to unnecessary violence in sports.

Consider:

—A professional athlete dives into the stands in pursuit of a fan who has been taunting him.

—Members of a professional hockey team fight with fans who have been throwing objects and screaming obscenities.

—A referee attacked by a fan on the court during a nationally-televised basketball game.

Where has sportsmanship gone?

Have the times changed so much that an onlooker has a right of participation by profanity?

Consider the University of Massachusetts:

Commentary

The Scene—The Curry Hicks Cage, crammed to its ancient rafters with loyal followers of the local five.

The Game—The home-favored Minutemen are being trounced by the talented visitors from Philadelphia. The Temple Owls present an efficient offensive-machine that wilts the locals.

The Fan—Notice the fellow seated behind the UMass bench, halfway up the crowded bleachers. His pulse is quickening; his face turns a peculiar shade of crimson; his lips curl in a sadistic snarl.

He leaps to his feet, shouting at the object of his scorn, the man wearing the black and white stripes. He rains down a storm of obscene commentary, guessing at the unfortunate's parental lineage and noting his resemblance to a portion of the human anatomy. Later he becomes annoyed with the skills of the soon-to-be-victorious visitors, begins a vile chant and is joined by other foul-mouthed fellows.

It was not pretty to watch, nor enjoyable to hear. It was particularly annoying to the majority of those in attendance, those who respectfully appreciative of the level of talent being displayed by both sides.

And so it ended the way it began, pretty much of a rout. But in between were those moments that are the essence of sport. The gratifying feeling of a floating hook, the jump-up-and-down of a fast break, the emotion of a run-of-points fueled comeback bid; moments briefly interrupted by mindless bigotry.

Videotapes do present a dilemma to the heckler who must choose within himself an accountability for his behavior or an acknowledgement of his offensiveness to others.

While Syracuse University may have begun a new tradition of presenting magnetic images after-the-fact, the majority of their fans have often dealt out their own form of spot-justice by shouting down the offenders; perhaps this is the better of the two.

There is another tradition at the Carrier Dome. At the start of each half of play the crowd rises as one, clapping in unison until the hometeam has scored its first points. It continues as long as it takes, leaving many sore hands when the Orangemen are cold. It is another of those moments that is so important to sport, and to life; a unity of peaceful emotion. It is something we could use more of.

BLT wins wrestling title

By JOE PETRIN
Collegian Correspondent

BLT (bold, little, tough) IV won their fourth consecutive intramural wrestling championship last night in the Boyden wrestling room.

BLT IV easily outpointed Phi Sig 61-41 for the title. The Madmen finished a disappointing third with 35 followed by BKO with 21 points, PIKE with 17 and Phi Mu Delta with 6.

Eight BLT IV wrestlers captured championships in their weight classes. One was captain Mike Valardi in the 135 lb. class for the second year in a row. Valardi was very happy with his team's performance.

"We've worked really hard and it payed off. We've been a team for four years. When we started most guys had never wrestled before and we're keeping up a winning tradition," said Valardi.

Second place Phi Sig had three winners. Chris Noble captured the 180 lb. class, Dave Laud won at 185 lbs., and Big Mark Davidson took the unlimited title.

Howard Kilpatrick (145 lb.) and Nigel Lewis (165 lb.) both won their class for The Madmen. Lewis, who also won for the second straight year, gave credit to BLT.

"The Madmen congratulate BLT. We lost to them by one last year and again they got the best of us. They knew we were coming after them and it gave them instinctive to try harder," said Lewis.

BKO also had two individual champions with Brian Conrad (160 lbs.) and Dave Gaudet (195). Gaudet had the only pin in the finals.

The tournament was held over four nights with 45 wrestlers competing in a double-elimination tournament. It was a very smoothly run operation, said Patty Halpin, intramural graduate assistant.

The team scoring was close after the first night but then BLT ran away with it. After a hectic first night things went good. There were a lot of close matches and overall it was a good tournament, Halpin said.

Hoop playoffs finish up

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

During the regular season, members of these two teams compete in different arenas but all under the flag of the University of Massachusetts. All one big happy family.

Tonight at 6 p.m. in the newly renovated Boyden gym members of the UMass women's soccer team will meet members of the UMass field hockey team in the women's intramural basketball final.

That game highlights a full slate of intramural action as the basketball playoffs wind down. The men's semi-finals, the co-rec finals and the Grad-Fac semi-finals will all be held tonight in Boyden.

In the women's final, the Dancing UMies (field hockey) will face off against the Strikers (soccer). Last night, the Strikers jumped out to a 20-8 lead enroute to a 33-26 semi-final win over the Sharpshooters.

In the other semi, the Dancing UMies came from behind to overcome the Crampton Women of Color, in a low-scoring 19-16 battle. Patti Smith led the winners with 5 while Patty Shea and Lil Hultin added 4. Lisa Graham led Crampton with six.

In a previous game earlier this semester, the Dancing UMies ecked out a narrow 31-30 victory over the Strikers.

The men's final four pairings were determined last night in quarter-final action.

Clinc will meet the Running Rebels in one semi at 8 p.m. In the other semi, Chutzpah will face the ExHogsters also at 8.

Clinc topped Sixty-sixers 64-40, Running Rebels beat GQ IV 49-36, Chutzpah overcame Heat and Save by a narrow 66-65 margin and the ExHogsters defeated the Mustangs, in Final Eight Action.

Mike Kline led all scorers in the Chutzpah game with 17 points.

In co-rec action, the A-Team will fact Spirit in the finals at 7 p.m. tonight.

The grad-fac league Final Four will feature Exercise Science against Education at 6 p.m. and Cell Debris will tangle with CC Movers at 7 p.m.

The grad-fac finals will be Wednesday at 6 p.m.

Keller/Patrick are landslide victors

17 percent of students vote

By LISA MARIE CANTWELL
Collegian Staff

In a landslide victory, Rick Patrick and Jim Keller were elected last night to the Student Government Association (SGA) Presidency, claiming over 58 percent of the total votes cast.

"We are looking forward to following through with the issues and strategies we have been working on," said and elated Patrick last night. "We want to bring as many people into the president's office as possible," he said "to build a solid base for student input."

Despite the poor weather, the voter turnout was consistent to last year, with approximately 17 percent of the undergraduate student population participating.

The Rudolph/Dooley candidacy received over 29 percent of the votes, finishing second. Gumby and Camel earned third place, with an estimated 8 percent of the votes while John Michaud, the only candidacy running solo with no platform, came in fourth, capturing 4 percent of the votes cast.

Timothy Rudolph congratulated Patrick and Keller and said "this loss should not divide us from the winners. We all share the common ground of being students here."

Paul "Gumby" Gosselin of the Gumby/Camel candidacy said, "we are having a victory party, because we accomplished what we wanted to do before the ballots were counted."

The two said their goals were to raise issues which they felt were important, such as rent control, affirmative action topics, and students rights and roles within the SGA.

Patrick and Keller said their first concern will be the Board of Regents recently proposed tuition policy, which would allow an annual increase of 12 to 15 percent.

Keller said they will inform students on what the policy entails, and confront the regents with the input, and research they have already started.

According to Patrick, the policy discriminates against students of lower-middle and lower economic backgrounds, who "should have access to this University," "We are against this proposed policy."

Patrick also said the tuition policy is one of their first concerns because it does not ensure that adequate financial aid will be provided to eligible students.

They said another immediate concern is for bringing students closer to the SGA, by informing them through Collegian editorials, WMUA radio station, and seeking student input.

Reinstatement of the President's Council, which unifies area governments with the president's office, is another method Patrick and Keller will use to "insure direct student representation," and bring students and student government closer.

Hart takes Mass. for New England sweep

Mondale second, McGovern quits race

By JAMES SIMON
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Sen. Gary Hart completed a five-state New England sweep over Walter Mondale by winning the snowbound Massachusetts primary yesterday, capping a two-month journey from the bottom of political polls to the top of the presidential ballot.

George McGovern, in a last stand to salvage his Democratic campaign by finishing first or second in Massachusetts, trailed Mondale for the runner-up position, and said he would drop out of the race.

It was an astounding come-from-behind victory by Hart, who trailed Mondale 43-3 percent in a January statewide poll.

"This is a victory not for the candidate but for all of you, and I want you to know that," Hart told his jubilant supporters via a telephone hookup from Washington D.C. to his Boston campaign party.

"We're going to carry Massachusetts in the fall for the Democratic party," he said. With 1,518 of 2,196 precincts reporting, Hart had 157,154 votes or 39 percent; John Glenn 29,053 votes or 7 percent; and McGovern 82,373 votes or 21 percent; Sen. John Glenn 29,053 votes of 7 percent; and the Rev. Jesse Jackson, 21,881 votes or 6 percent.

The returns showed Hart held his own in cities like Boston and Holyoke, where Mondale's organizational support was greater, and the Colorado senator won suburban areas and small towns across the state. President Reagan was the only candidate on the Republican ballot.

McGovern carried Massachusetts in the 1972 general election while losing every other state. After stating he would drop out of the 1984 race if he didn't finish first or second in Massachusetts, the former South Dakota senator spent most of the last two weeks campaigning here while his rivals concentrated on southern states that also held primaries on Super Tuesday.

"With all good cheer I fully accept the verdict of my very special friends—the voters of Massachusetts, who gave us a very strong showing, far beyond what anyone expected a short time ago," McGovern said in announcing he would bow out of the race.

Hart, riding the momentum from his earlier victories in New Hampshire, Vermont and Maine, led the Massachusetts field by 20 percentage points in polls going into the primary.

"The Hart campaign is not one just of momentum any more," said Hart's co-chairman in Massachusetts, Essex County District Attorney Kevin Burke.

"It won in Massachusetts where it had the first full test and analysis of Gary Hart's ideas. It passed with resounding success."

Gov. Michael Dukakis, who campaigned last week for Mondale while the candidate remained in the South, said "it hurt not to have him here," for the final days of the primary effort.

"We have good, tough independent voters in the state and they vote their conscience . . . I'm pleased overall. I think it was a good night for Fritz Mondale," said Dukakis, referring to Mondale's showing in southern states.

Hart, McGovern strong in Amherst Voting

By DAVID LINTON

Amherst voters who endured the snow and cold yesterday gave Sen. Gary Hart a commanding victory in the Democratic Presidential primary here yesterday.

Hart's Amherst victory coincided with results statewide, where early tabulations showed the Colorado Democrat taking about 38 percent of the Massachusetts vote.

With 5,448 people voting in Amherst, Hart was able to get 1,737 votes or 32 percent; former South Dakota Sen. and 1972 presidential candidate George McGovern received 1,353 votes or 25 percent; the Rev. Jesse Jackson had 1,027 votes or 19 percent; former vice president and Minnesota Sen. Walter Mondale received 931 votes or 17 percent; and Ohio Sen. John Glenn had 137 votes or 2 percent.

Hart, whose Five College campaign was made up of about 150 student volunteers, did best in precinct three, the Emmanual Lutheran Church, where he picked up 297 votes to McGovern's 155. Hart also did well in precinct 1, the North Congregational Church Hall, where he earned 253 votes to McGovern's 193. Hart was able to take Amherst's remaining six precincts as well.

Town Clerk Estelle Matusko said the voter turnout was not as high as expected due to the weather conditions. She said she had estimated that 60 percent of the registered voters would turnout from the number of phone calls she received Monday afternoon of voters asking what locations to vote at.

"Monday afternoon I estimated sixty percent but the weather changed all that. Primaries are typically low key as far asvoter turn out," she said. "Obviously there is a group out there who couldn't face the elements and that certainlyis understandable."

The voter turnout was low compared to the past two presidential primary elections. Matusko said that the voter turnout in 1980 was 48 percent on a day which was sunny and cool. In 1976, she said 43 percent of registered voters turned out to vote on a cold, dark day.

"I think the figures speak for themselves. The weather tells all," Matusko said. "I'd take a cold, dark day anyday compared to a cold, snowy day."

McGovern, who captured 21 percent of the statewide vote with about half the state's precincts reporting, late last night decided to drop out if he did not place first or second in Massachusetts.

In Amherst, his strongest showings were in precincts one, four and six. McGovern captured 194 votes in Precinct 6 and 193 votes in precincts 1 and 4.

Jackson, who also had a strong Amherst-based organization, did best in precincts one, three, and six.

Despite yesterday's inclement weather, poll workers did their best to give the candidates visibility.

Eric Azumi, a sophomore at Amherst College, spent about five hours at the Bangs Community Center, where he held a sign for Gary Hart. "I don't mind the cold or the snow," Azumi said. "I've had a lot of motivation since the campaign started."

The Hart story in Massachusetts

BOSTON (AP) - Independent-minded Massachusetts voters disappointed former Vice President Walter Mondale Tuesday and added lustre to the rising star of Gary Hart, a western senator almost unknown here until recent weeks.

"It's the most incredible turnaround I've ever seen," Chester Atkins, sate Democratic Party chairman, said Tuesday night as Hart telephoned his Boston supporters to claim a primary victory.

"It's a genuine phenomenon," Atkins said. 'I'm not sure anyone can explain it."

In broad tems, Atkins attributed Hart's impressive showing to his promise of "new ideas" and his appeal to younger voters.

"It ushers in a new generation of political activism, and that's a very healthy thing," Atkins said.

The Hart phenomenon reached across Massachusetts, from Cambridge to North Adams, and from Wellesley to Greenfield.

Mondale narrowly carried Brookline, with 31 percent, and was running ahead of Hart in New Bedford, Fall River and parts of Boston.

But Hart was beating Mondale by 2-to-1 margins in many centraland western Massachusetts cities and towns. Hart won 46 percent in Greenfield to Mondale's 23 percent; 47 percent in North Adams, and 45 percent in Pittsfield.

Hart also scored high margins in some eastern Massachusetts cities - 40 percent in Salem, 38 percent in Wellesley and 41 percent in Waltham.

Hart also drew votes across age and income lines and probably benefited from the votes of Independents who are allowed to vote in the Democratic primary in Masachusetts.

The Massachusetts vote also meant the end of the 1984 campaign for George McGovern. The former South Dakota senator said that if he couldn't win first or second place in Massachusetts, the only state that stood by him in 1972, then he would withdraw.

And for Rev. Jesse Jackson, who hoped to win 10 percent of the vote, Massachusetts was also a disappointment. He got only about 4 percent of the vote, and he appeared to have been hurt by defections in liberal suburbs with Jewish voters angered by some recent Jackson statements.

Less than a month ago, Massachusetts had seemed like a sure thing for Mondale.

Big Dan defense; it began as a joke

FALL RIVER, MA. (AP) - Saying that a purported gang rape started out as "just a joke," a defense attorney told a jury Tuesday his client tried to have sex on a barroom pool table with a willing woman who then asked to go home with him.

"Everyone thought it was just a joke," Edward Harrington, the attorney for Daniel Silva, told a jury in opening arguments.

Harrington, a former mayor of New Bedford, told the jury that the attempt at sex between his client and a 22-year-old mother of two "was consensual in nature."

He said Silva would take the stand to testify, "there was no screaming, no crying, until the others came around the pool table."

When the woman got off the pool table to leave, "she came back to him and put her arms and legs around him and said 'take me home,' " Harrington said.

Harrington said Silva had met the woman prior to the night on March 6, 1983, when the woman said she was attacked and raped by a gang of strangers at Big Dan's bar in New Bedford's North End.

When they met at the bar, Harrington said, "one thing led to another and they started talking about making love."

The defense attorney said the two had been drinking and fell to the floor as Silva tried to unbutton the woman's pants. Others crowded around and removed Silva's boots.

He said his client then carried the woman to the pool table as she shouted "just him, nobody else."

But Harrington said his client was physically unable to proceed as the laughing, joking men surrounded them.

"He was very embarrassed because he couldn't perform," Harrington said. "He tried to leave but he couldn't get up because she had her arms around him."

Harrington's opening arguments came as the defense opened its case in an afternoon trial of Silva, 27, and Joseph Vieira, 28.

Trustees to vote on 15 percent tuition hike

By JOHN KENNEY
Collegian Staff

BOSTON - The Massachusetts Board of Regents of Higher Education yesterday voted to approve a tuition policy, which, when voted on next month, could increase University of Massachusetts tuition by as much as 15 percent next year.

The decision, approved by all but two on the 15 member board, calls for a policy to be set for tuition increases. The state has never had a policy regarding tuition for its 29 public colleges and universities.

Chancellor of Higher Education John Duff called the new policy "bold and aggressive" but warned that "no policy should be cast in stone."

Currently, without the policy, the board has the power to increase tuition as much as it sees fit, and tuition at UMass has been increased twice in the past three years.

The specifics of the plan will be discussed at the board's next meeting on April 18. Here is what is likely to be discussed:

•The question of whether or not UMass tuition will be increased next year. If approved, a tuition increase could be as much as 15 percent, which translates as approximately $170 a year for UMass students.

•The strategy to increase student costs in regard to the overall cost of an education to 33 percent. This figure would be, according to Duff, "both a ceiling and a goal."

Duff assured that "full-need students are still going to receive full aid." He argued that tuition is not the issue, but rather, the total cost of an education is what should be concentrated on. A member of the audiencesuggested that fees be reduced, and Duff replied that the individual colleges and universities dictate those fees.

Regent Edward Sullivan, one of the two members who voted against the policy, said after the meeting that he did so, "because I don't feel the plan addresses the issue as thoroughly as it should. It's not that I completely disagree with the plan."

Sullivan said he had no proposal of his own, but would "just like to see a more specific formula."

Michael Ferrigno, president of the State Student Association, argued that students who are eligible for some, but not full, financial aid, "will be put over the edge with this proposal" in that, these students will be directly effected by the actual dollar cost.

Locals react to primary

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

One year ago, Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colorado, visited the University of Massachusetts to commemorate National Students for Gary Hart Day, and announced the formation of presidential campaign organizations at more than 100 campuses nationwide.

Yesterday, after working here throughout the year for the underdog who was thought unable to compete with a former vice-president and a former astronaut, the leader of the first of those student groups welcomed his candidate's commanding victory in the state primary as the realization of a prediction Hart gave him months ago.

"I just chose the candidate I felt most comfortable with," said 23-year-old political science major David Nelson, Five College coordinator for Students for Gary Hart, an organization of more than 100 UMass students. "A year ago it looked unlikely that we'd have this much success at this time. (But) this is going along the lines that he predicted, (although) I don't think he had any idea he'd be this successful this quickly."

Hart received 32 percent of the vote in Amherst, and almost 40 percent statewide, outpolling former Sen. George McGovern and former Vice President Walter Mondale. (See related story.)

"To a large degree it was students, but it was a lot more than students," said Nelson, explaining that a diversity of "people just melted together in his campaign" and that "even people in the top level positions were just volunteers."

Countering charges that Hart was merely the best-looking candidate and without solid issue positions, Nelson insisted the "media was not responsible for the momentum. It was responsible for giving it a bigger shove, but it was not responsible for the entire momentum."

"Both candidates got what they were looking for," said Ralph Whitehead of the Journalistic Studies department, a political consultant who has worked for Hart's leading rival, Walter Mondale. "Mondale gets through to (the primary in) Illinois and has demonstrated he can come back...Hart demonstrated that he's not a flash in the pan and that there is some depth to his candidacy."

"The results don't surprise me," said Students for Walter Mondale Co-President James Finkle, "because it seems the media created Mondale (as front runner) to create news. But that became boring and they created Gary Hart, and he's exciting now. But I predict in two or three weeks the media may decide to resurrect either Walter Mondale or John Glenn, whichever they decide is more newsworthy."

George McGovern, who came in a strong second in Amherst, dropped out of the race after failing to achieve the same result statewide.

Meanwhile, a "dedicated" group of around 200 supporters of the Rev. Jesse Jackson helped their candidate place third in the town, said campaign staffer Joel Weissman.

"The cadre of Jackson supporters are a little more committed, while the ones who support the frontrunners figure, 'oh, I don't have to go out,'" said Weissman, explaining why the poor weather may have helped Jackson in Massachusetts.

Hampshire to strengthen academic grip

By MARY-SHEILA COUGHLIN
Collegian Staff

Hampshire College students will have to face some kind of minimum academic requirements next year, but those standards will not differ greatly from those already in practice, according to dialogue at a community meeting yesterday.

The meeting was called in response to a sit-in and a community meeting held at Hampshire last week, in which students thought a decision about academic standards would be made without their input.

The College must "establish, publish, and apply" their academic standards in order to comply with federal regulations or the college stands to lose $1 million each year, Kathy Methot, financial aid director at Hampshire, said.

Most colleges evaluate their students' progress with grades and credits while Hampshire uses faculty reviews in their three stages of curriculum.

"The college must publish these academic standards in the catalogue so as not to deceive incoming students," Methot said.

"We have to provide this information to students currently enrolled, students entering in the fall, and to perspective students," Methot said. "The best place to do this is in the catalogue," she said.

Yesterday's meeting established that what needs to be decided is the maximum number of years a student can spend at Hampshire, which will be approximately five. An adviser/student relationship also needs to be established and recorded.

"Some people feel that what we have now is enough and we are in compliance with the regulations, but we are not," Methot said. "We don't have to give the government anything, we just publish and apply it, (a statement explaining academic progress requirements)."

The group passed several motions to be presented to a closed faculty meeting this Thursday when it is expected discussion will resume on the issue.

One motion proposes that the issues of minimum standards for federal requirements be considered separately from internal Hampshire academic restructuring.

A full faculty and student meeting and community discussions on the proposal were also suggested, and the group recommended that the matter be remanded back to the college senate for a final decision after a faculty review.

"This issue is too important to be dealt with in a closed forum of one segment of the population," said Michael Current, a student senator.

Swirling snow stalls classes

By LARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Staff

An early morning winter storm that dumped six inches of snow on Amherst resulted in the cancellations of afternoon classes at the University of Massachusetts and the suspension of local evening bus service yesterday.

Acting on information provided by University Physical Plant and the UMass Department of Public Safety, vice-chancellor for administration and finance John L. Denyse decided to close the University at 2 p.m. yesterday.

A spokesman for the vice-chancellors office said that Denyse made his decision at noon yesterday after receiving reports on weather conditions from the Physical Plant and road conditions from the Department of Public Safety on campus.

The Physical Plant receives its information from the Weather Services Corporation in Bedford and Public Safety reports on the progress of snow removal from the local area.

The UMass Transit Service suspended service at 6 p.m. "because of the decision to close the University," according to a transit spokesman.

A Pioneer Valley Transit Authority spokesman also said that the Northampton buses stopped at 7 p.m. yesterday but that all buses will resume their regular schedules today.

Amherst police reported that the snowfall began at 2:30 a.m. yesterday and at 6 p.m. the Amherst area had received about five inches of snow but had not experienced any major problems as a result of the storm.

Amherst to get Soviet Sister city

By JULIA MAYCOCK
Collegian Staff

The Amherst selectboard unanimously endorsed a project which will pair Amherst with a sister city in the Soviet Union and also set up a public hearing to consider passing a bylaw that would make the town a nuclear free zone.

The board gave its approval to a plan by the Ground Zero Pairing project which would make Amherst and Tartu, a city in the Soviet Union, sister cities.

The pairing project is designed to develop communication between Amherst and Tartu as an effort toward more peaceful East-West relations, the board said.

After a half hour of discussion, the Selectboard set April 24 as the date for a public hearing to consider a proposal for a bylaw that would make Amherst a nuclear free zone. Both the bylaw and the pairing project proposal will be drafted into warrant articles for the Spring Town Meeting.

The proposed bylaw to declare Amherst a nuclear free zone would prohibit the production of nuclear weapons and their components in the town. If the bylaw is passed at the Town Meeting it would ban the development, testing, storage, maintenance, or transportation of nuclear weapons inAmherst.

The bylaw would also require the town to divest itself of all investments in industries which are producing weapons within one year after the proposal becomes law.

In May 1982 the Selectboard issued this statement: "Nuclearwar would mean the end of American society as we know it. The Board of Selectmen can fulfill its responsibility for public safety only by working to prevent nuclear war."

The proposed bylaw forbids research which is directed toward the development of nuclear weapons. Selectman Alan Torrey voiced concern over the issue of academic freedom. "The academic community should not stifle research. This seems like a little reverse book burning," he said.

the ultima search: come for a screen test and makeup session

Contest: maybe you should be in the movies!

Ultima II is searching for the Ultimate Face, and we've planned a makeup session to prepare you for your screen test. Really!

You'll get a new look with Ultima II's Art [illegible] your screen test. Our beauty professional will design a new makeup look for you and introduce you to Art Deco '84, spring colors that bring back a bit of glamour and sophistication, reminiscent of Hollywood's Platinum Age. The session is complimentary.

The G.Fox-Ultima II screen test: here's how it works

After your makeup is completed you'll be given a screen test, video taped by a professional television team. Your tape will be entered in the G.Fox/Ultima II Search contest. You must be 18 years or older to enter.

You could win a fur, fragrance and a chance to compete nationally for a Columbia movie part

Our G.Fox winner will be selected by our special panel of judges. She will receive a blue fox jacket from the G.Fox Fur Salon and a Ciara fragrance ensemble. Her screen test will be sent to the Ultima II Search for the Ultimate Face national contest. The national winner receives an expense paid trip to Hollywood or New York, an official studio screen test, and a guaranteed walk on part in an upcoming Columbia Pictures production.

Screen test time is limited, so make you reservation now.

At G.Fox, Holyoke, Friday, March 16, 2 pm-5:30 pm and 6:30 pm-9 pm. Saturday, March 17, 11 am-5 pm. Call (413) 538-7360 ext. 3553 for your appointment.

Love Workshop turns out a success

By DARLENE JACKSON
Collegian Staff

An estimate forty University of Massachusetts undergraduate and graduate students and faculty members participated in an experimental workshop Saturday focusing on communication, love and black male/female relationships.

"Family: The Power of Black Love" was sponsored by the Third World Women's Program of the Everywomen's Center, the Office of Third World Affairs and the Staff Development office at the University.

Due to the personal content of the workshop, participants responses were deleted from the story.

Jacquelyn Smith Crooks, Third World Women's Program Coordinator/Advocate said in order to establish black unityone has to begin at the level of the black female/male relationship.

In order to "get the energy flowing" within the group, co-facilitator David Hooker began with a few verbal and non-verbal communication excersises.

The group was broken down into dyads of male/female couples in order for participants to become familiar with one another.

Participants were then brought together in sextets, in order to form a family unit and again to familiarize themselves with one another.

Participants were then separated into two large groups of black female and male caucuses and were asked four basic questions: How did the black female learn about love? How did the black male learn about love? How do black men and women differ in their expression of love?, and what can they do to improve male/female relationships?

After an extended discussion, the caucuses returned to theirfamily unit to first, report back to the group what went on in the caucuses and second, answer and discuss the following questions:

-What do you like least about the way you are treated by the opposite sex?

-How do you let them know that we love them; ways in which one expresses love?

-What do you like most about the opposite sex?

-What do you do to hurt them?

Indian theater educates audience

By DARLENE JACKSON
Collegian Staff

An audience departed with mixed emotion Saturday night at Bowker Auditorium at the University of Massachusetts after the performance of "Paint Your Face on a Drowning River."

"Paint Your Face," the second performance of the Third World Theatre series, was written by Craig Kee Strete, a playwright whose work is published widely in Europe and America.

This award-winning production was still in the works, which accounted for the performers reading from the script.

The play depicted 20th century Indian culture and lifestyle as it told of a young man's struggle both with his conscience and family over his decision to leave home.

The play opens with Tall Horse (Marcos Martinez) digging for the money that his grandmother (Marie Antionette Rogers) had hidden.

"I'm trying to dig my way out of here," he said after having been caught by his grandmother.

His grandmother told him that he would not get out that way. For once he gets the money he would only see as the white man sees.

Tall Horse's grandfather (Norman Brown) staggered in drunk; a state which, according to his grandmother, he is always in.

She said she feels that he is one of the reasons why Tall Horse is leaving.

"This is my land; here I'm born and here I die," said Brown.

"I don't have to be a white man to have my dreams here," he said.

"I miss the old days," said Brown retrospectively to the audience. "A man of my age was considered wise. Now, to be old and Indian means to put your face on some tonic bottle."

Leon Brokeshoulder (Joshua Cruze) and Joseph Little Eagle, friends of Tall Horse, go to the grandfather for spiritual advice after having been drafted into war.

"The enemy you must fear," said Brown to the two young Indians, "is there inside yourself."

"The enemy is the one that you cannot see...What man can truly see himself?" he said.

"The white people own us; they bought us from beginning to end," said Cruze to Martinez before leaving for war.

"Nothing matters," he said, "they don't draft you when you are 18; they draft you the day you're born."

"They stole more than our lands," Cruze continued, "they painted the faces of our old people on the drowning of the river."

The closing scene is much like the first, with Brown and Rogers trying to convince Martinez not to leave.

Jnila (Pearl Tama), Tall Horse's girlfriend, is heartbroken over his leaving.

"You just want to get away from being Indian," she said.

"What's so good about being Indian...something for tourists to laugh at," Martinez said.

"We're all dead and we don't even know it," he said.

"No one ever dies of love," reassured Brown to Tama, "loves dies of people."

"Tall Horse doesn't know what he is, maybe he never learned," he said.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

On Black and Jewish relations

This article concerns Black-Jewish relations. My purpose is not to argue for or against the candidacy of the Reverend Jesse Jackson. My purpose is to discuss the dangers and possibilities for Black-Jewish relations that have been raised rightly or wrongly, in connection with his candidacy.

Saul Perlmutter

The dangers are readily apparent. Because the media loves controversy and conflict, (good relations don't generally make juicy headlines or sell newspapers) - it blew way out of proportion the Jews Against Jackson group, on the one hand, and Jackson's "Hymie" remark, on the other. These events remain uppermost in our consciousness.

Yet how many of us know that Jews Against Jackson "was immediately, roundly and unequivocally criticized by Jewish organizations" according to Nathan Perlmutter, national director of the Anti-Defamation League? And how many of us heard about Jesse Jackson's apology for his remark, calling it "insensitive and wrong," at a synagogue in New Hampshire?

That which is harmful, which shows us at our worst, becomes the news. That which is healing and conciliatory is often not reported. And so often only that which serves to poison relations between Blacks and Jews is what we hear about.

I want to offer a few facts and questions for our consideration that will hopefully help balance the impressions left by the media.

There are many Jews who are actively campaigning for Jackson. Locally Jews are taking leadership roles in the Jackson campaign here and in Holyoke. A Jewish professor at Smith College has written a strongly pro-Jackson piece for "The Nation." The Jewish community is not monolithic. Some Jews are for Jackson as well as some are against him, for Reagan and against him, for Mondale and against him, etc.

It is wrong to assume that those Jews who do not support Jackson are doing so because he is Black. People of good will can differ with any particular candidate without that necessarily being a function of skin color.

Judging by past voting statistics, Jews in fact vote for Black candidates far more readily than do other non-Blacks. In recent race for Governor of California, Bradley (a Black candidate) received 75 percent of the Jewish vote, 87 percent of the Black vote, 68 percent of the Hispanic vote, and 42 percent of the other white vote.

In the recent mayoral elections in Chicago and Philadelphia, the percentage of Jews voting for Black candidates was twice as high as the percentage of other whites voting for them. (Jews, Blacks and Jesse Jackson by Sol Stern, Reform Judaism, Spring 1984 p.2)

As Jews it seems to me that we need to ask ourselves if we are willing to look for and give as much credence to the conciliatory approaches and words that Jesse Jackson has addressed to the Jewish community as we do to his negative statement highlighted by the media.

I hope that the Black readers of this article will also be willing to ask themselves if they are willing to look for and give as much credence to the conciliatory approaches and words of the Jewish community as to the negative statements highlighted by the media.

There are also opportunities. One potentially positive outcome of all this may be that Blacks and Jews will realize once again that we must work extra hard at re-establishing trust, at speaking and listening to one another, and at working together to make real our shared visions for a just and equitable society.

We must not relate to one another only through the media's images of who we are. Though different, we share much in common.

Let us try to debate honestly and respectfully those issues where we disagree. And let us support each other on the many issues where we do agree. We have much more to offer one another as allies than as opponents.

I hope our dialogue is beginning again. Or maybe it never really stopped. For all of our sakes, let us do our best to see that it continues in constructive ways.

The moonies have returned

Spring break is close upon us, so the Moonies are back recruiting. The Moonies, the followers of Mr. Moon and his Unification Church, often choose this time of year, a vulnerable period for many students, hoping to convince you to spend time during vacation week in one of their camps or houses (indoctrination centers).

Robert W. Lenz

If you do, and if you give them a chance to isolate and "love bomb" you (their term), you, like many before you, may not return to campus. They are trained to detect and exploit your doubts, guilts and idealisms, and a few days of their programmed activities (which include little sleep, confusing lectures, constant activity, open confessions, and no privacy) can break down almost anyone's resistance. This process is often called "brain-washing" for lack of a better term, but it is entirely an emotional conversion, not an intellectual one.

If you . . . give the chance to isolate and "love bomb" you, you like many before you, may not return to campus.

The new recruiter, who was assigned to our campus by their CARP organization, has posted vague-sounding invitations to come and discuss love and communism. He roams the campus and will try to get you into an argument about the nuclear freeze, or whatever can catch your attention, so as to interest you in further discussions in his off-campus apartment. The more students he can get to oppose him in these open discussions, the better he likes it because he needs to publicize his presence. Besides, Moonies love to feel persecuted - it helps them to justify their unquestioning commitment to Moon (that process is called "mind control", not a bad term).

Moon is the convicted criminal who claims to be the new Messiah. He has, he says, spoken directly to Jesus, and when asked in court recently how he knew it was Jesus, he replied that he recognized Jesus from his picture. No kidding, he really said that, under oath.

The Unification Church has a insatiable appetite for money. They just invested $70 million in a bank, hotel and newspaper consortium in Uruguay, where they are tied in financially with the military dictatorship of the country, according to a February 16th article in the New York Times. If you are recruited, you will help feed that appetite, and you will do it without pay or medical insurance or rest or vacations or good food or any of the amenities you might have in mind for your own future.

Does anyone really care?

To the Editor,

In regards to changing the UMass "Minuteman" mascot: as a Yankee, peace-loving, anti-nuclear arms, non-sexist, ethnically and racially mixed UMass student and athlete who is proud of the rebellious and unwavering determination of our colonial forebearers, I ask you, Charles Francis Carrol, Why? and any way, Who cares?

We are all victims together

To the Editor,

I invite all Anti-Semites (and those with just blind prejudices), to a tete-a-tete. All I want is an explanation of why, again and again, you shamed our human race with reminders, slurs, hatred.

I have lived in the residential system for four years now, and have never personally been exposed to any anti-Semitic remarks or attacks. But that is not to say that anti-Semitism does not exist on this campus. I have seen posters on campus marked with swastika signs, and posters scribbled with demeaning references to Jews. But more than that, all I have to know is that fellow students have been harassed, and I become harassed along with those students. When you attack one Jew in a anti-Semitic fashion, you thereby personally attack me. When you attack a person because the color of their skin differs from your own, or make a woman feel ashamed to be a woman, you are attacking me with your prejudices.

I ask you to think about yourself. How do you feel after you place fear upon another person? Do you thereby feel superior to that person? Do you feel any remorse? Do you feel absolutely nothing?

By thrusting your hatred upon another person, you pull and drag down human respect for all humanity. In the end, you see, you are only dehumanizing yourself.

To quote Sholom Aleichem, famous Jewish storyteller/philosopher, ". . . Just on spite, I'm not going to cry. Just to spite them, there's going to be laughter."

How many times do I, as a Jew, have to smile to mask all my disgust?

The poster is not sexist

To the Editor,

This is an open letter to the Women's Issues Team and the feminist community, about the reaction to the poster for the theatre department's upcoming production of John Ford's 'Tis Pity She's A Whore (stickers proclaiming "this promotes violence toward women"). I am the director of this production, an MFA candidate, and a women, one very concerned with women's issues.

I am always disappointed when supposedly enlightened people exhibit the same ignorant tunnel-vision they condemn in others. Look at the poster for more than five seconds and you will see clearly that the sympathy lies, as it does in the play, with the woman, whose face is white. The poster does depict violence against women, but does not promote it by any stretch of even a feeble imagination. Do pictures of starving children children promote starvation? Certainly not; they call attention to the problem with hopes of provoking thought which in turn may promote change.

I invite you to see the production (since it is obvious that whoever defaced the posters has not read the play) before you judge. This play was written in 1632, and shows an astonishing sensitivity to the problems of women of that time. I chose the play precisely because I think those problems still exist, and the extreme style of the late Renaissance drama is a wonderful way to bring these issues to a contemporary audience. The play's central strength is that it asks probing moral questions, but leaves the audience to provide their own answers, a strength echoed in a poster that [illegible] provoke thought, not such petty reaction.

Please don't label things sexist that have been examined with only one eye and a closed mind. Allow yourselves some depth perception—see the show and if you are still dissatisfied, I will be happy to discuss it further.

Vaughan has the beat

Stevie Ray Vaughan with Double Trouble
The Rusty Nail
March 11

By JACK BRESHAN
Collegian Correspondent

Those of us who saw Stevie Ray Vaughan and Double Trouble on Sunday night at the Rusty Nail were treated to memorable guitar playing. Stevie Ray Vaughan has been a much touted new talent in the music medium, and it was a pleasure hearing him in person. His particular blend of rock, blues, and even a little psychedelia has proven to be successful and timeless.

Of course it would be hard not to mention that the predominant style in which he plays is that of his predecessor, pioneer Jimi Hendrix. Also, most of the songs in his repertoire were Hendrix classics, the first of which, "Voodoo Child," set the pace of what was to follow. Yet, Vaughan's own songs were more traditional and not as extensive as those in the Hendrix warp. Vaughan's third song was kind of country in fact. But soon he was doing an instrumental version of "Little Wing," and a very authentic "Third Stone From the Sun." During that song, Vaughan demonstrated his thorough knowledge of his instrument. Playing those unforgettable leads, Vaughan got some strange sounds by rubbing and touching parts of his guitar with his silver bracelet. His guitar was real beat, almost as bad as Rory Gallagher's. But Vaughan's guitar screamed.

Stevie proved to be a master of technique, playing with his teeth, behind his back, on the ground, and sideways. He wears a serious hat that covers his face sometimes when he's playing and from a distance looks like a snoozing hombre playing his guitar during a siesta.

During "Manic Depression," Vaughan demonstrated that he could perform some pretty wild original stuff, playing with the backs of his thumbs. I hope that he continues to experiment and strives to take the Hendrix sound a step further. I recall Todd Rundgren doing Hendrix's "If Six Was Nine," on his 1976 Faithful album. Several Hendrix tribute bands come to mind; many can equal but none have surpassed the original. Stevie Ray Vaughan is terrific and I hope to see him continue to grow. His band, drummer Mike Landry, and bassist Tommy Shannon (formerly with early Johnny Winter), is very professional. They were well received by the huge crowd, and I'm sure they'll have a loyal following when they someday return.

Stevie Ray Vaughan is in a very favorable position now and I expect we'll hear some exciting stuff from this talented showman. Folks at the Nail were pretty transfixed with what they heard. If anything was amiss, it was the vocals on some of the Hendrix songs. It will be interesting to see if Vaughan can come up with lasting impact and a sound that can continue to generate the interest it did on Sunday night. The selections Vaughan has chosen have stood the test of time. Only time will tell if Vaughan will do the same.

Softball goes South

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

The batter stood in the box blowing bubbles and digging in the dirt with her foot as she took the sign from her coach at third base.

As coach Elaine Sortino watched from third, Debbie Coleg laid down a nice bunt and sped towards first. Pitcher Cathy Reed scooped the ball off the dirt floor at Curry Hicks Cage and threw Cole out. Sortino shouted some instructions and the team went through the situation again, but with a different batter.

Like teams all over the country indoors and outdoors (down South), the University of Massachusetts softball team is working, preparing for their 1984 season. UMass opens their season Saturday in South Carolina.

The Minutewomen begin their 39 game slate with a 12 game Southern swing in South Carolina starting with their first game Saturday against the Gamecocks, who finished third in the country last year.

UMass, which posted a 28-10 record last season and narrowly missed a NCAA berth, will face Bowling Green, Michigan State, Adelphi, Drexell, Rutgers and Seton Hall this week.

And UMass will be doing it with a seasoned three man pitching staff and 11 lettermen returning on a 17 man squad. UMass will have a letterman in every position except second and third base.

"The key to this season," fifth year coach Elaine Sortino said, "is to play hard and stay healthy.

"We're quicker than any other team I've had. We have good running speed and strong arms at every position."

Some of the strongest arms on the team are on sophomore pitchers Lynn Stockley and Cathy Reed. Stockley posted a 15-3 record with a 0.90 ERA last year. Stockley, a Northeast Division I All-American, tossed a no-hitter against UNH last year.

Reed, a righthander (Stockley is a lefty), posted a 13-7 record. In relief will be junior Krista Jensen.

"Lynn and Cathy are throwing far more pitches and hitting their spots well," Sortino said. The duo is throwing 300-400 pitches a day.

Jensen was also throwing 300-400 before she was hit in the knee by a line drive in practice Monday. Jensen said she should be throwing again by Saturday.

The Minutewomen infield will be a solid one. Sophomore Beth Talbott (.257 last year) will be behind the plate while Missy Oman, a Northeast All-American pick at second last year, will be at first base.

Second team All-American Allyson Rioux, who batted .314 with .964 fielding percentage, will anchor the infield at shortstop.

Sally Maher will be in the outfield instead of first base as UMass takes their Southern swing to South Carolina next week.

Freshmen Debbie Cole, Carol Frattarolli and rookie junior Lynn Pekarski will share duty at second base. Cole, Frattarolli and freshman Robin Reed will see time at third.

Ann King (c) and Amy Straut (1b) will also be available.

"We're as solid defensively as we have ever been," Sortino said. "We may have a few of those freshman jitters, though."

The outfield corp is led by 1982 second team All-American Tina Coffin, one of the team's co-captains (Rioux is the other). Sophomore Sally Maher, who batted .300 at first base last year, sophs Ann Ringrose, Janey Miller and freshman Emily Bietsch will all be vying for playing time.

"This is the best team we have put together since I've been here," Bioux said. "This isn't a nine man team. We have a good depth."

Is Hempel out?

Is he or isn't he?

University of Massachusetts sophomore forward John Hempel reportedly is transferring out of UMass to either St. John's or Villanova, both Big East schools and NCAA tourney teams.

Campus radio station WMUA and sources close to the team said yesterday that the 6-6 shooter was leaving Amherst Hempel, and coach Ron Gerlufsen could not be reached for comment.

Co-captain Andy Connors will anchor third base when the baseball team travels to New Mexico for spring break.

By SCOTT HOOD
Collegian Staff

For some UMass students next week will be spent lying on a beach somewhere in Florida. However, for the University of Massachusetts baseball team, their beach will be a desert some 5,000 feet above sea level and almost 2,500 miles from Amherst.

And no, their time won't be spent drinking beer but participating in the University of New Mexico Turquoise Tournament in Alburquerque against Wyoming, Delaware, Wisconsin, Southern Illinois-Edwardsville, and the hostschool, New Mexico.

Delaware, probably the best club going in, lost to James Madison in the Eastern Regional final last spring, coming within one game of advancing to the College World Series. Other good clubs will be SI-Edwardsville, who advanced all the way to the Final Four last year in Division II and Wyoming, which has spent the last week in New Mexico getting ready.

"It will be a tough tournament," said UMass coach Dick Bergquist, who will see his squad play doubleheaders on six straight days and 15 games total during the eight-day event. "Not only is it going to involve a lot of games, but a lot of tough games. It will force me to play everybody. Our primary objective is to get ready for the northern season, especially for the Atlantic 10. We all want to win, of course, but we have to get ready for our season here."

UMass opens their season on March 17 against Wyoming.

The Minutemen enter 1984 hoping to match, if not better, the 20-17 season of a year ago that featured one streak in which UMass won 12 of 13 games.

A Preview of the 1984 Minutemen:

INFIELD: A major duel is being waged at second base between Jack Bloise and Tim Foster for the right to replace the departed Dean Bennett. Bloise had only 13 at-bats in 1983, while Foster sat out last season due to injuries. Bergquist plans on letting the shootout continue out West.

"I'll let them fight it out hoping that whoever wins the job will beat out the other. But I am prepared to platoon if it comes down to it, but I'll rather see a winner," said Bergquist.

Another spot up for grabs is first base where incumbent Todd Comeau (.323, 6 home runs, 27 RBI's) battles Jeff Cimini, who batted .230 in 1983 as a freshman. Whoever doesn't play first will DH.

The left side of the infield is more than adequately covered with shortstop Angelo Salustri ("He'll be one of the best shortstops in the East" -Bergquist) and third baseman Andy Connors (.292, 10 stolen bases), one of two co-captains.

OUTFIELD: The three expected to start the season are Bruce Kingman in left, Steve Messina in center, and Bill Follansbee in right. Follansbee replaces the departed Chris Waszczuk, who set a UMass record with 11 home runs in 1983. Kingman and Messina batted .211 and .225, repectively, last spring, figures that Bergquist says must be improved.

"We need more offensive punch from the outfield. We're going to miss those 11 home runs of Waszczuk. Both Kingman and Messina are capable players."

PITCHERS and CATCHERS: The ace of the staff is expected to be southpaw Tony Presnal, the other co-captain, who was 5-2, with a 4.93 ERA. Other starters include Bob Kostro (4-5, 4.40 ERA in a staff leading 61.1 innings pitched), Scott Foster, who was used mainly as a reliever in 1983, and Jim Knopf, a transfer from a community college in New Jersey. The top reliever will be Matt Subocz. Freshman Steve Allard, reportedly impressive in early workouts, could surprise.

Catching, which was platooned among three players in 1983, is Olympic hopeful Todd Ezoid's for the taking. Other catchers are Dan Clifford and Sean Flint, a freshman with a great arm.

UMass opens their Northern season March 31 with a doubleheader at Temple.

Hoop postponed

The intramural basketball playoffs were cancelled last night due to the snow. The women's finals will be played tonight at 8 p.m. and the other games will also be played tonight.

The men's semi-finals, the co-rec finals and the grad-fac finals will be held tonight. Call the intramural office for times and any questions.

Meeting set to discuss sex discrimination case

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

Both sides in a University of Massachusetts sexual discrimination suit will discuss the case for the first time in a meeting scheduled to be held in Boston tomorrow.

Rosemarie Struther, the Associate Director of the Office of Planning and Budget, and John L. DeNyse, vice-chancellor for Administration and Finance are scheduled to meet with the Federal equal Employment Opportunity Commission (FEEOC) to discuss charges of sexual discrimination which Strother filed against the University in May 1983.

Strother filed the charges with both the FEEOC and the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination after she was denied the position of acting director of the budget office last spring. She specifically named DeNyse in her suit.

The closed meeting tomorrow will bring her face-to-face with DeNyse, whom she said she has not yet spoken to about the charges.

"I'm optimistic. I think I have enough evidence to support my case. I think we have enough materials, but you always worry about what the other side has in their back pocket," Strother said.

Strother, who has been the associate director of the Office of Planning and Budget since 1979 and a University employee since 1966, was passed over for the acting director's position last March. She claimed she was denied the position, which was given to a man, on the basis of her sex.

The position was filled by Paul Page, then director of Financial Affairs in Whitmore.

Strother said she isn't sure what to expect at the meeting tomorrow and that all she knows is both parties will be given a chance to present their side of the story and see if some kind of settlement can be reached.

Strother has asked the administration to transfer her somewhere else within the University, at a position of equal value to her current one. While she is not seeking a monetary settlement from the University, she said she is looking for the University to pay her legal fees (which so far total $750) and compensate her for the months she performed the duties of acting director but was only paid the salary of associate director.

Strother assumed the duties of acting director of the office but not the title in November 1982, she said, when Marie Reid then assistant chancellor and director of the office, announced she was resigning from her position.

Reid cited racial discrimination as her reason for leaving and later came to an agreement with UMass Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey to take a one year leave of absence, thus creating the opening.

DeNyse could not be reached for comment.

Pending legislation threatens state funds for abortions

By MIRIAM ZOLL
Collegian Staff

State funding for all abortions could be eliminated if a proposed anti-abortion amendment, currently in the House, is passed by the Massachusetts State Legislature.

The amendment, first passed in January 1983 by a 113-56 majority vote, will probably be a binding referendum on the November 6 ballot if it is approved by the state legislature a second time.

Marsha Humphrey, a spokesperson for the Massachusetts Organization for the Repeal of Abortion Laws (MORAL) said there is a "good chance" the amendment will pass because the House is "overwhelmingly anti-choice," and there has not been enough political pressure from pro-choice groups.

"Pro-choice and reproductive rights groups are multi-issued," she said. "They aren't as focused as groups like the Moral Majority. We don't have that constant steady pressure on our legislators."

Humphrey said recent statistics indicate 79 percent of Massachusetts residents favor abortion and state funding but because the "pro-life people are more vocal and active," many legislators are under the impression that "anti-choice equals the majority."

Rick Vigeant, a senior and member of the Committee for Equal Rights and Reproductive Freedom (CERRF) at the University of Massachusetts said the amendment would give the state the right to prohibit abortion and limit funding and services. The cuts made in funding and services "would affect low income and minority women who can't afford abortions themselves," he said.

If the amendment becomes a binding referendum and passes in November, Massachusetts would become the first state to have an anti-abortion amendment in its Constitution.

CERRF member Kim Nissan said that since Massachusetts is a liberal state, "if it were to pass anti-abortion legislation, it would set a precedent for other states to do the same" and this "would have a domino effect."

Vigeant said the amendment will "probably become a referendum, but will most likely be voted down." But, he said, "if anti-choice people get organized and pro-choice people don't, you never know what could happen."

According to CERRF and MORAL, which is changing its name to Mass Choice because many people confuse it with the conservative organization, the Moral Majority, a statewide rally, titled "Voices for Choice Day," is scheduled to be held on March 28 at the Boston State House.

"The rally is an effort to convince the legislature not to pass the amendment for the second time," Humphrey said.

Two or three years ago politicians with pro-choice stands were afraid to be vocal, she said, but today it would be "suicidal" for a politician running for a statewide election to be anti-choice."

Women's and reproductive rights groups throughout Massachusetts are urging people to attend the March 28 rally to show their support for state funded abortions.

Humphrey and Vigeant said women and men can write letters to their representatives and local newspapers, and lobby their legislators and register to vote.

UMass works with China

By MARY-SHEILA LOUGHLIN
Collegian Staff

The ambassador from the People's Republic of China will be at the University of Massachusetts today to announce a joint publishing project between UMass and the People's Republic of China to compile a Chinese-English dictionary.

UMass and the Peking Institute of Foreign Languages in the People's Republic of China plan to make a new comprehensive Chinese-English dictionary with the assistance of a Chinese word procesor donated by An Wang of Wang Laboratories, Inc. Wang is also a member of the Massachusetts Board of Regents of Higher Education.

The project is based on a Chinese-English dictionary published in 1978 by the Peking Institute for native Chinese. American language will be used in the new dictionary rather than British English.

Chairman of the department of Asian languages and literature Shou-Hsin Teng said the goal of the project is to produce a dictionary for the English-speaking world that will serve as the chief research, learning and reference aid for Chinese studies.

Twenty percent of all American students studying in China are UMass students; the University has about 80 Chinese students and scholars there this year. Also, 50 UMass faculty administrators have visited or taken part in exchanges with the People's Republic of China.

Chinese Ambassador Zhang Wenjin will begin his visit to the UMass campus at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall Stage at 11 a.m. He will be welcomed by Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey and a music and dance presentation will follow. There will then be an announcement of the Chinese-English Dictionary Project with a press briefing.

A reception in honor of the Ambassador and UMass Chinese students and scholars will be held at noon in the University Gallery of the Fine Arts Center.

The guests will tour the computer center and the graduate research center. A luncheon will be held at the chancellor's home in the ambassador's honor.

A press conference was held yesterday at the chancellor's home in honor of Leonard Woodcock, labor leader and first U.S. ambassador to the People's Republic of China John K. Fairbank, noted sinologist and Harvard professor of history emeritus.

Other guests include Joan Kennedy and the wives of the two guests of honors.

Nestle must pay $30,000 fine for illegal dumping of wastes

LITCHFIELD, Conn. (AP) - The Nestle Co. was fined $30,000 yesterday after pleading no contest to charges that its New Milford plant illegally dumped 250,000 gallons of untreated food waste into the Housatonic River.

John Dropick, head of the chief state's attorney's unit investigating violations of environmental law, said the fine was commensurate with the act.

An arrest warrant was served on Francis Doone, vice president in charge of development, who pleaded no contest yesterday on behalf of the corporation to one count of discharging waste without a permit and one count of discharging waste in excess of the allowable limit.

Nestle's plant, which makes cubes of boullion, instant chicken soup and other dehydrated food products, dumped an estimated 250,000 gallons of untreated waste into the Housatonic River between Dec. 20 and Dec. 23, 1983, without DEP approval, Dropick said.

The company bypassed its industrial wastewater treatment facility while it was undergoing repairs that since have been completed, Dropick said.

The incident was referred to state prosecutors by the Department of Environmental Protection's water complaince unit, which had been notified by the company that it didn't intend to seek the necessary DEP permit for the dumping.

McGovern drops out of race;

WASHINGTON (AP) - George McGovern is out of the race for the Democratic presidential nomination, but he feels redeemed and says he won't be silent.

Even before he ended his second White House campaign following his third place finish in Tuesday's Massachusetts primary, McGovern was looking ahead to a new career as businessman, university president or even secretary of state.

And he vowed to keep on speaking on the issues he raised in a presidential bid which began last Sept. 13 to the sound of skepticism and the suggestion that he might become "the Democratic Harold Stassen," a perennial hopeless candidate, running just for the exercise.

The question now is whether McGovern will endorse one of the survivors of the Democratic campaign. He kept the suspense alive, promising to discuss "what my future role should be" at a news conference in Washington today.

Gary Hart, who won in Massachusetts and who was McGovern's campaign manager when McGovern was the Democratic presidential nominee in 1972, saluted his former mentor in a statement distributed in Washington.

"It is a special joy of this campaign that the country has come to recognize in George McGovern the decent, principled and strong man those of us who stood with him saw in 1972, before the distortions began," Hart said. "He has renewed the call to conscience. His presence has enriched the debate."

McGovern, 61, staked his campaign on Massachusetts, the one state he carried in 1972, along with the District of Columbia. He said he would quit if he didn't finish first or second Tuesday.

His 21 percent of the vote gave him a third place finish, behind Hart and Walter F. Mondale.

"In no previous political campaign have I ever had more peace of mind and warmth of soul than I have experienced in this uphill, but deeply satisfying campaign of 1984," he told supporters in Boston after the returns were in.

Senate delays prayer vote

WASHINGTON (AP) - A bid to set a Senate vote soon on a proposed constitutional school prayer amendment fell apart yesterday when one senator said he was being denied the right to vote on anything but the version President Reagan wants.

Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., sought unanimous consent to set a vote today on a proposal strongly favored by Reagan allowing vocal organized prayer in the nation's classrooms. Baker's request would have permitted no amendments other than one added by the Judiciary Committee, which would bar government officials from composing any school prayer.

"This senator stands for silent prayer in the public schools. This senator does not support audible, vocal prayer...or the concept by which some prayer can be written by anybody. What Baker wants to do is narrow a major debate in this country affecting hundreds of millions of people to one question," Dixon said.

Unable to win agreement for a vote on the Reagan-backed proposal only, Baker said he would begin scheduling votes on amendments. He said he felt compelled to try to schedule a final vote after 10 days of Senate debate on the issue because "you can negotiate forever, but finally the Senate must work its will, and it's time to begin that."

Equal rights on the court; the kids know the score

TEMPLETON — When an elementary school basketball tournament tried to exclude girls, some of the boys refused to play if Jennifer Corby wasn't on their team — and they made the adults back down.

"I didn't think it was fair," said 12-year-old Jennifer, a starter for John Briggs Elementary School in Ashburnham before her team took the floor yesterday against Orange Elementary School to open the three-day Narragansett Regional Elementary School Invitational Basketball tournament.

"I tried out for the one team there is," she said. "I practiced very hard for it and made the team fairly, and they can't take that away from me."

The sixth-grader wasn't the only one who was upset by the initial decision by Naragansett school officials to ban girls and a later move — after parents threatened a sex discrimination suit — to cancel the tournament for fourth, fifth and sixth graders.

Flynn delivers check to family of slain man

BOSTON — Boston Mayor Raymond Flynn went in person yesterday to present a check for $843,498 to the family of James Bowden to settle compensation for Bowden's death at the hands of two city police officers.

"He presented the check to Mrs. Bowden at her home" in the Roxbury section of the city, said city spokeswoman Judy Coughlin.

The action ended a complex case in which Bowden, then 25, was shot dead in January 1975 after two policemen sought to halt his car because they said it resembled one used in a Cambridge robbery.

A U.S. District Court jury in 1978 awarded $750,000 to his wife, Patricia Bowden, in a civil rights suit against patrolmen Dennis McKenna and Edward Holland. The check yesterday was to cover the award, attorney fees and interest.

Since the two were on duty, they asked the city to pay.

However, Police Commissioner Joseph Jordan refused to complete the payment process during the administration of former Mayor Kevin H. White until assured the money would not come from his department's budget.

Flynn had promised shortly after his election last fall that the city would pay because it was morally right.

Authorities charged with strip searching

LOWELL - A 11-year-old boy suspected of stealing money from a teacher was strip-searched in a school bathroom after he denied doing it, a suit filed in U.S. District Court alleges.

The suit contends that Gertrude Bailey, principal of Lincoln Elementary School in Lowell; Vincent Bomal, a Lowell police officer, and another unidentified officer deprived the fifth-grader of his constitutional rights to be free from unreasonable search and seizure.

The Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts, representing Hippolito Masa and his mother, Aurora Roman, filed the suit in federal court in Boston Monday asking for $150,000 in damages from each defendant.

"The courts have made it very clear that students do not shed their constitutional rights at the schoolhouse door," Howard Friedman, attorney handling the case, said yesterday.

Nurse pleads innocent to assault of patient

LYNNFIELD - An executive stricken with Lou Gehrig's disease is alert and could well have watched a private nurse pull the plug on his respirator and tell him "You're going to die," his wife said yesterday.

The nurse, Victoria Knowlton, 35, of Rockport, has pleaded innocent to assault with intent to murder in the case and is due back in Peabody District Court for a hearing Monday. she is accused of trying to kill William Cronin Jr., 59, of Lynnfield.

"He has a very, very keen mind," Cronin's wife, Eileen, said in a telephone interview yesterday. "This disease does not affect the mind."

Asked if her husband could have been aware of what was going on last month when the nurse allegedly pulled the plug, she replied, "Definitely."

Cronin did not want to discuss specifics of the case and wouldn't say whether her husband actually saw what happened. The incident allgedly took place at 12:35 a.m. on Feb. 17. Two sons, James and Ronald, were home at the time, she said.

The state alleges that Knowlton moved the respirator away from her patient, shut it off and told him, "You're going to die," according to Nan Kelleher, a spokeswoman for the Essex County district attorney's office.

"She then sat down and smoked a cigarette," Kelleher said. "Then the nurse went to the victim's son, who was in another room, and said, 'Your father is dead.'"

The son tried to revive his father and called the police and an ambulance before noticing the respirator was switched off, said Kelleher. Cronin went into a coma and spent a week in Salem Hospital.

Cronin said the family did not know how long the respirator was shut off. Asked if her husband had wanted to die, she said, "Absolutely not."

Knowlton, who was released on her own recognizance, said nothing during her arraignment Tuesday and has declined to comment.

Student participation boosts primary turnout

By KEN BAZINET
Collegian Staff

The strong showings of Sen. Gary Hart, George McGovern and Rev. Jesse Jackson in Amherst's presidential primaries on Tuesday were the result of solid local organizations endowed with skilled leadership.

In Amherst Hart took 32 percent or 1,737 votes; McGovern received 25 percent or 1,353 votes; and Jackson earned 19 percent or 1,027 votes. Some 5,498 voters or 34 percent of Amherst's electorate turned out for the primary despite the snow.

News Analysis

Statewide, with 2,118 of 2,196 precincts reporting early yesterday, Hart had 239,364 votes or 39 percent; Walter Mondale 158,013 or 26 percent; McGovern 128,841 or 21 percent; Sen. John Glenn, 44,555 votes or 7 percent; and Jackson had 30,793 votes or 5 percent.

The success of Gary Hart is directly related to the participation of students in his campaign. Hart's organizers reported that volunteers from about 25 Massachusetts colleges and universities were greatly responsible for getting voters to the polls.

The Hart strategy was not new to presidential politics. In 1972, George McGovern was able to win primaries and caucuses in 10 states including Massachusetts, New York and California by keeping a loyal cadre of student volunteers in the field. McGovern earned the Democratic presidential nomination that year simply by transporting his volunteers from state to state. The strategy was engineered by McGovern's campaign manager, a 35-year-old Colorado resident by the name of Gary Hart.

David Nelson, Five College Coordinator for "Students for Gary Hart," said that when the campaign was in its infancy a Hart victory looked unlikely, but with time came candidate exposure which helped build a local student volunteer organization. Nelson, a UMass senior, claims he organized about 150 students, many of whom have traveled all over New England to work for Hart.

But Nelson is the first to admit that Hart's success thus far cannot be attributed simply to the work of student volunteers.

"People just melted together," he said following his candidate's 40 percent statewide victory.

For George McGovern, a third place finish in Massachusetts was enough for him to bow out, but he told a gathering of supporters in Boston Tuesday that he plans to remain public on the military buildup in Central America and the growing military budget.

He also said he would like a job as Secretary of State or as a university president or chancellor.

Locally, McGovern had some visibility in recent weeks. Several leaflet drops were completed and many phone calls were made asking voters to consider the former South Dakota senator in Tuesday's election.

Jackson's local showing is also a result of a strong organization. Several organizers said the local volunteers are dedicated to Jackson and have provided a strong base in Western Massachusetts. Jackson is expected to drop out of the race in Illinois if he does not make a commanding showing in that state. Jackson is a resident of Chicago.

Students want 'Minuteman'; mascot gets 3-to-1 support

By LISA MARIE CANTWELL
and PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

By an almost three-to-one margin, students at the University of Massachusetts have voted to retain the "Minuteman" as the school mascot

The question was on the same ballot with which students Monday and Tuesday elected Jim Keller and Rick Patrick as new co-presidents of the SGA. Although polls closed at 6:30 p.m. Tuesday, as of last night, SGA election officials had not counted results for either of the two remaining referenda questions or the Campus Center Board of Governors elections held on the same ballot.

The Undergraduate Student Senate did not meet last night because school was cancelled. Elections for senate speaker and SGA treasurer were postponed.

Mindy Ordway, Elections Subcommittee chairwoman, said turnout was 3,542, or about 17 percent. Last year, 4,838 students cast ballots over the same two day period.

The two remaining non-binding referenda questions on the ballot offered a choice between a rearrangement of the present bus service and an increase in both the fee and service. Students were also asked if they "feel adequately represented by the student government."

The question of changing the Minuteman mascot was initiated by a group of students who protested to the SGA that the revolutionary soldier was militaristic and sexist, said Scott Stern, assistant to the senate speaker.

Senate speaker Chris Sullivan yesterday said problems with counting the ballots arose Tuesday night after the polls closed, when around 10 students worked to count the ballots but left at about 10 p.m. when the result in the presidential election was determined.

"You have to count them as soon as possible," Sullivan said of the SGA Constitution's deadline for election results. "The problem is there weren't a lot of people to count ballots and most of the people were there to find out who won the presidential election, and left after counting them."

"It mostly ended up being people who were interested in seeing one candidate or the other win," Sullivan said of volunteers who counted ballots Tuesday. He said there are only three members of the Election Subcommittee, which is charged with conducting the election.

The candidacy of Tim Rudolph and Donna Dooley received 965 votes, 29 percent of the total cast, finishing second. Gumby and Camel ended in third place with 256 votes, eight percent. John Michaud received 144 votes, four percent of the vote.

Engineering professor honored

A University of Massachusetts professor of civil engineering has been elected to the rank of Fellow within the American Society of Mechanical Engineers.

A member of the society with over 10 years of active engineering practice, Professor Robert R. Archer now joins the seven other Fellows on the engineering faculty at UMass.

Archer has made many contributions to the field of engineering, including his pioneer development of numerical and computerized solutions for problems involving thin elastic shells, his work involving growth stresses in trees and a series of monographs on wood technology.

"His reputation as a classroom teacher is excellent. He is an active supervisor and supporter of graduate students," said Clive Dyms, the UMass civil engineering department head.

On an international scope, Archer has taught as an invited professor in India, Melbourne, Costa Rica, Ireland, and France. While at the Technisicle Hochshule in West Germany, he lectured in the native language.

Before coming to UMass in 1959, Archer was an assistant professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, where he received his bachelor's and doctorate degrees. He left MIT and transferred to teach at UMass, he said, because, "I felt as though I was still a student there."

Student seeks legislative seat

By DAVID LINTON
Collegian Staff

Some students wanted to be co-presidents of the Student Government Association (SGA);others wanted seats on the Board of Governors; but one University of Massachusetts student is running for state representative.

Neil McCabe, 18, is a freshman political science major who is seeking the Republican nomination for state representative in the 10th Norfolk District of Franklin-Bellingham-Blackstone Counties. The Franklin county resident is seeking the seat being vacated by Charles McNally, D-Franklin.

"I'm doing this for the experience and I'm doing this with politics in mind," McCabe said. "I'm excited about it."

McCabe faces a field of seven contenders for the seat which includes six Democrats and one Republican opponent. McCabe admitted his chances of winning the seat were slim but said he was optimistic.

"I have about a 10-to-one chance, but that will get better and better for me. I'm the underdog obviously," he said. "It's going to be an exciting year."

McCabe said he decided to run after hearing a representative from the Republican State Committee speak at a UMass Republican Club meeting two weeks ago about the possibilities and the need to get a Republican in the state legislature.

If elected, McCabe said he would support legislation to deregulate small businesses, increase salaries for public school teachers, initiate rule reform and improve fiscal responsibility. McCabe also said he is considering transferring to another school to be closer to his district.

McCabe said he doesn't think being a student will affect his academic responsibilities or ability to serve as a state representative. Although the Legislature is in session all year, McCabe said state legislators actually work about four months a year because of the number of legislative recesses.

The young hopeful said he has been active in Republican politics at both the state and local levels since he was in junior high school and high school, when he campaigned for Republican candidates. He said he is running, in part, to revitalize young people's interest in the Republican Party.

"I want to bring that (interest) to the young people. All they ever hear about is Nixon, I feel the Republican Party can do a lot for the state," McCabe said.

McCabe said he wants to complete the semester before getting "tied down" campaigning. He said he will begin campaigning in the summer but added that he will be going home on weekends to talk with Republican Party officials "to smooth things over." He said friends and relatives will help finance his campaign.

NEED HELP WITH YOUR STUDENT LOAN?

If you've attended college on a Guaranteed Student Loan or a National Direct Student Loan made after October 1, 1975, consider spending a couple of years in the Army.

If you train for certain specialties, the government will release you from 1/3 of your indebtedness (or $1,500, whichever is greater) for each year of active duty.

Obviously, a three-year enlistment cancels 100% of your debt. But if you sign up for the Army's exclusive two-year enlistment option, we'll still cancel 2/3 of your debt.

Plus, you may be eligible for generous educational incentives.

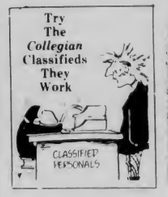
Vigil to protest nuclear arms

People from the Amherst community and five nearby towns will be travelling to Washington, D.C. this Sunday for the Western Mass. Pentagon Vigil, to make a peaceful statement against nuclear weapons and certain government activities.

The participants will travel by car pool, and will meet at 7 p.m. Sunday, at St. Stephen's Church, in Washington. The church has provided space for sleeping and cooking.

Beginning Monday at 6 a.m., the group will stand in shifts before the Pentagon until the vigil ends at 6 p.m. on March 23.

So far there are 15 people going on the trip, the minimum number needed to maintain the shifts for a constant vigil. More people are welcome according to group coordinators Kenton Tharp and Jennifer Heald, a UMass student. Each member of the group is asked to bring some type of food in bulk and their own bedding.



The week of peaceful protest was inspired by the Atlantic Life Community, "a loose knit group of people and organizations concerned with issues of justice and nuclear weapons," Tharp said.

The group will hold a preliminary meeting at 6:00 tonight at Tharp's home, 110 Sandhill Rd. in Amherst. Those interested in joining the vigil may attend the meeting or call Jennifer Heald, UMass coordinator, at 253-5143.

Planning to go to LAW SCHOOL?
CONSIDER HOFSTRA UNIVERSITY'S SCHOOL OF LAW
PRE-LAW SUMMER INSTITUTE

The Hofstra University School of Law will offer a "Pre-Law Summer Institute" for five weeks from May 29 to June 28 for the weekday section and for the evening section (both of which are held on Tuesdays and Thursdays) and from June 2 to June 30 for the Saturday section. The Institute will be of value to those already planning to attend law school or those still undecided. Taught by the Hofstra Law School faculty, the Institute seeks to develop analytical skills and to introduce the student to the law library and legal writing techniques. These are essential tools for competent performance in law school. The Institute will be conducted in the same manner as regular law school courses and will include case and statutory analyses and research techniques.

On graffiti on the walls

To the Editor,

To the student who scrawled graffiti on my office door:

Do you consider yourself an adult? When you think about it, that was an action of an eight-year-old in a blind temper tantrum screaming in rage for instant gratification. If you resent the inaccessibility of administrators when you want them to be there for you rather than when they are regularly available, you show the symptoms of a very "spoiled brat" who believes the world should cater to and grant every wish under any and all circumstances. That is a belief from the world of fantasy, and such expectations are unreal. Grow up. I feel sorry for you if you believe that because you scribbled the filth anonymously you will never have to answer to your conscience for this sort of primitive, cowardly insult.

Communicate with me in an adult, mature fashion and you will not lack any attention you need and desire. Follow the directions on my door and your requests or needs with respect to the Five College Interchange system will be addressed and met to the extent that University and Five College regulations can make that possible. I welcome the inquiries of any student needing help with Five College questions as long as they are made in a courteous manner, and will always bend over backwards to help in any way I can because I believe in the Five College system and think it's terrific and want to help any student wishing to take advantage of it. Come in and talk to me as one decent person to another and you will not leave dissatisfied with my efforts to help you with any Five College problem. If my hours are inconvenient to you call and make an appointment.

The need for sensitivity

To the Editor,

It was close to 5:00 p.m. and we were walking through the Student Union. As we glanced upward and we saw the banners hanging from the balcony, we immediately stopped dead in our tracks. One of our initial reactions was shock, the other was to rip this bright yellow Jesse Jackson '84 campaign banner down. The banner was designed with a rainbow, obviously symbolizing Jackson's rainbow coalition, and a Star of David. However, no one from the Jackson campaign seems to have the same story on what exactly that symbolizes.

A star formed by two triangles has been a symbol of the Jewish people for thousands of years. It symbolizes hope and is seen today as the main character on the flag of the Jewish state, Israel.

The Students for Jesse Jackson responded that the Star of David is only a six pointed star. When this argument was unacceptable to us, they informed us that the Star of David was easier to draw. But to the dismay of the Students for Jesse, 14 concerned students attended their meeting that very evening to protest the use of this symbol. The Students for Jesse decided it best to remove the Star of David from their banner.

Initially, we were impressed with how the campaign was sympathetic and sensitive enough to do this, yet we were quickly disheartened by their need to gain political leverage by this act. The removal of this banner was contingent upon two of our representatives sitting down with two of theirs to write an article reporting that how out of good faith, the Students for Jesse were conciliatory toward Jews. One can certainly see the benefits of such an article. And although we wrote and signed this article, it was not submitted to the Collegian for printing. The president of the Students for Jesse Jackson could not attain endorsement by his superior within the campaign itself. Thus, we felt the need to inform you of this event that began so positively and ended on such a sour note.

We find this entire escapade to be extremely unfortunate. It serves to perpetuate the tension present between Blacks and Jews today. Not only should a Star of David never have been placed upon a political campaign banner, but a campaign which purports to encompass the full spectrum of a "rainbow" should have been keenly sensitive to these needs as well.

We appreciate and commend the final willingness of the Students for Jesse to remove our symbol from their banner. It is, however, truly a shame that so much talk of positive things coming out of this situation has resulted in nothing more than a superficial political fiasco.

Action's don't match words

To the Editor,

Lately, President Reagan has been hitting the religious circuit, advocating prayer in public schools, and a ban on abortion.j

In a March 6 speech to the National Association of Evangelics, in Ohio, reported in the New York Times, Reagan said "in recent years, America did seem to lose her religious and moral bearings — to forget the faith and values that made us good and great...Today our country is seeing a rebirth of freedom and faith — a great national renewal."

A brief review of some of Reagan's actions in office is necessary to cut through the double talk and expose the hypocrisy behind his remarks.

It was Reagan, the "religious man," who ordered 1,800 marines into Lebanon. Nearly 300 have died, for no apparent reason.

It was Reagan who ordered day and night shelling of Beirut and Syria with 16 inch shells, each shell containing enough fire power to turn a row of houses into a crater full of rubble.

It was Reagan who vetoed bills that would make human rights progress mandatory in El Salvador before sending that country military aid, and El Salvador is a country which utilizes death squads and torture as part of its governmental policy.

It was Reagan who ordered military equipment to be sold to Guatemala, a country that exterminates its indigenous population in Nazi-style death camps.

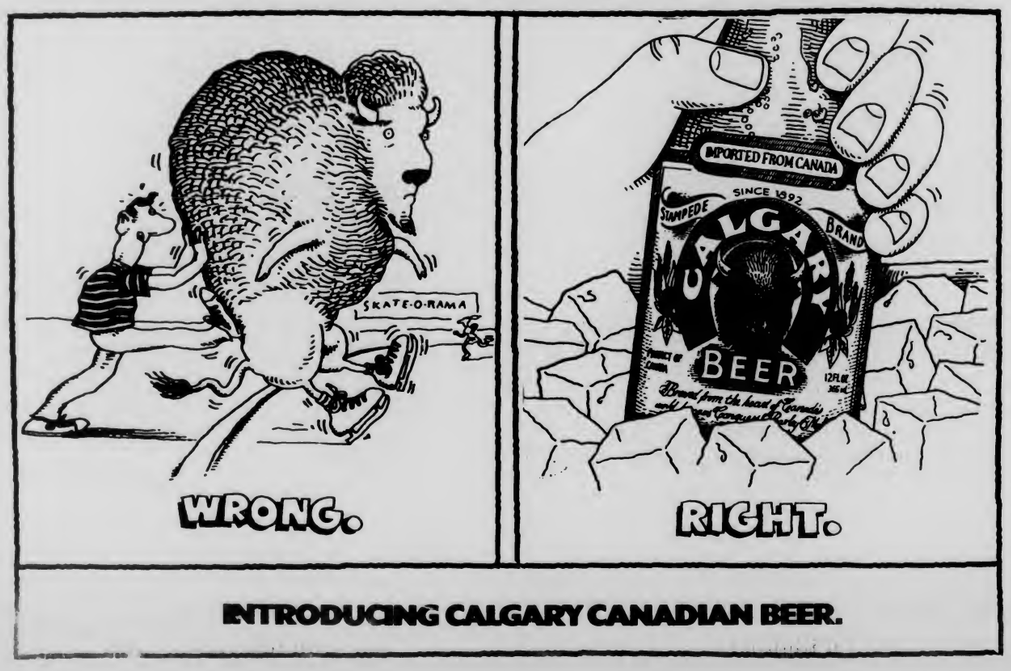
It was Reagan who ordered the marines to blast their way across the tiny island of Grenada, and they did so, bombing a hospital along the way.

It was Reagan who ordered school lunches away from hungry children, cut back aid to the poor, the elderly, the unemployed, and spent hundreds of billions of dollars on arms that could destroy the planet.

It was Reagan, in many instances, who seemed to think he had the right to label any people he disliked as a "threat to democracy and our vital interest" then shoot them.

This same man, two days ago, said abortions cause a fetus "excruciating pain" and abortion should be banned by the constitution.

Perhaps it is time for Reagan, instead of casting stones at others, to think about the murder and repression he has ordered and supported through-out the world. I know of no religious doctrine that advocate the crimes he has committed. Most call it murder.



If Reagan is as religious as he purports to be, he should pray forgiveness. He should pray that God has the mercy, compassion, love and kindess that he himself apparently lacks.

More foresight needed in tax decision

It has recently been proposed to provide revenues for the maintenance and acquisition of equipment in the School of Engineering by establishing a special fee for Engineering students. Such a tax would certainly yield short-term benefits, but how does the proposal conform to our sense of fairness and our desire to act with the greatest effect? These questions are considered below.

Equity. Engineering may be in need of equipment, but so are many other disciplines. Are the less "attractive" (at least in terms of current student demand) to go without needed equipment because they are not in a position to levy a tax? As a comprehensive university, do we support programs simply as a function of their taxing potential, or do other values govern our decisions?

Second, given that the majority of students receive financial aid, and given that available aid is finite, we must choose one of two equally undesirable courses: either we shift aid from non-engineers to engineers to compensate for all or part of the increased cost of attendance resulting from the tax, or we require engineers to pay the increased cost without increased aid. In the former case, non-engineers are taxed for a benefit they do not receive. In the latter case, engineers are given proportionately less assistance in meeting their cost of attendance than are their peers. In neither case can it fairly be said that the customs and traditions of educational equity are observed. The problem is more acute today than in the recent past, for the increasing gap between the cost of attendance and available aid threatens the ability of an increasing number of students to meet the cost of even a public education.

It may be argued that student engineers, because of their presumed earning potential, can afford a small premium now in return for training which may yield greater income later. This argument, however expedient, begs the essential questions of equity which ought to prevail in the Academy. The "future earnings" argument tends to favor the practice of selection of major based on perceived current market demand. This tendency has proved short-sighted in the past, and seems to run counter to a public university's obligation to promote the common good. We may have the power to guarantee that student engineers will pay a tax, but can we guarantee that Engineering (or any other discipline) will maintain its market strength in perpetuity? Can we guarantee that students who have chosen Engineering at age 17 will still find it satisfying later in their lives? Taxes tend to be non-refundable.

Given the increasing pace of technological change, it does not seem practical to suggest that long-term equipment needs can fully be anticipated. Engineering will always have equipment needs, but will it always have the ability to raise taxes to meet them?

Taxation is an odd beast. Of all terrestrial species, it has proven to be the most resistant to extinction. Even the mighty Thunder Lizard eventually fell, but as far as is known no tax has ever suffered the same fate. The fossil record shows that the species has steadily increased in size and vigor, and even the most carefully engineered laboratory specimen is likely to flourish in the wild. Even the bansai will grow if its roots are not faithfully trimmed. Who among us can predict the skill of tomorrow's gardeners?

It is the assumption of the author that this campus seeks to act with both equity and practicality. Despite the obvious good intentions of its authors, adoption of the equipment taxation proposal would demonstrate the error of that assumption.

We purport to be a university of some quality and resourcefulness. Ultimately, we seek to secure equity, practicality, and decent equipment. Given even an average portion of leadership, we ought to be able to manage it.

Defense budget - Why the fuss?

Sheila Tobias

The most striking aspect of the 1985 defense budget as it was presented to Congress by President Reagan this month is not its size — although it now tops the $300 billion mark and is well on its way to having trebled in 10 years — nor its priorities which, as in the past several years, sacrifice military readiness, maintenance and even pay increases in favor of the purchase of new hardware; nor even its anticipated consequences for increasing federal deficits, higher interest rates for borrowers, and inflation. The most striking thing about the new budget is its unabashed and unabated commitment to the very nuclear standdown that the public and the Congress have been trying to curtail for the past two years.

The public debate on the nuclear freeze notwithstanding, the largest increases in the 1985 budget are for continued "modernization" of the nuclear arsenal. Every one of the services is being funded to enlarge, make more destructive and increase the survivability of its nuclear striking force.

The Navy will have $14 billion more this year than last, earmarked in large part for the continuing production of two $2.5 billion Trident nuclear-missile carrying submarines per year. Begun 10 years ago, the Trident program with boats bearing up to 24 missile tubes, each carrying up to seven separately targetable hydrogen warheads, is fully on schedule. If nothing intervenes, the United States will continue producing two Tridents per year and the full missile complement for each well into the 1990s.

The Air Force will have $18.3 billion more this year than last, largely to pay for the initial production of two very controversial new nuclear delivery systems, the B-1 bomber and the MX missile. Both, while heavily debated, delayed and even in the case of the B-1 briefly cancelled over the past several years, are also back on schedule.

By the end of the 1985 fiscal year, if this budget is approved, we will have 34 fully loaded new hydrogen bomb-carrying bombers and 40 new land-based missiles, an addition of more than 1,000 nuclear warheads and bombs to our strategic arsenal.

The point is that the defense budget, as reflected in the new proposals, in no way corresponds either to public sentiment or to Congressional resolutions on the issue of national security. While the public has been agitating to reduce our commitment to nuclear weapons, the military has proceeded with a business-as-usual budget request.

That is the nature of the budgetary process. A total of $305 billion in defense outlays does not represent any new thinking about defense, not even a coherent military package. Rather it is a ganglion of individual service-oriented requests to keep doing more, much much more of the same.

The intensified nuclear orientation is revealed not only in what the Pentagon is asking for, but also in what it is not. Departed from view is the idea and funding for a Rapid Deployment Force of troops, a non-nuclear organizational unit able to move quickly toward hot spots around the world to stave off the kind of escalation that might result in nuclear confrontation.

In contrast, $427 million is being recommended for a new round of communications systems' "hardening" against the anticipated electromagnetic effects that would accompany the detonation of nuclear weapons on our territory. The purpose of such an expenditure is to make possible what the President has called a "protracted nuclear war." For unless and until military communications can be made to survive the first nuclear exchanges, the military cannot with confidence plan to continue launching our remaining nuclear force.

Also on the rise is militarization of space. Allocations for this kind of "advanced project research" have increased in the 1985 proposed budget from $1.8 billion to $3 billion, largely to pursue such exotic new weapons concepts as lasers (focused beams of light), particle-beam weapons and the President's "Star Wars" technology for outer space. Technology for emplacing our military satellites in space and for shooting theirs out of orbit is also getting a big boost this year even though we have two formal agreements with the Soviets not to emplace weapons of mass destruction in space and not to develop anti-ballistic missile systems anywhere.

The budget, in short, being an internal document developed to satisfy the military itself, is part wish list, part continuing commitment to bases, weapons systems and programs that are too well-entrenched to be removed. The issue for critics, then, is not simply how to eliminate waste, fraud and abuse, but how to make the defense budget conform to the public's will.

Letters

An apology for another

To the Editor,

I usually don't have the time to read the Collegian — but when I do, the Editorial/Opinion page usually attracts my attention. And, I was sorry to read the "disillusioned" letter from Paula Jewell (March 6th) regarding the manner in which she was received by an administrative office — NOT Civil Engineering, however. It behooves all of us who: serve students and depend on their enrollment in our departments/schools and university for our job security to facilitate problem-solving on their behalf by welcoming them into our "homes-away-from-home" and simplifying their lives which almost every day see a crisis of some sort. And, I feel the need to admonish my peers when they lack the kind of courteous behavior which they themselves often complain about not receiving from faculty and other administrative officers on the campus. The situation seems to be a revolving door — each person taking out his/her frustrations on the individual who they perceive having lesser value.

On behalf of my associates, therefore, I offer an apology for their abrupt and less-than-civil attitude to Paula — and thank her for making public her observations. I hope that this doesn't happen again to her or to others — but if it does, I also encourage students to openly question it so that these unpleasantries can be stopped.

Mascot 'unintentionally' sexist

To the Editor,

I found myself offended by Charles Francis Carroll's slander of the Minutemen of the Revolutionary War, in the March 13th Collegian. The Minuteman does not symbolize war, but our willingness to fight for our rights as individuals, such as the Civil Rights leaders of today. The Minutemen were brutal because they had to be. They were farmers who were up against the greater numbered and experienced British troops. Indeed, our Minutemen were almost wiped out until the French trained them how to fight properly and with discipline.

The term 'Minuteman' is sexist unintentionally. Society had not yet matured to the fact that women and men were equals then. Nearly all the soldiers who were Minutemen were male anyway. Would Mr. Carroll's group prefer that we re-write all our history books to read Minute-its? As far as the Minuteman being also a racist symbol, that too is unintentional. The majority of Minutemen were white (not all, mind you), mainly because there were very few free blacks in the American colonies. I'm happy to say that society today is growing away from that attitude, however slowly.

Mr. Carroll, I do not agree that the Minuteman is a degenerating symbol of our society, but rather, it is a proud one. Yes, our history has many ugly brutal facts, but we must not close our eyes to that. Your argument Mr. Carroll is a good one, but it is unfair in that you don't show both sides of the issue. I am proud of the Minutemen and our heritage, because without this, our government would never have gotten a chance. Though not perfect, without our government or the men who gave their lives to defend it and us, we wouldn't even have the right to voice these opinions. Which is a great deal better than what other societies have.

Arts

Trailers
by Andy Gordon

Early in the year is traditionally a sparse period for quality films. The major studios usually plan their release closer to the end fo the year, when the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences nominating board will have them fresh in their minds. Around this time we usually get the quickie, fast payoff flicks, like Porky's. This year is different, however. The end of last year wasn't particularly hopping, as evidenced by the recent Oscar nominations; but past months, there have been a plethora of good films on the market. Sure, there's been Angel and Weekend Pass and whatever other trash the rinky-dink distribs are preparing, but that market is always around; what's interesting is the quality the majors have in current release.

The two A.M.C. theatres at the malls currently have eight good pictures running. Against All Odds, which Columbia Pictures was kind enough to provide a ton of press info for, is a romantic thriller that has been garnering lots of positive critical notice. Night Editor Cris Schuster assured me the film is a laughable waste; but I figure she doesn't know what she's talking about. A remake of the great 1947 Kirk Douglas picture, Out of the Past, the film has an impressive list of credits. Taylor Hackford directed, which is reason enough to catch it.

Hackford came out of a documentary start to direct the fantastic Idolmaker, a little-seen but greatly appreciated "small" film. His next picture was the hugely successful An Officer and a Gentleman, which I could have taken or left but which nevertheless was finely directed. Starring in Against All Odds' love triangle lead roles are Jeff Bridges (the thinner, better actor of the clan), James Woods and Rachel Ward. In smaller roles are Swoosie Kurtz and Saul Rubinek, who never fail to turn in fine performances. I've been told by Columbia that it's very important to note that the film was shot on location in the Mexican ruins of Chichen Itza. It's not particularly important to me, is it important to you? Music for the film should be good, with tunes from individual Genesis members and alumni Phil Collins, Mike Rutherford and Peter Gabriel; and other songs by Stevie Nicks and Big Country.

Other good films out now are Blame it on Rio and Splash. I caught both this week and was dually inpressed. Splash is the first film from Touchstone Films, the new grown-up subsidiary of Disney Productions. Apparently the film blew doors off of all Disney's previous box office records in the first three days. And for good reason. Daryl Hannah stars as a mermaid and Tom Hanks the young man she follows to New York. The film is warm, innocent and very funny. Daryl Hannah is reason enough to see the film several times, but it's also nicely directed (by Opie Taylor) and features broad supporting performances by SCTV alums John Candy and Eugene Levy.

Blame it on Rio is also cute and diverting and does feature some good performances; but unlike Splash's original feel, Rio drips commerciality. It's really little more than a slick, big-budget sex film, with 17 year-old Michele Johnson shedding her clothes often and for little reason. I'm certainly not opposed to seeing Michele Johnson take off her clothes, but it would have been nice if the screenwriters could have thought up some sort of dramatic or narrative reason for her doing so. Michael Caine and Joseph Bologna complement each other extremely well and deserve a sequel just to work together again. Demi Moore (G.H.'s Jackie Templeton) is touching as Caine's neglected daughter. General Hospital stars seem to be turning up in feature films at an alarming rate lately.

I would like to have recommended two other recent films, but they flew out of town as fast as they came. Star 80 and Yentl are both character studies of interesting women and both are exceptionally well-made. I've never been too crazy about Barbra Streisand, but you just have to respect someone who can produce, direct, and act in any major film, much less a good one. Garrett Brown, inventor and operator of the steadicam, should also receive star billing. Yentl looks like a manual for what a filmmaker can do with a steadicam and a Louma crane. The camera never stays still; it zooms and tracks and sweeps along with stunning fluidity. Absolutely beautiful.

Rachel Ward counts Jeff Brides' teeth in Columbia Pictures' new release, Against All Odds, currently playing at the Hampshire 4 Theatres.

Bubba Smith flips a police car in the Ladd Company's upcoming comedy, Police Academy.

Star 80, on the other hand, looks nice, but is a very grim tale indeed. The true story of Playmate and actress Dorothy Stratton and her jealous, homicidal husband Paul Snider. Mariel Hemingway and Eric Roberts are phenomenal in the lead roles. Sad and touching and sympathetic. Director Bob Fosse paces the film flawlessly; you know what's going to happen and where, and as you approach that moment the film gets unbearably tense and nervous-making. Fosse's up there. Turning up in small roles are G.H.'s Alan Quartermaine and Jake the lawyer.

Coming soon from New World Pictures, the Corman exploitation factory, is Stephen King's Children of the Corn. Based on his short story in Night Shift, the film is set in a small, fundamentalist midwestern town, taken over by murderous little rascals. The photography looks excellent and the flick's advance promotion, a crayon drawing of children wielding bloody butcher knives, went up on our refrigerator the day it came in. Children shouldn't be one to miss and I'll predict the film does very well. In fact, I predict that a year from now low-budget horror flicks will make a full-scale comeback.

Speaking of Rocky Horror, Boston fans of the film may soon have to go to Danvers or Natick or some other Godforsaken suburb to see it from now on. Boston's historic Exeter St. Theatre is tentatively scheduled for destruction. The beautiful old theatre, built as a church in the late 1800's, will be converted into a condominium if a 2.5 million dollar sale is approved by the Back Bay association. The slimebag Sack corporation threw the first blow by opening its Copley Nineplex last month. Located only two blocks away, Sack sought to destroy the Exeter, as well as the Nickelodeon, Brattle and Orson Welles theatres, by outbidding them on their usual fare. Sack Prez A. Alan Friedberg may be a very wealthy man, but he'll never be as excellent a guy as Exeter manager Chuck Smith.

Coming from Warner Brothers and The Ladd Company on the 23rd is a terrific new comedy called Police Academy. The ad campaign may lead one to assume the film is just another low-class, exploitation sex comedy; but it's not. It has some of the elements those films center on, but it also has so much more. It is clever, very funny and has a true warmth for it's characters; the laughs never come at the expense of these characters. This is the key to the success of this type of film. As with Animal House and Fast Times at Ridgemont High before it, the level of humor is elevated by the respect afforded the characters. Reaction to the picture, which was screened free to the college community Tuesday night, was overwhelmingly positive. Steve Guttenberg, George Gaynes (G.H.'s evil Frank Smith; remember him?), Kim Cattrall and Bubba Smith are part of the crack ensemble cast. In appropriate casting, Georgina Spelvin, star of The Devil in Miss Jones, appears as a hooker.

I made a snide remark about Cris Schuster earlier in this article, but she just brought me an Oreo ice cream cone so I take it all back. The woman's a saint. Really.

Local Best Bets: The malls are hopping. Tank and Ice Pirates open tomorrow though. One is a stupid movie with stupid known actors and the other is a stupid movie with stupid unknown actors. The Calvin has Silkwood tonight for a buck and a half and Terms of Endearment (gag) starting tomorrow. The CCA tonight has Summer of '42, an excellent, excellent film.

TRAILERS Trivia: No one got the last question. Michael Cimino, director of The Deerhunter and Heaven's Gate, was the original director of Footloose, but was fired and replaced by Herbert Ross for reasons you or I may never know. A pair of tickets to Columbia Pictures' dynamite new release, Against the Odds, to the first person to tell me who director Taylor Hackford is married to and what she is semi-famous for. Have a good break.

Eugene Levy and John Candy's zany performances in Splash are just two of the highlights of Touchstone Films' wonderful new picture, now playing at the Hampshire 4.

Rice has big day but Sox lose

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. (AP) - Manager Ralph Houk of the Boston Red Sox is a firm believer in positive thinking.

Even after tough losses, he virtually ignores the negative.

So, it came as no surprise Tuesday when Houk shrugged off a ninth-inning bombardment of relief ace Bob Stanley in the Los Angeles Dodgers' 9-5 victory over the Red Sox.

"Stanley hasn't had much work, but he'll be okay," Houk said.

Then, changing the subject, the manager grinned and said: "Jim Rice had a pretty good week in one day."

That was one positive note no one could argue. Rice, the American League's 1983 home run champion, put on a long ball show for 3,470 fans at Chain O'Lakes Park.

Apparently still celebrating his 31st birthday last week, Rice doubled and scored on a single by Reid Nichols in the second inning, belted a 350-foot homer through the wind to left in the fourth and then drilled a long two-run homer to left-center in the fifth before retiring for the day.

While going 3-for-3 with three runs batted in and three runs scored, Rice hiked his average .409 while playing in all nine Boston games. He has driven in 10 runs and scored six.

"I still don't have it down, but it's coming," Rice said. "Spring training is a time to get your timing down, and that's what I'm working on."

The lack of defense can be attributed to many factors, Hempel's lack of quickness, the general lack of height or maybe just plain inability to match up well. Whatever the cause it was there.

Of course there was some good things that came out of the year. Victories over St. Joe's, UConn, the second half comeback against Temple, before losing the road win at Penn State that snapped a 33 game away loss streak, Green's gutsy performance (12.9 ppg, 6.6 rebound, A-10 all-star status) this year is a good memory, Neysmith's steady improvement into one of the East's better power forwards, the surprising confidence of point guard Carl Smith and his record setting (team and league) 212 assists. Don't forget the crowd at home, emotion plays a big part in UMass hoop.

In the future if wins are to abound one thing is needed--a big, big center. If not 6-11 Eric Fluery, then anybody. Tom Emerson, despite the media guide statements, is not the answer. He played only 27 minutes all year and took all of 2 shots. The backcourt with Russell and Smith seems settled. Sheehan, who in 21 games and 208 minutes took nine shots, should continue to ride the bench with Smith in the lineup. The offense isn't as smooth and the defense not as tight when the Jersey native is in there.

In the frontcourt, Neysmith now stands alone with the departure of Green and Hempel. Braun is a probable for next year and possibly Skip Connors of George Ramming. Hopefully the recruiting will be very good for that position.

MINUTEMAN MUTTERINGS: Neysmith finished in the nation in field goal percentage with a 59 percent mark. In the A-10 Green led in blocks (66), Smith was fourth in free throw accuracy, scoring-wise Hempel was eighth, Neysmith 14th and Green 15th. Neysmith was third in rebounds and as a team UMass' best stat was fifth in rebounding offense. They were last in defense.

Just a few thoughts...

It's tourney time in the NCAA's in what looks to be an exciting playoff. No surprise that North Carolina, Kentucky, Georgetown, and DePaul are the top seeds...It would be nice to see the Blue Demons win one for Ray Meyer in his last year, or even go as far as the second round...Georgetown has an extremely talented club and could take it all. They are led by the iron fist of John Thompson, not to be confused with the sequined mitt of Michael Jackson.

North Carolina and Kentucky also have that all-important depth, with the Tarheels featuring player of the year Michael Jordan and the Wildcats showcasing the twin towers--Sam Bowie and Melvin Turpin...As is the case every year, though, a couple get knocked out, and this year will be no exception. There are just too many other clubs gunning for these four and some will slip in...A couple of good choices for longshots: Wake Forest, who played in the tough ACC and did quite well, thank you.

Washington, who will be gunning for the "home court" in Seattle. Kansas, who may eventually play Wake Forest (if they make it that far), but Larry Brown has them playing tough...I still gotta stick with my choice since the beginning--Louisville. They've struggled this year but I still have confidence that Denny Crum will get them geared for the tournament.

As the spring breakers head for sunny Florida (is my jealousy showing?), they will join the baseball players for the spring.

The Major League season starts in a few weeks, and for some clubs will end in a few weeks...I wonder if the Sox will bat Boggs third, as they've been experimenting. He's a great hitter but has no power, essential for the third place batter. Jim Rice will have either Boggs or Evans in front of him and Easler behind him, so he could have another good year...The Expos didn't like the deal they got for Al Oliver. It seems that Fred Breining, the pitcher they acquired for Oliver, came to camp with a sore shoulder. The Expos didn't like the idea of getting "damaged goods". Doesn't it make you feel good hearing human beings described as luggage?

For pro hoop, not all the action happened on the court, as David Thompson was tackled at studio 54 and tore ligaments in his knee. He's out for the year, but he had a good time...Los Angeles is playing well again and really shouldn't face much competition to get to the finals. Utah and Dallas are good clubs, but don't have the playoff experience to match LA.

Finally, I'm so glad that someone exposed that evil logo we call the Minuteman. I mean, every time I see that sadistic mascot, I think of an ICBM, don't you?

Have a great break...
No more need be said.

He npel won't play for UM next year

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts' forward John Hempel will play his basketball somewhere other than Amherst next season.

Teammates Horace Neysmith and Carl Smith confirmed that Hempel will be leaving UMass for either St. John's or Villanova next season.

Hempel, the team's leading scorer for the past two seasons, has been the subject of transfer rumors for two years but prospered for the Minutemen making the all-rookie team as a freshman with a 16.2 average before dipping to 15.8 ppg this season.

The burly 6-6 forward came to UMass from Linden, New Jersey after choosing between Massachusetts and Seton Hall. He was a Basketball Weekly honorable mention All-American and led the Atlantic 10 in three point percentage as a rookie. He also set the UMass freshman scoring record with 470 points.

Massachusetts sports information director Howard Davis said yesterday he hadn't heard any "official" word of Hempel's transfer but said he too had heard rumors about his leaving.

"I haven't been officially told about it," said Davis, "But I can't say he hasn't either. He's gone home for the break and what his plans are after this semester I don't know."

Rutgers University, an Atlantic 10 conference rival for UMass, was mentioned by Smith as a possible option for Hempel but Davis said that the Scarlet Knights will not be getting the UMass frontcourtman.

Both St. Johns and Villanova would not make a statement about the situation. St. Johns spokesperson Katha Quinn said that transfers are not announced until all the paperwork is over and Villanova sports information director Craig Miller said that Wildcat coach Rollie Massimino has taken only one transfer in 14 years of coaching.

"He (Massimino) usually turns them (transfers) away, he doesn't want them," said Miller.

Both Neysmith and Smith said Tuesday night that Hempel was leaving with St. Johns and Villanova possible choices. With Villanova apparently out of the picture coach Lou Carnesecca and St. John's may have the services of the outside shooting Hempel after he sits out the year mandated by the NCAA for transfers.

Hempel, already at home for spring break, could not be reached for comment nor could coach Ron Gerlufsen, who must be stepping up his recruiting with the loss of center Edwin Green to graduation.

Whether Hempel can be successful in the Big East remains to be seen, but UMass fans can be thankful they witnessed two years of his exciting play in The Cage.

John Hempel makes a move to the basket earlier this season. The sophomore forward is reported to be heading out of UMass next season.

UMass basketball in retrospect

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

After a streak of five of 20 loss seasons, the 12-17 record posted by the University of Massachusett's basketball team this year should be cause for optimism among Minuteman hoop fans.

But losing the second all-time leading scorer in center Edwin Green to graduation and the impending transfer of two year leading scorer John Hempel could mean that happy days were here already.

Despite crawling out of the 20 loss pit, UMass did not label itself as a power in anyone's book. An eighth place finish in the weak Atlantic 10 (6-12) and a dismal 3-13 road record signal that there's still a way to go before actual respectability sets in.

The high point of the year came at home in The Cage. St. Joseph's, then ranked 21st, went down 93-89 to UMass as Hempel scored 29.

That was to be the peak however as the Minutemen went into a spiral, losing five in a row, including three straight at home. The low point came with a pitiful 74-64 loss to a terrible Dusquesne team in Green's final home appearance.

A win and a loss in the Atlantic 10 tournament meant little, the season ended in disappointment.

Looking back, the reasons are clear. UMass had no real center, Green only 6-7, gave away height nearly every game. As a result the half-court offense suffered as the guards were unable to find Green or forward Horace Neysmith under the hoop. This gave Hempel, supposedly a forward but never coming within 13 feet of the hoop, and guard Donald Russell reason to bomb away from the outside, often with good results and victories, but more often the lack of shot selection killed UMass.

Commentary

Hempel had no shot selection. If he got the ball he shot it, 442 times. That's 144 times more than any other teammate. He shot only 42 percent from the floor and despite the amount of shots, averaged but two points more then Neysmith who took 232 shots.

The bench strength, or lack thereof, also killed UMass. After Bobby Bruan and his five points off the pines the rest of the team was virtually non-existent to Gerlufsen.

Add up the totals for Jackie Sheehan, Craig Smith, George Ramming and co. and you see they scored only 133 points all year, out of 2021. Grim indeed.

UMass also received no help by shooting only 46 percent from the floor while allowing opponents a 50 percent average, and 75 points a game. No college team can allow that to happen and expect to break even, as Gerlufsen said his goal was many times.

Willy Stevens is shown here on the parallel bars in a match earlier in the year. The senior completed his competition and now has thoughts on the future.

A big year for Willy Stevens; and now a look at the future

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

Blisters are a thing of the past for Willie Stevens. And so are sore ankles, a bad back and callouses. The senior tri-captain for the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team, is graduating into the world of engineering and is leaving the gymnastics world behind.

For Stevens, who spent a "terrible, horrible" semester at Navy in Maryland before transferring to UMass, the memories are sweet but he's glad it's over.

"It's (gymnastics) a vague memory in the past," he said jokingly after his last practice as a UMass team member. "No, I don't know. I've had enough. I don't have to look forward to another September of getting into shape. September and October are the worst months because you come back expecting to do all the things you did in March. But, you can't."

That is one less worry for Stevens next year who would like to get into field engineering or return to Alaska where he worked last summer as a welder's helper on the pipeline. For the most part, gymnastics is over for Stevens and it is time to move on. His best times were the most recent ones.

"I think I've had the most fun this year than all of my four years," he said reflecting back. "The team got along really well this year. There was never a dull moment in this gym."

Stevens began gymnastics in ninth grade and in high school also played soccer and lacrosse. Although he liked soccer and gymnastics equally, he stuck with gymnastics in college.

"I was better at gymnastics than soccer in terms of everyone else. There weren't as many good gymnasts as there were soccer players so I had a better chance to excel. But, it turned out not to be the case at Navy because I hated it there so I transferred and everything went okay."

Instead of being a good influence, the Naval Academy was a bad influence on Stevens. He said he could not get into shape and had little desire to do well in school or gymnastics. At UMass, everyone was happy and Stevens has been a consistent performer in the all around in his three years here.

Stevens will still "run, lift, and peak in the gym once in a while" but says he has "no desire to compete anymore. His leadership and attitude in the gym will be sorely missed. Among his accomplishments in a Minutemen uniform have been winning four medals at the 15th Annual New England Conference Invitational Championships, and a fourth placing at the 1982 Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics Championships in the high bar with a 9.2.

Ambassador from China welcomed

By MARY-SHEILA LOUGHLIN
Collegian Staff

The first ambassador from Communist China to visit the state was welcomed to the University of Massachusetts campus yesterday by University officials and government dignitaries.

Speaking about relations between the United States and China and the joint compilation of a Chinese-English dictionary, People's Republic of China Ambassador Zhang Wenjin said "It is hopeful that this will lead to further enhancement of our relationship which will be to our mutual benefit."

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey and President David K. Knapp welcomed the ambassador to the University with speeches followed by a music and dance presentation.

"This special occasion underscores the longstanding interchange between the Amherst campus of the University of Massachusetts and the People's Republic of China," Duffey said. "As relations between our two countries extend to areas of economic cooperation, the University looks forward to expanded interaction with the Chinese-English dictionary marked a new stage in that cooperation."

Duffey said there are currently 35 students and scholars in China from UMass.

Duffey said the Connecticut River Valley has had a long history of academic relations with China. The first teaching missionary to China was an Amherst College teacher. From 1872 to 1881 more than 100 Chinese students attended school in the valley.

Duffey said today UMass is part of an active and growing exchange program with China.

"Not only do we have a softball, football, and basketball team at the University—now we even have a dictionary team," Duffey said.

Professor Shou-Hsin Teng, chairman of the department of Asian Languages and Literatures said "the new dictionary is specifically for Western scholars and students."

"The end product will be the first joint project to ever come out of both sides of the Pacific," Teng said.

Teng said at the end of five years a preliminary draft will be made of the dictionary and at the end of the sixth year it will be published in both Amherst and Peking.

Communication stressed for campus repairs

By LAURA YEE

The University of Massachusetts Physical Plant director says "better conimunications" is the key to improvement in the campus's overall condition.

Appointed three months ago as the Physical Plant's new director, Roger Cherewatti told the Faculty Senate yesterday his main objective is to bring the University up to better standards by creating a new work order control system, a personnel policy manual, a remedy for the deterioration of the campus's appearance and implementation of student employment for deferred maintenance.

"A new work order control system is a must. We presently have a five to six year backlog in repairs and renovations. Old ones will be sent back to be reviewed to see if they are really necessary," Cherewatti said. We want to develop a better decision making process when work orders come in. Engineers are spending too much time on irrelevant projects."

In his personnel policy manual, Cherewatti cited two areas that needed attention.

"I need more output from my employees. We need a strict and solid policy of employees. If you do your homework and make people aware the first time, you'll be more sucessful," he said.

Professor Oriol Pi-Sunyer said action must be taken in the safety of pedestrians after snow removal.

"The major priority is to clear vehicle traffic, not pedestrians. Some areas are not cleared at all. This is unnecessary and dangerous," Pi-Sunyer said.

Cherewatti said the Physical Plant has problems getting employees to come in for snow removal, expecially hand shoveling.

We could divide the campus into different sections and have contracts to commit students," he said.

Cherewatti said he plans to meet with the Vice Chancellors at a later date to discuss plans for improving the campus's physical appearance.

Cherewatti said without a good capital outlay budget, deferred maintenance gets worse.

"$24 million is in the process of being appropriated, and $21 million of it may be used for overall facilities." Cherewatti said.

Cherewatti said that with the possible funds from the budget and with proper planning, more renovations like the ones currently taking place in Goessman Laboratory can be done.

Cherewatti said an answer for eliminating deferred maintenance would be to employ students during the summer to do cleaning that short-handed staff could not do -windows, floors etc."

Student Government Association co-president-elect Rick Patrick said students would want these jobs if offered.

Student studies Kenyan mass media

By MARANN CASSELL
Collegian Staff

Every year, thousands of students leave American colleges to study abroad.

Among those students was Gregory L. Anderson, a Hampshire College senior with a double major in communication broadcasting and journalism and a minor in African Studies.

Anderson has returned from his one year stay in Kenya, made possible by a grant from the Haymarket Fund Foundation and Hampshire College.

He said he studied Kenyan mass media and found radio to be the primary source of information with television the second.

He said because of financial and economic constraints, networks are costly to operate and maintain.

He said it is also expensive for the majority of the people to purchase television

"Newspapers, films,and other source of the media are very important in Kenya, but when compared with radio they are rated on a lower scale," Anderson said.Television is a luxury item in America, but in Kenya radio is considered to be the luxury item, and because of that the radio stations are invested in heavily."

While in Kenya, Anderson said, he made numerous radio appearances on public affairs programs, speaking on the media and other forms of oppression he encountered in Africa. During that time he also served as East Africa correspondent for the African Globe News. He served as producer with Trans-World radio [EAST AFRICA] and as writer with the All-African press services [APS].

Anderson said he has written and published more than 30 articles pertaining to various aspects of the media.

"I have made two television appearances on NBC network news, and there are over 30 articles, profiles, interviews and autobiographies, that have been written and published by others regarding various aspects of my work," he said.

"I am presently serving as New England Correspondent for Africa Press International, and I am generally considered the leading figure of my generation in the area of Africa News and information system," he said.

1 killed, 70 injured in Amtrack wreck

BAINVILLE, Mont. — The westbound Empire Builder Amtrak train slammed into a loaded gravel truck at a crossing in northeastern Montana yesterday, killing the truck driver and injuring scores of passengers, authorities said.

Sixty to 70 people were injured, 10 critically, said Dennis Kleppe, batallion chief for the Williston, N.D., fire department.

A spokeswoman for Roosevelt Memorial Hospital in Culbertson, a few miles west of the derailment, said ambulances were bringing in the injured.

Roosevelt County Sheriff Dean Mahlum said he set up a command post at Culbertson. He said the National Guard at nearby Wolf Point had been placed on standby.

Randy Gilbert, an Amtrak spokesman in Washington, D.C., said the train's two locomotives and nine cars derailed about 10:50 a.m. west of Bainville. Four cars came to rest on their sides and four other cars were perpendicular to the tracks.

The reservation list said 140 passengers were aboard, but that list is not always accurate, Amtrak officials said.

Disabled miner murdered by girl

NEWARK, N.J. — A jury found a 15-year-old girl guilty yesterday of robbing and murdering a disabled coal miner attached to a life-sustaining oxygen tank.

The Superior Court jury of four women and eight men deliberated for three hours before finding Delphine Green guilty of felony murder, conspiracy to commit robbery and second-degree robbery. She showed no reaction when the verdict was Miss Green faces up to life imprisonment plus 40 years when she is sentenced April 16. She will be required to serve at least 30 years before being eligible for parole.

During the trial, the defense maintained she was no "angel," just a witness too frightened to stop the crime, which they said was committed by Miss Green's two companions

EDITORIAL/OPINION

A brief history of St. Patrick

Tomorrow is St. Patrick's Day, and somewhere tomorrow in Ireland a woman will tell a joke:

"Why did God create alcohol?" she will ask. "So that the Irish wouldn't take over the world."

Here in America and across the ocean, generations of Irish-Americans will also remember their brethren tomorrow, and they will join together in song.

It's kind of fun if you're Irish to know from which county in Ireland your family descends. This way you can ask your Irish friend. My own family descends from County Kerry, Ireland (it seems we've never had a family dog without an Irish name—Murphy, Percy, Clancy, Maggie), and I was surprised to learn upon asking a friend, Aileen O'Connor, that her family is from County Kerry too.

Paul Banks

My own great-grandmother, Margaret Fitzgerald (O'Brien) Diggin, emigrated by boat from Ireland to the United States in 1888 at the age of seventeen. She arrived in Boston, journeyed to Hartford, and settled in Amherst.

If you're fortunate enough to know anyone who's Irish, you already know that the Irish are an extremely proud people, full of life, character, and tragedy. This stems from the fact that Ireland has traditionally been an extremely beautiful but repressed country that has been conquered and reconquered by foreign people for hundreds of years (the Vikings were perhaps the first to invade Ireland, the British the last.) What you probably don't understand is why the Irish celebrate St. Patrick's Day.

According to A History of Modern Ireland, by Giovanni Costigan, in the year 342 A.D., the son of a Roman-British official named Sucat was captured by a band of sea raiders and taken into slavery. Six years later the youth escaped to Gaul, was converted to Christianity, and resolved to convert Ireland to the new religion.

Sucat became in time St. Patrick, Apostle of Ireland, the supreme father figure in Irish history. He succeeded in converting the country to Christianity in 432 A.D., and Saturday, March 17, is the anniversary of his death. We celebrate his memory and our Irish heritage. The Irish believe that on the day of judgment, St. Patrick will stand at Christ's right hand to intercede personally on behalf of his chosen people.

Letters

'Tis pity it's offensive

I am writing to protest the distribution and display of the offensive advertising for the current production, 'Tis Pity She's a Whore. Whether or not the poster accurately depicts a scene from the play—and I believe it does not—the community should not be forced to view, in every local newspaper and on billboards throughout the area, a picture of three smirking men prodding a dead woman's breast with a bloody sword.

Women are getting increasingly angry at the advertising industry's use of their bodies to sell products from tires to soft drinks to cheap magazines; surely we are entitled to expect better treatment from a University department devoted to the study of drama, based as that study is on the nuances of human feelings. Women are human too, and should not be everywhere confronted with one of the stock images of pornography: the contorted body of a woman, thrown down and discarded by the men who have used her.

Your poster goes even farther by showing the satisfied faces of the murderers gloating over the corpse, unlike the play itself, which provides violent deaths for most of the men too.

I have studied 'Tis Pity and am well aware of its dark and perverse nature; the quality of this production I leave to the critics to evaluate. Attendance at the play is optional, but there has been no escaping the posters and advertisements. In the future I hope the Department of Theater will consider the effect of its advertisements just as seriously as it oversees the quality of its productions.

School prayer story unfair?

On March 13, the Collegian published an article which was extremely opinionated, unprofessional and unacceptable. The Collegian's story on school prayer was not an objective, journalistic essay on a very important issue. Rather it was a biased editorial disguised as a news story.

The article quoted two University of Massachusetts professors who are very outspoken in their objection to prayer in our schools, but refused to consider the other side of the issue. The Collegian wrongfully assumed that there are no students or faculty at the University of Massachusetts who are in favor of prayer in our schools. There is no question this essay should have appeared on the Editorial/Opinion page rather than on page three.

The Collegian must realize that its readers rely upon it to present facts on issues in order that they may make intelligent decisions. In the future the Collegian Board of Editors must be responsible when deciding what news is fit to print and how it will be presented.

Correction on Regents

In a previous column I noted that the Board of Regents was set up in 1979. A subsequent investigation has alerted me to the fact that the Board was set up in 1980 and began actively administrating on the date of March 1, 1981. Tuition increases for 1979-80 and 1980-81 were implemented before the Board was in operation. The actual rises in conjunction with the Board's operations are 21 percent in 1981-82 and 16 percent in 1982-83, for a total increase of 37 percent in two years.

I apologize to the readers of this page and especially to the Board of Regents for this inaccuracy.

Johnson — man or myth?

Re the candidates for office in the upcoming election, it may not come as a shock to some, but most of them are lost, or spiritually deaf, dumb and blind as far as God is concerned. They need to be reoriented.

The erroneous church concept of Jesus is one of a long-haired saviour of abused persons. This has resulted in abuse to God changing, for one thing, the images of male and female into an ugly compromise with Satan.

President Reagan resists evil with evil, a biblical no-no, but hypocrites will reelect him. So ask candidates if they wear Satan's skirt over their pants, or the serpent's pants under their skirt. (I Timothy 2:14)

The deficit and Congress

President Reagan's proposed record deficit of $180.3 billion and the national debt of over $1 trillion are both too important to be shoved aside until after the election. Reagan is fond of attacking the "born-again budget balancers" who want to cut the deficit by "raising your taxes," but this is the wrong way to approach a problem that he is just as responsible for.

It is true that the budget is a victim of special interest groups, but is it fair to lay all the blame on the Democrats while at the same time refusing to compromise on taxes and defense? If we reelect Reagan and follow his questionable estimates, he still will have run up a cumulative deficit $534 billion greater than under all previous presidents combined.

Thomas Pitoniak

Reagan's budget will of course be altered in Congress. But if Reagan wants to attack those who would raise taxes he should be prepared to defend not raising them. After all, consideration of his administration's actions over the past four years makes the raising of taxes seem inevitable.

When Pres. Ron Reagan assumed office in 1981 he quickly confirmed his Administration's conception of government as, in his terms, the "problem" and not the "solution." This is useless because he was elected to lead the government, not destroy it. Reagan shoved a 23 percent reduction in personal income taxes through Congress to show he meant business. However, the difference between intake and outlays was already brought up. Could we afford to cut taxes with a deficit that was then $56 billion?

This question surfaced as soon as Reagan took office. Treasury Secretary Donald Regan immediately had to defend supply-side theory, that such incentives as tax cuts would lead to economic growth, trickling down to benefit those lower on the social and economic ladder. Despite the deficit, Reagan insisted, "This tax program cannot wait until budget outlays are reduced."

What about a loss in revenues? Even David Stockman questioned whether the tax cut should be put forth before a reduction in the deficit. And if Reagan was so concerned with people, did he ever see the results of a New York Times/CBS News poll released two weeks after he took office that said 70 percent of the respondents favored balancing the budget before a large tax cut? That same week a Mr. Otto Eckstein of Data Resources, Inc. spoke these prophetic words: "If it (the Reagan cut) works, it would be wonderful. If it doesn't we have got only one economy to sacrifice." (New York Times: Feb. 1, 1981)

Donald Regan's opinion that Martin Feldstein's Economic Report of the President, critical of high deficits, should be "thrown away" shows how little the Administration wants to admit it is partly to blame. But even Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker says that the high interest rates that result from deficits are a "loaded gun." Reagan believes that the dollar's overvaluation is hurting exports by making it too expensive to "Buy American." The trade imbalance is plunging the U.S. into [illegible] first time since 1971.

Regan has said, "I wish those economists would sit back and relax."

The Administration's request for a record $305 billion in defense funding for fiscal year 1985 is an outrage and a threat to any economic recovery. This is in fact detestable when one considers the Pentagon's ignorance of cost-effectiveness, and its habit of turning attention away from the rip-off of the American taxpayer by some well-known firms. A Pentagon audit of a single contract disclosed $39 million in excess charges.

Because it is an election year, Reagan will do anything to escape blame for a deficit that is largely his own work. According to the non-partisan Congressional Budget Office, if Reagan had left the laws alone we would have had an $11 billion surplus by 1989. By 1989 defense hikes will have nullified any possible gains from cuts in domestic spending. What about spending? The President's stand is the same: No to defense cuts and yes to social spending cuts. This is how to "get the government off the backs of the people."

But why should we worry, even if Democrats are "big spenders?" Reagan has denied that deficits harm growth or the reduced inflation of which he is so proud. On Feb. 15 Reagan was asked if it was true that deficits constitute "a serious threat to economic recovery," which his Budget Message sent to Congress claimed. His answer: "No...But that doesn't mean that I don't take the debt seriously."

Old rockers never die...

SCORPIONS
Love at First Sting [PolyGram Records]

GOLDEN EARRING
N.E.W.S. [PolyGram Records]

By ED BEEN
Collegian Staff

For over ten years, Scorpions and Golden Earring have been mainstays in the rock kingdom without reaching supergroup status. The two new efforts from these veteran bands insure that they will stay that way.

Coming off of last year's successful Blackout LP, Germany's Scorpions serve up more of the same on Love at First Sting. They've decided not to tamper with the established metal formula: Use three power chords and write lyrics straight from a teenage male crotch.

I just don't get it, Klaus Meine can sing, and Rudolf Schenker can obviously play guitar, but with lines like, "Ooh girl, I'm leaving you/Yes I'm leaving you/I've got to go tonight/Baby you shouldn't feel so blue," [from "I'm Leaving You"], how seriously can they be taken?

Singer Meine is quoted as saying about the new album, "Our music is still pure rock and roll. I can't see Scorpions getting too far away from that kind of music."

How right he is. Love at First Sting's best cut, the single "Rock You Like a Hurricane," is almost a carbon copy of last year's hit "No One Like You," with the dual guitar intro leads, and the pentatonic 1-3-5 vocal harmonies.

This is the band's tenth album, so they must have a following. But this record truly lacks the sting of earlier works like Virgin Killer and Lovedrive. More to the point, after 13 years as a band, why are these guys still writing tunes like "The Same Thrill," with such insightful lyrics as, "I remember when my teacher said/'How you wanna make your life?'/I said 'I can play guitar/And it'll be alright listen!' "?

Golden Earring [the dinosaurs who do "Radar Love"] seems to be searching for something different, but what that is, is unclear. Last year's megahit "Twilight Zone" exhibited a stripped down sound for the band, and that trend continues on N.E.W.S. [which stands for North East West South].

The main difficulty here is the attempt to fuse a strong dance beat with serious lyrics, but in both cases the songs go to such extremes that the album lacks focus. The eight songs on N.E.W.S. average almost five minutes apiece, and after 30 seconds of each, the listener gets the point and has to suffer through the other four and a half minutes.

Earring uses sparser instrumentation, and increased open guitar chords to simulate funk, and on a few tunes it works. "Clear Night Moonlight" has a nice "scooping" horn part, and on "Enough Is Enough" a strong beat lays the framework for good keyboard action.

Lyrically, guitarist George Kooymans and singer Barry Hay combine for decent insight, as in "Fist In Glove": "Fist in Glove/Don't wanna shake the right hand baby/Before I know what the left one wants," and the title cut "N.E.W.S.": "It's pitiful, shameful, all I hear, I read and see/Four directions of the wind, and four way misery."

Germany's rockin' Scorpions

Although N.E.W.S. falls short of successfully melding dance and thought, in Earring's defense, they are experimenting and looking for different sounds, something essential in music that really matters.

Gymnast Robin Low — practice makes perfect

By KEVIN DELUCA
Collegian Staff

The career of gymnast Robin Low, which started when she saw Olga Korbut on television in the 1972 Munich Summer Olympics, will end this Saturday as the University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team competes in the ECAC Championships at Burlington, Vermont.

Low never quite made the Olympics, but she has had a very successful career at UMass. Low was co-captain and team MVP last year as a junior and has been the top all-around again this year.

Out of the four events [vaulting, uneven parallel bars, balance beam, and floor exercise] an all-around gymnast performs, the floor exercise event is Low's favorite and best event. In it she gets to use her background in dance to good effect, as evidenced by the UMass school record 9.55 she scored in the floor exercise event against Springfield College earlier this season.

"First I started out doing acrobatics and dancing at around 10. Then when I saw Olga Korbut in the '72 Olympics I decided I liked that and that is when I got into gymnastics. I came to UMass as a dance major," Low said.

Low also came to UMass as a walk-on candidate for the gymnastics team.

"I came to UMass because I heard it had a good gymnastics program. I had quit gymnastics for a few years because I had a back injury and was frustrated. The time off helped. That summer [before college] I went to a camp. I had talked to Virginia Evans [the former UMass Coach] and I knew I would make the team," Low explained.

Low more than just made the team and that January asked for a scholarship and got it. Since then, she has been a mainstay for the Minutewomen and in her junior year was even ranked 19th nationally.

"I was always striving for perfection," said Low.

Asked to point to the highlight of her career, Low said it was tough to pinpoint one moment. However, she did mention the floor routine she did in the final home meet of her career against Southern Connecticut, where she received a standing ovation.

"I loved how the crowd reacted to me. I enjoyed knowing that I could entertain them," Low said.

With the Minutewomen only having an outside chance at making the NCAA East Regionals, the ECAC Championships figures to be Low's last meet.

"I am glad it is over. I am tired, my body's tired. It is time to be a student." Continued Low. "I made Regionals as am individual but I have decided not to go. Some people are not thrilled with my decision but I am the one who would have to go."

What does the Sports Management major plan to do with her future?

"For now, I am sure I will coach gymnastics. I have already been offered jobs but it is not something I want to do the rest of my life. Maybe I will go back to school," Low mused.

As a coach, Low sees herself as demanding, perhaps too demanding.

"Since I am a perfectionist, I tend to look for that in other people. I have trouble realizing that people may be doing something just because they enjoy it, not because they want to be the best or first," admitted Low.

As an avowed perfectionist, Low is bound to succeed at coaching or whatever else she decides to do.

Robin Low and the UMass women's team travel to Burlington, Vermont Saturday for the ECAC Championships. The meet figures to be Low's final performance in the Minutewomen uniform.

Jim Corbett: Tired of the same old routine

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

Despite all of the aches and pains, gymnastics has been fun for Jim Corbett but the senior is looking forward to the end of practices every day and life after graduation.

"It's been a hobby and enjoyable and all but I never had the time and I was interested in too many other things," the exercise science major said. "To be good in gymnastics you have to work all year long and work in camps during the summer. I've enjoyed what I've done with the sport."

Some concentrate on one sport along, but Corbett enjoys a variety of sports. "Leisure" sports are his favorites, including sailing, skiing and sailboarding ("it's a good way to meet girls"). For the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team, Corbett has been a consistent competitor, but now he feels it's time to spend more time relaxing and thinking of the future instead of competing.

"It's (gymnastics) a great sport, but it wears on your body," Corbett said. "It just wears and tears like every other sport I imagine and it's time to heal. I don't think missing gymnastics will hit me until about three or four months after I'm away from it. Right now, it's just time to get out."

The best times Corbett remembers at UMass gymnastics is the competing, and it is the times he will miss the most.

"I think competing is the funnest part of gymnastics itself and the friendships you get through the team are the two best things. Everyone loves to compete. I'll definitely miss competing but I won't miss the everyday practice-not for a while."

The Charestown native who now lives in Winthrop started gymnastics at a summer recreational program when he followed in a friend's footsteps. Corbett came to UMass without being recruited by the gymnastics team and tried out but did not make it because only two spots were open and there were many recruits. He stuck with it, working out in his freshman year with the assistant coach.

The long horse vaulting and still rings events have been his best events this year and made it into the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics Championship finals in the vaulting event with scores of 9.45 and 9.2. He finished in ninth place.

"I'll work out just for the fun of twirling around," said Corbett, who would like to get into a medical supplies sales position when he graduates. "I won't work out for a while. Some day I'll get back into it, maybe to coach but that will be years down the road. Years."

Cinderella Tourney

CHICAGO [AP] — Loyola Coach Gene Sullivan, snubbed by post-season selectors a third straight year, wants to lure the leftovers to an affair of their own, call it the Cinderella Invitational Tournament — and hand a silver slipper to the winner.

"We had a better record than 24 of the 32 teams playing in the NIT this year," said Sullivan, whose Ramblers finished 20-9 this season.

Sullivan has extended bids to the inaugural event to Bucknell 24-5, Illinois-Chicago 22-7, George Mason 21-7, Montana 23-8, Navy 24-8, Sanford 22-8 and Ohio University 20-8.

Workers claim exposure; will sue the University

By JOSH MEYER
Collegian Staff

Unions at the University of Massachusetts will go ahead with their class action grievance against the University administration today, due to a collapse in negotiations between the two.

The grievance alleges that union employees were exposed to dangerous levels of asbestos during the Campus Center removal project over intersession.

"The grievance was put in abeyance (unofficially withdrawn) so that the unions could negotiate with the administration first," said Alan Compagnon, shop steward for the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees (AFSCME) local 1776.

"Since these meetings have collapsed, the grievance is going back in effect," said Compagnon, who filed one of two claims.

The other claim was filed by the Institutional Protection Management (IPM) Union.

While the plaintiffs claim the university was negligent in complying with contract specifications that required evacuation once the asbestos level was higher than .01 fibers per cubic centimeter, university representatives maintain that they cannot be held liable.

Independent air samples taken outside the removal area indicate that the levels of asbestos were higher than agreed upon and plaintiffs complain that areas that should have been evacuated were not.

Robert Gartska, director of the Human Resources department of the university personnel office said "we have been engaged in meetings for some time, with the unions and any interested employees. We've done as much as we can in terms of addressing employee concerns, and I think we've done that."

"What has come out of the meetings is that both sides have the same concerns — we're trying to make this as safe an environment as we can," Gartska said.

Gartska could not be reached for comment on whether the University accepted any liability in the incident. Administration officials agreed to consider grievances discussed at an employee/labor relations meeting last Wednesday, and to respond by Friday. By the end of the weekend there was no response.

"After meeting with management, we've reached an impasse over the liability question," said Phil Matthews, an AFSCME representative. "Their stance is that no one was exposed to anything dangerous, and that they are not liable for any damages incurred."

Sam Brown, another union representative said that, "The unions who filed the grievance are looking for them (the university administration) to admit their negligence, and take responsibility for it. We don't think that is too much to ask, but it looks like it's going to be a tooth and nail battle."

Bus fee vetoed by students

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

Students at the University of Massachusetts overwhelmingly vetoed a fee increase to improve bus service in a referendum on the recent Student Government Association ballot, and sentiment was divided on whether the SGA represents students.

More than 77 percent of the 1,289 responses to the bus question indicated students would prefer the rearrangement of present routes, as opposed to a fee increase, to improve UMass Transit Service.

In response to the question of whether the SGA represents UMass students, 713, or 40 percent, of the voters responding said it did not, 709, also about 40 percent, did not know, and 340, about 20 percent, answered positively.

Suggestions solicited on the ballot included demands for more student input, and more communication with SGA officers through newsletters, said elections coordintor Mindy Ordway. Personal attacks on senate members were also submitted, she said.

A third referendum, proposing a change in the school mascot, was defeated by an almost three to one margin. Proponents of the change from the Minuteman emblem said the mascot was sexist and militaristic.

UMass sports teams became the Minuteman in the 1970s, when the name was changed from the Redmen following American Indian protests in New York State. An SGA poll with three options — the Minutemen, Statesmen or Artichokes — selected the new mascot, with the Artichokes finishing second.

Elections fill UM committees

Former contender Tim Rudolf may have lost his bid for the Student Government Association (SGA) co-presidency, but did not come away from the recent election jobless.

Rudolf captured the Central Residential Area seat on the Residential Committee with six write-in votes. He is among the more than 20 other newly elected officers on that committee and the Campus Center Board of Governors.

About 17 percent, or 3,542, students turned out for the March 13 elections. New SGA co-Presidents Jim Keller and Rick Patrick won 58 percent of the student vote and the team of Rudolf and Donna Dooley came in second with 29 percent. Voters were also asked to respond to three referenda (see related story).

Topping the list of BOG victors were Heidi Parks, with 781 votes, Frank McGovern, with 773 votes, and Eric Ericson with 751 votes. Also elected were Laura Koumjian, Dawn Butler, Sid Flynn, Kathy McWilliams and Jane M. Donohue, followed by Jeffrey Allyn Gray and Mary Anne Been.

Southwest Residential Area representatives to the Board are H.E. Kelly and David Agranat, with 232 and 238 votes each. James Kendall and Howie Breslau, with 239 and 246 votes, were elected that area's representatives to the residential committee.

Lynda Harbold took the Orchard Hill area residential committee nomination and David Zeller is the Northeast representative. David Southwiok won the Central area BOG seat, and Chris Wlash, a Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity member, won the Greek area seat as a write-in.

Other victors names were not available at press time.

Gay awareness week seeks to educate public on issues

By JENNIFER SKOGLUND
Collegian Correspondent

Gay issues are not for gay people only is the general attitude organizers say is behind the first Lesbian and Gay Awareness Week beginning today at the University of Massachusetts.

A workshop featuring issues in the workplace will signal the start of the event this afternoon.

According to Felice Yeskel, lesbian/gay awareness trainer for residential education east, a main goal of gay awareness week is to support, nurture and celebrate the lives of gays on campus.

"Most of the time, lesbian and gay issues are not attended to and are invisible on campus," Yeskel said. "We hope to draw a large crowd of heterosexuals and make it safe and comfortable for the diverse groups on campus."

Various workshops designed to highlight topics such as parents and friends of gays, bi-sexuality, and coming out will be featured.

Barbara Gittings, a 25-year member of the lesbian/gay liberation movement will speak on "What Every Heterosexual Needs to Know", at 8 p.m. Wednesday in 174 Campus Center.

Also planned are documentary films in the Cape Cod lounge and Campus Center along with the movies Lianna and Making Love.

Saturday's schedule has a variety of workshops, films and speakers from 9:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. in the Campus Center. Aids and concerns facing lesbians and gays of color are two of the topics to be covered.

Also in connection with the week's events is a one-credit colloquium entitled "Exploring Diversity: A Look at Lesbian/Gay Culture," offered by Yeskel. Those interested should attend a meeting at 6 p.m. Wednesday in the Dwight House lounge.

Paul Throne, treasurer of People's Gay Alliance (PGA) said people are nervous and unclear about gay issues, but this is the first opportunity for people to experience these issues in a safe atmosphere open to the University.

"I would consider the week a success if the same percentage of gays and heterosexuals, as true to life, turned out at the events during the week," says Throne.

Keny Poey, a staff psychologist from the Mental Health Center, believes Gay Awareness Week will be a chance to "start dialogue" about feelings that heterosexuals have for gays that are normally avoided or expressed in a hostile manner.

"It's finally time for it to begin," said Poey in reference to gay issues that are still undiscussed and dealt with irrationally.

For more information about the week's events call 545-0422, 5-0154, 5-2645.

Salvadoran voters harassed while at Presidential elections

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Salvadorans voted yesterday in a presidential election hampered by bureaucratic flaws that kept thousands waiting for hours in tropical heat, and punctuated by gunfire of the civil war it is intended to help end.

Leftist rebels, who call the election a farce and refused to take part, blacked out the capital and eight provinces by dynamiting power plants. But guerrilla activity appeared light and scattered, aimed more at harassment than preventing the vote.

There was a shortage or absence of ballots and ballot boxes in dozens of polling places around the country, including some precincts in the capital.

Ballot boxes were hours late in arriving at Sayapongo, where more than 15,000 people gathered. Some women fainted from the heat and the press of crowded lines.

As the vote was cast and slowly tabulated, the issue of who would win this Central American nation's first presidential election since 1977 was overshadowed by the bigger question of whether any candidate could bring an end to the 4¼ years of war that has cost more than 50,000 lives.

Eight men were in the contest, but by the time voting began at 7 a.m. it appeared to be a race between two leading candidates — Roberto d'Aubuisson, 40, an ultra-rightist who vows to crush the leftist guerrillas militarily, and Christian Democrat Jose Napoleon Duarte, 57, who favors negotiations. If no one wins a majority, there will be a runoff in a month between the top two finishers.

Results probably will not be clear until at least Monday because of a cumbersome reporting system designed, among other things to prevent fraid.

Press may scare rape victims

BOSTON (AP) — A defense lawyer in the New Bedford barroom rape trials said yesterday she doubts whether other rape trials will get as much publicity.

"I would say that it would be highly unusual for another rape trial to receive the attention that this one did," Judith Lindahl, the attorney for defendant Victor Raposo, said.

"This one received the attention it did because of the horrifying nature of the initial report," she said.

Raposo, 23, was one of four New Bedford men convicted of aggravated rape in connection with the gang rape of a woman in Big Dan's tavern in New Bedford on March 8, 1983.

Sentencing for all four was scheduled today in Bristol Superior Court in Fall River, where Judge William Young divided the case into two trials. Raposo and John Cordeiro, 24, were convicted Thursday. Daniel Silva, 27, and Joseph Vieira, 28, were convicted March 17.

Virgilio Medeiros, 24 and Jose Medeiros, 23, who are not related, were acquitted Thursday.

The trial received wide attention, including televised coverage by the Cable News Network. And prosecutor Robert Kane said he wondered if future rape victims might be reluctant to come forward after watching how the background of the victim in this case was scrutinized.

35¢ to dial 411?

BOSTON — (AP) — If New England Telephone gets its way, dialing 411 to get a telephone number could cost callers up to 35 cents.

The company is barred by a 1979 state law from even proposing to charge for calls to directory assistance. NET has asked the state Legislature to repeal that law so the company can seek Department of Public Utilities approval of a plan to charge for 411 calls.

"The plan has not been finalized yet," NET spokesman Chuck Reardon said, but chances are the company would propose the first three to five calls be free of charge, and subsequent calls cost 20 to 35 cents.

Students encouraged to vote in upcoming town elections

By DAVID LINTON
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts presidential primary is over, but students who are registered to vote in Amherst still have the opportunity to voice their opinions at the ballot box in the town elections next month.

Students among the 15,976 registered voters in Amherst "are not really cognizant of local elections," Town Clerk Estelle Matusko said recently. Many students who registered only did so to vote in the primary, she said.

The only contest in the Amherst April 10 election is for two seats on the Board of Selectmen. Three candidates, incumbent Richard Minear, Joan Golowich and Charles Ferguson are running for those two seats.

There are nine uncontested Town Meeting member seats. Five of those seats in Precinct 3, which encompasses Sylvan, Northeast, Orchard Hill and Central Residential Areas, are for three-year terms.

Matusko said the number of uncontested seats in Precinct 3 is not unusual and has been a persistent pattern since 1971.

Although the filing deadline for nomination papers for Town Meeting members has passed, Matusko said students may still run for Town Meeting seats by conducting a write-in campaign for any opening seat in their precinct.

Matusko said Town Meeting members usually work 12 to 15 nights a year, depending on the issues and the number of warrant articles that are to be discussed in a town meeting. Amherst has an annual spring and fall Town Meeting. The Board of Selectmen can also call a special Town Meeting, Matusko said.

Joel Weissman, director of the Student Center for Educational Advocacy and Research (SCERA), said he has been working on ways to reverse the pattern of uncontested seats in Precinct 3. He said he is considering conducting workshops to teach students about the town government, how to get involved and how some town issues affect students.

"Students are going to move off campus sooner or later and are going to confront high rents, low vacancies and other types of things," Weissman said. Students should also be concerned with child care, recreation facilities, bus services and water quality in the town, he said.

Joanne Levenson, director of the Off-campus Housing Office, said many students do not run for town meeting and do not vote in the town election because "students identify with the University of Massachusetts and not the town."

"It's not that students are apathetic, it's just that people, in general, don't concern themselves with local government. There is a big schism between local and national elections," she said. "They (students) should exercise some opinions on what they would like the town to be like."

Kurt Norwood, a Commuter Area Government member and a candidate for Town Meeting, said issues like rent control, town development and water quality in Amherst are student issues as well as town issues.

"Students themselves may come and go but the issues remain the same. It is important that these issues be heard and have the support behind them," Norwood said.

Although some students say they are not aware of local issues "in the same paragraph they will tell you about those issues that will piss them off," Norwood said. "They say they don't know about Amherst but they do."

Norwood said many students are reluctant to run for town meeting or to vote in the town election because they don't consider themselves residents of the town.

Senators say United Areas Council abuses system

By JOHN VINCENT
Collegian Correspondent

The United Areas Council, formed last year to unify the political power of the residential area governments in the Student Government Association, was attacked by SGA leaders for intefering with the affairs of the Undergraduate Student Senate and defended by its own members in recent inteviews.

While all senators asked said they feel UAC helps communication between area governments, some off-campus senators say the council has been used by its chairman, Tim Rudolf, to increase his personal political power.

SGA Treasurer Eric Nitzsche said "the theory behind the UAC is a very good one" but he added "the United Areas Council has been used by (SWAG co-president) Dave McCarthy and Tim Rudolf to gain power for themselves, and to make it a second senate through the area governments."

Senate Speaker Chris Sullivan said that despite the positive work done to unite the areas, the UAC has been used so that "people who lose a vote in the senate will go to another organized body with less knowledge of the issues, and push their bill through."

Rudolf, who is also Central area co-president and ran unsuccessfuly for the SGA presidency, rejected allegations of "personal power trips."

The SGA "should realize that area governments have a place in the government" Rudolph said. He believes area governments "are now a powerful force to contend with."

Now 1 and a half years old, the United Areas Council consists of the five area government presidents representatives from each area.

Rudolf, wrote the UAC constitution, said the UAC was formed as a result of the inactivity of the SGA President's Council, the now defunct official liason between the area governments and the SGA.

New SGA co-presidents Jim Keller and Rick Patrick have promised to re-establish the President's Council, but Rudolf said the UAC will continue because it specifically addresses residential issues, and the President's Council is

McCarthy, former vice-chair of the UAC, said "student empowerment can come from other places than the fourth floor of the Student Union."

He predicted "a residential (area) revolution bringing to light problems of the students."

"If Eric Nitzshe is worried that the UAC is eroding the SGA's power, perhaps it's an admission of a neglect of responsibility on the part of the senate to address the needs of the areas," McCarthy said.

Rudolf said the UAC was a member of the National College and University Residential Association. He said a bill passed in the UAC asks the area governments to halt passage of the SGA constitution until a residential representative was appointed to the committee to discuss administrative changes in the constitution before the Board of Trustees approves it. The UAC also helped coordinate area government help to students united to fight fires during the Crampton fire crisis, and worked on spring concerts and the Residential Judicial policy, Rudolf said.

Five-colleges offer classes

By BRENT SHORT
Collegian Correspondent

Many students are unaware that being enrolled at the University of Massachusetts makes them eligible to participate in what one student termed "an unbelievable opportunity to expand your horizons."

The Five College Student interchange allows students to take courses at any of the five area colleges — Mount Holyoke, Smith, Amherst, Hampshire, and UMass — without paying any additional tuition.

But although UMass is the only school with a Five College Advising Center, UMass also has the lowest percentage of its student body participating in the program, according to Carol Argus, assistant coordinator for information and publication at the advising center.

Hampshire College has the largest number of students participating in the interchange, Argus said. More than half of Hampshire College students took courses at another college last fall, she said.

In the same semester, 465 UMass students participated, but the large UMass student population makes that the smallest percentage of students involved of all the schools, Argus said.

Daphne Reed, the Five College Advisor at UMass, said registration "is extremely easy. The student comes in, selects a course from the listings we have, fills out the form, and with a few exceptions, never once has to step foot off campus."

Interchange is made easier by a meal exchange program, as well as shared library facilities, Reed said. Free transportation between the colleges seven days a week on busses and vans is supported in part by the Student Coordinating Board, an organization run entirely by students to encourage student interaction among the five colleges.

Students who have participated in the program are enthusiastic.

"Taking courses off campus is a great way to meet people you never would otherwise," said Tim Cenway, a psychology major.

Lisa Bartlett, who is applying to the School of Business Administration, said "This is my first time taking a class off campus (at Amherst), but already I know I want to do it again. It's great!"

The program is open to everyone except first-semester freshmen. There is no limit to the number of courses that can be taken at one of the other schools, as long as the student takes at least one three-credit course on the home campus, and the total number of credits does not exceed the standard maximum of seventeen credits. Grades and credits from courses are counted just as if the course were taken at the home school.

D.C. trip crucial

SAFA lobbies for aid

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

Most students at the University of Massachusetts need some form of financial help from their government to attend college, but few spend much time, other than when filling out their application forms, in working to ensure its availability.

However those who belong to at least one group on campus have for the past four years spent long hours working toward exactly that goal — and have met with considerable success.

Despite those successes, Students Advocating Financial Aid (SAFA) say next week's planned trip to Washington, D.C. to ask lawmakers to continue providing that money will be their most crucial yet.

"This is the most important trip," promised SAFA member James Shaw, former president of the group which in four years has made itself a national reputation for its unique straight-to-the-source lobbying efforts. "Whatever impact we can make on legislation is vital now."

The reason, he said, is termed "reauthorization." It is the once-every-four-years setting of funding policy, rather than simply the annual fight for dollar levels of the grant and loan programs. And with a president working to eliminate programs such as the National Direct Student Loan and Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grant, Shaw sees this period of re-evaluation as one of obvious urgency.

The Reagan administration's philosophy of "self help," Shaw said, would eliminate the grants in favor of a lower-funded grant program with less emphasis on the higher-needs student. And new emphasis on work-study aid would put more burden on students and their employers, who must provide 30 percent of their wages.

To make the trip to Washington, SAFA must go this week to the student senate, area governments, and the University administration to ask for funding. SAFA has already received $4,194 for 47 students to travel to and spend three days in the capital earlier this year.

Besides the need to provide a student voice in Washington during reauthorization hearings, current SAFA president Cindy Howland said she will also stress the practical experience students have gained from hands-on work on Capitol Hill.

"If we're going to stay in school," said SAFA supporter Chris Sullivan, speaker of the undergraduate Student Senate, "we're going to have to do something. Nobody is going to do it for us."

Firefighters will recruit volunteers

The Amherst Fire Department has announced that several vacancies in its citizen firefighting force will be filled in the next several weeks and interested town residents can apply.

The Call Firefighting Force, which comprises one third of the Department's staff, assists the full time force on structure and brush fire calls and other emergencies. Members are "on call" and are paid $6 an hour for training and alarm coverage.

Call force members operate a pumper and squad vehicle and attend mandatory three hour training sessions each Tuesday evening. Applications are available at the Dispatch Center, Fire Department Headquarters at 68 North Pleasant Street in Amherst.

Tree researchers may receive grants

Trustees of the Memorial Research Trust Fund of the International Society of Arboriculture recently awarded fifteen of their annual $1000 grants for research related to the care of shade trees.

Dr. Francis Holmes, Director of the Shade Tree Laboratories at the University of Massachusetts and Chairman of the ISA Research Committee, said recipients will be notified this month.

The society spreads information on the preservation of shade and ornamental trees: trees along city streets, on residential property, in parks and other public places, Holmes said.

Since 1975 three UMass scientists have received awards from the Memorial Research Trust Fund.

The Shade Tree Laboratories at the University of Massachusetts are part of the Cooperative Extension Service of the College of Food and Natural Resources. Research is conducted in Amherst and in Waltham and the laboratories aid the shade tree industries by providing information on such problems as Dutch Elm disease and advice on the use of pesticides.

Dr. Holmes explained the concern for shade trees when he said, "the value of shade trees is in the emotions they evoke." Remembering the role of the tree in poetry and American tradition he added, "a tree is worth as much as a person thinks it's worth."

IN 181 DAYS YOU COULD BE MANAGING ONE OF OUR CLUBS.

The Army offers an outstanding opportunity to recent graduates or seniors about to graduate with a baccalaureate degree in Hotel and Restaurant Management.

After you complete training successfully, you will be in charge of funds, personnel and property. You will be responsible for contracts with commercial suppliers, supervising planning, purchase, storage, receipt and use of food, beverages and other supplies. In other words, in 181 days, you're Management.

The requirements are a 4-year enlistment in the Army. You enter active duty at a base pay of over $668.00 per month, receive a small raise on completion of basic training. You then spend four weeks at Club Management School plus eight weeks of on-the-job experience. At the end of this training, you become a non-commissioned officer, earning approximately $16,100 per year including monetary allowances for food, clothing and housing plus medical and dental benefits.

College seniors can go on active duty after graduation, using the Army's Delayed Entry Program to assure a place in Club Management training.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Courting the Supreme Question

We are slowly sinking in an election year sea of diatribe, false promises, and utopian budget proposals. Not one of the major part-time or would-be presidents has addressed the question of Supreme Court appointments. This is the most important question of the 1984 elections. The next occupant of the wing chair on Pennsylvania Avenue will be with us for four (or at most eight) years, and yet, the legacy of the next administration could well last into the next century. The silence that is enveloping this issue is truly ominous.

John Gilman

The composition of the Supreme Court in the coming years will shape the course of American democracy for the rest of our lifetimes. We should think very seriously about what the election of each candidate would do to the direction of law, and cast our votes very carefully. A conservative Supreme Court lead us to a pro- big business, law and order future that would be very restrictive of personal freedoms. The "golden age" of civil liberties is already 15 years removed, it is conceivable that the values of that time will not be upheld by a new group of justices. Given the political attitudes prevelant at this time, civil rights, female equality, rights of the accused, and rights of the poor-and other such values may end up very low on the list of priorities of a new Supreme Court. Strike these values from the scrolls of American democracy, and the picture is not very pretty.

The Reagan record on these issues is less than impressive. His gutting of the Civil Rights Commission, his disdain for women's issues, and his now infamous contempt for the poor in this country hardly leave the impression of an American humanist ready to champion the cause of civil liberties. Couple this with the cold war myopia that pervades decision making in the present administration, and we have the recipe for the demise of individual rights. National security has been used unceasingly in the modern world as a legitimate reason for abrogating personal freedoms, and this country is no exception. The McCarthy era is a good example of how fragile the balance is between the two.

In our system of government the Supreme Court represents the last line of defense for civil liberties. A Supreme Court disinterested or outrightly hostile to these values could prove fatal to democracy in America. Even the most vocal opponent of the communist threat would not be easily reconciled to living in a society gagged and bound by an oppressive code of law. But this possibility is a very real threat if Americans remain indifferent. The Supreme Court's cape floats on the same political breeze as the rest of the country's. If the present crisis atmosphere continues to promulgate itself on the American horizon, we may very well see the perceived challenges of totalitarian states met on the home front with a judicial straitjacket. I, myself, am not willing to distinguish between the possibility of "the mild oppression" of an American authoritarian state and a totalitarian state, especially if my freedoms at home are crucified in the name of halting the march of repression. After all, what we are supposed to be defending is democracy.

Peace and rights are indivisible

The superpowers rush headlong towards thermonuclear annihilation in spite of the fact that nobody wants war. The arms race from its very beginning has been accompanied by the sweet sounds of disarmament negotiations. Yet there has not been a single act of real disarmament so far in either the East or the West, and the stockpiles of nuclear weapons are enough to destroy humanity a thousand times over.

Gabe Gabrielsky

Some liberal Democratic Party politicians would like us to believe that the USSR is neither as heavily armed nor as warlike as-well, as it actually is! These liberal peace politicians fear that any destabilization of the bloc system raises the danger of war, internationally, and that any criticism of the Eastern bloc will divide the peace movement domestically.

It is time that we joined with our opposite numbers, the students and working people of both Eastern and Western Europe, to demand collectively of our respective governments that they disarm and dismantle the bloc system. And since I am an American, I say: Out of NATO! To wait until the blockheads who are running the world negotiate some "mutually verifiable" disarmament treaty is very likely to wait until the Earth is a nuclear cinder.

It is time for the peoples of the world to go over the heads of their governments and declare a separate peace with each other. But disarmament must not just mean nuclear disarmament, for right wing dictators form Pinochet to Marcos rely on "conventional" U.S. arms to hold their regimes in place, just as the bureaucratic regimes of eastern Europe rely on "conventional" Soviet arms and patronage to prop up their own rule.

Virtually since their origin at the end of World War II, the bureaucratic Communist regimes of Eastern Europe have been regularly challenged by democratic movements from below, movements that the U.S. has been either powerless or unwilling to support: powerless because military support might well have meant the beginning of World War III, unwilling because any support, military or political, would have meant an abrogation of the deals made at Yalta, deals made over the heads and behind the backs of the people affected. Most recently, reports from the independent peace movement in eastern Europe indicate that repression of dissidents there has actually increased since the deployment of cruise missiles in western Europe. The vast military might of the U.S. stands helpless before the peoples of the world yearning for a better life.

Remove the threat of NATO and the final prop to the bureaucratic regimes of eastern Europe will be withdrawn, and disarmament in the West would release such enormous material and moral forces here as to encourage our opposite numbers in the East to rise up against their own worst enemy, the one in their own country.

The cause of peace and the cause of human freedom are indivisible. The suppression of Solidarity was not only a human rights violation, it was a great blow to the cause of peace; just as Solidarity's very existence was not only an extension of Polish workers' rights, but, because it gave us a new model of how to organize society democratically from below, was also a part of the popular struggle for world peace. The deployment of missiles, East or West, is not only a threat to world peace, but because the rise of militarism is always and everywhere accompanied by the attenuation of democracy and human rights, it has also undermined democracy.

How can we break this Gordian knot? I see only one way: the disobedience of the soldier against his own officers and the maximum mistrust of everyone towards these governments —East and West — that are apparently quite unable to extricate themselves from the mad rush towards disaster.

Gabe Gabrielsky is a UMass student.

Serious problems in the D.C.

To the Editor,

We are writing to you for an explanation — an explanation we cannot seem to get from the Dining Common Staff.

At a recent dinner where corned beef and cabbage was served, one could not get cabbage with the chicken and could not get seconds on cabbage alone. If one wanted seconds on cabbage you had to get corned beef as well — whether or not you were going to eat it.

This is not the first time this has happened. Since we pay for our food, why aren't we allowed to get the kind of food we want? Not only is this aggrevating but also a waste of food by many we're sure.

If there is a reasonable explanation please let us know. Thank-you.

Will "spineless guppies" do?

To the Editor,

The Minuteman has been the University of Massachusetts mascot for more than a decade, and so it should remain, even though the UMass Peacemakers have "determined" to the contrary. The Minuteman is an appropriate and honorable symbol to represent the University.

1. The Minuteman symbolizes the birth of our nation, struggle against oppression, and the preservation of human rights. Resisting oppression is a timeless virtue.

2. The Minuteman represents preparedness and deterrence.

3. The term Minuteman is only as sexist as the terms "fresh*man*", "wo*man*", "hu*man*", etc. The Minuteman itself is only as sexist as the Statue of Liberty, Columbia, France's Marianne, England's Britannia, etc. If women can represent entire nations, at least allow an anonymous man to represent a Division II football team. Thank goodness we are not a sexless society as the Peacemakers would have us.

4. The Minuteman represents the struggle for freedom of all persecuted peoples, regardless of skin color.

5. The Peacemakers compare the Minuteman to a "sweaty, charging brute, with blood in his eyes", but what should our football players be depicted as? Spineless guppies?

Since the University Peacemakers have not proposed any alternatives, here are a few they might be willing to consider: The UMass Jellyfish, Earthworms, Vegetarians, Pansies, Daisies, Alfalfa Sprouts, Frisbees, etc. And if we want to follow their guidelines precisely, our mascot should be a neutral colored, preferably handicapped hermaphrodite, holding an olive branch in one hand and a burning bra in the other.

Fortunately the UMass Peacemakers represent a very silly minority. Let's keep it that way.

Minuteman symbol violent

To the Editor,

I am writing in response to March 15 letter entitled "Mascot 'unintentionally' sexist."

William D. Richards, Tristan P. Knapp, and David Pickering stated "the Minuteman does not symbolize war, but our willingness to fight for our rights as individuals, such as the Civil Rights leaders of today."

There is a basic difference in revolutionary strategy during the American Revolution and the civil rights leaders of today — that of non-violence. Today civil rights activists cannot cure the problems of the world with violence, because the lust for violent force is what is killing the world. To save the world from nuclear Armageddon we cannot use force. We must use love.

Besides the ethical and strategic problems of using violence to obtain liberty, is the reality that violence against the United States Government is now illegal. With the weapons the U.S. Government now holds, how can a revolutionary movement possibly equal the government's firing power? Equal force would mean world destroyer vs. world destroyer. Does this sound familiar?

We must have a spiritual revolution, a revolution without guns and bombs, a revolutionary heart and mind. By changing images such as the Minuteman mascot we help create the revolution of peace.

Commuters do need democracy

On February 15, a confused and misled Undergraduate Student Senate made a tacit declaration: commuters do not need democracy. The Senate endorsed a "temporary" plan to set up a governing board in the absence of a representative assembly for the Commuter Area Government. It seems that the Commuter Government, with a budget of $55,000 and one "professional," cares as little for democracy as it does for its constituents. This is no reflection on the rank and file commuters save insofar as they allow themselves to be misdirected by the SGA rads.

Daniel J. Holway

So how does a well-meaning and honorable Senate pass a motion which is both inconsistent and patently in violation of the constitution of the Commuter Area Government? In a phrase, Rad Leadership. Commuters deserved duly elected representatives. What they got was an appointed and probably illegal "provisional government" (in the grand tradition of South American dictatorships.) It was rammed through leaving a few dissenting voices searching for words adequate to express their disgust.

The provisional governing board itself is to have seven members including two staff persons — a paid student employee and a paid "professional." (Incidently, no other area government has ever found the need to spend their students' money on professional staff. They prefer to spend it directly on programs and activities for their constituents.) The board further consists of one appointment from the women's caucus and another appointment from the Third World Caucus. These people don't even have to be commuters. In addition there are to be three other Senate appointees.

The most glaring problem is that Senators were never elected to serve on any body other than the Senate. They have appointed themselves for this board.

When even a "provisional" Commuter Area Government is formed it should be by election among rank and file commuters. Off-campus residents have been dealt a grave injustice. An inherently undemocratic government has been placed upon them and intends to use their money.

The worst part? It didn't have to happen. The rad establishment only gets its way when students don't stand up for themselves. That, I think, will soon change.

Daniel J. Holway is a SGA senator.

The problem of passing hitchhikers

I drove past another hitchhiker the other night. It was a bitter cold night, with the kind of temperatures and wind which support this region's national reputation. The hitchhiker was bundled into the obligatory winter uniform but I knew from experience the wind would be slicing through his layers with ruthless efficiency.

I hurried by in my heated car, averting my eyes from the shivering figure, and tried to lead my mind to other thoughts.

Having been raised in the Catholic tradition of confessionals, I feel somehow that to tell this story and of my subsequent guilt, will rid me of that guilt and serve as penance (Our Father who art in Heaven, hallowed be thy name...thy will be done).

Diane Lane

I wonder if it is God's will that we should have become a world of cynics trusting no one, and believing in the simplicity of nothing. In the 10 seconds it took for me to drive past that hitchhiker, a thousand thoughts raced through my mind, and not the least of which was the notion that though I did not wholly suspect the man of evil, neither did I trust him, and that I was definitely unwilling to risk my life or the future I strive for, to pick him up.

"The future I strive for." What a hypocritical statement that seems to me now, though it was borne from my pen only a moment ago. In earnest conversations that last into the evenings late hours, my husband and I continually add to the blueprint we have for our future. We are serious in what we say; happiness, a life for our children, a tomorrow devoid of man's inhumanity to man, a better world.

And yet in trying to protect this intangible future I have the vague sense I have forfeited it already, as we all have, within the short instant it took for my modern day, schizoid personality to place the frown of paranoia on my features and leave that young man half frozen on the side of the road. I have not yet figured out how to reconcile this world in which I live with that of my theoretical fantasies.

Justifications for my callous behavior rise defensively to the surface and are plentiful in number. There's my friend Steve who was driving to Montana in his first car, an old Volvo, filled with all his worldly possessions and one of the more optimistic attitudes on life I have ever known. Steve spotted a hitchhiker and stopped, thankful for someone to share the driving with. Unfortunately for my friend, he made the mistake of falling asleep while the hitchhiker drove, and found himself rudely awakened, on the side of the road, watching his car and optimism speed away forever. A mile up the road he found the car crashed and burned beyond repair.

Meticulous reports like these, from both friends and newspapers, when combined with some of the more gruesome warnings received in my formative years, have added up to a socially acceptable, thoroughly modern and completely alienated view of life. (And forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us).

To my credit, I must admit that occasionally, if I'm reasonably assured that a malicious co-hort isn't hiding in the bushes, I will stop for a woman hitchhiker; once having been chastised by a bumper sticker which read, "Help Stop Rape. Sisters Pick up Sisters." It sounded plausible to me and though these infrequent journeys have always been without incident, I am still somewhat surprised to find myself whole at the end of the line. (And deliver us from evil).

"Cultural paranoia," said a friend upon learning of my predicament. Isolation. There are too many of us. Everyone wants something. Don't talk to strangers, for God's sake! Parental voices from my childhood float by and much as I resent the ambiguity they instill in me, I am thankful to be alive and relatively unharmed thus far in my life.

And so ends my tale of guilt and confession. Having now exposed the seamier side of me, I realize there is no where to go with these thoughts. I know that for me, the guilt cannot wear away the fear. If tonight, on the way home from work, I see a hitchhiker, I know I will not stop. My car is pretty crowded, what with all that hatred and suspicion, and though it won't make you any warmer if you see me go by, I promise you, you'll be on my mind.

Graduates: your time is running out

Lately I've been experiencing a weird combination of tension, insecurity and mixed feelings. You see, I'm about to graduate. And no matter how many alumni friends of mine have explained how confused, sad, happy and anxious they were all at that same time in their lives, it never really hit home. Until now.

Graduation. The word itself evokes so much; an intense period of transition, where one leaves the comfortable security of a neatly arranged and organized college existence and ventures forth out into "the real world." But even more significant than figuring out what to do once you graduate is determining how to spend the last month or so before finally packing it in and leaving.

"There are so many things I want to do that one more time, and yet there's still so much I haven't even done once yet."

Josh Meyer

It seems that everything I do these days is appreciated even more because I knew that it might be the last time I do it.

Doing things One More Time — a concept not unlike deja-vu, yet it's happening in the present. There are so many things I want to do that one more time, and yet there's still so much I haven't done once yet.

Driving home for Spring Break I came upon the harsh realization that the next time I would be taking the same trip, I wouldn't be coming back. Not as a student anyway.

But reminiscing should be done with a positive outlook, for college may well be the best time of our lives. The atmosphere is charged and alive, and the opportunities are limitless — educationally, culturally, socially, and every other way. Twenty-five thousand people roughly the same age, who don't have to worry about struggling through the tedious ordeal of a nine-to-five weekly existence, who don't have to limit their social lives to weekends, and who can blow off things they'll never be able to blow off again.

Where else but UMass can you hear three different yet dignified speakers on the same night? Where else but UMass can you leave to go to a party at 2 a.m. on a Thursday night? Where else can you watch Batman at 7 a.m. and then sleep until twelve? Where else can you see (and even meet) a hundred or more people the same day that you know you could fall madly in love with?

And so it goes. Here I write, on a sunny day, with all my books in front of me, and my assignments piling up. Not to mention all the unattained goals I've set for myself, and all the unwritten job applications I've put off. But do completed assignments really matter? Do good grades? Does extracurricular experience count? Is "getting a good job right away" important? And most importantly, will they drastically change the course of our lives?

Academics are important. But so are all the other aspects of a college career, and it is those extraneous little things that seem to matter most now that I know I'm not much longer of this place and time. The pile of books in front of me just might remain shut for just a little while longer.

I'd rather spend some time thinking — of what lies ahead, and what lies behind. It seems that if I bury my head in some textbook, the world, and especially UMass, will pass me by.

And so even though the books will have to be opened soon, they'll stay shut a bit longer. A favorite song of mine says that you've got to walk and don't look back. I want to add that you've got to look around before you walk.

So, to all those from whom I have accepted responsibilities (like my professors), please try to be understanding of my negligence. I might sit in class and gaze vacantly out the window. You all must know how it is, for you were a senior once too. And to those of you who are my friends, keep in mind that I'm a senior, and help give me some more things to remember.

Josh Meyer is a Collegian columnist for a little while longer.

ANSWER TO PREVIOUS PUZZLE

Think you're pregnant?

Use Predictor In-Home Pregnancy Test. It's the same as a hospital test.

You're on your own for the first time and life is a lot different now. If you think you might be pregnant, you want to know for sure. This is the time to use Predictor In-Home Pregnancy Test. It's the exact same test method used in over 2,000 hospitals and 13 million laboratory tests nationwide. So you know Predictor is accurate.

Predictor can be used as soon as nine days after you miss your period. It's convenient and gives you results in just one hour. Think you're pregnant? Remember, you can use Predictor with confidence, it's the test method used in over 2,000 American hospitals.

Nothing Predicts Pregnancy more accurately.

Minuteman hoopsters looking at Civic Center

By GERRY DeSIMAS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's basketball team, who posted a 3-12 record away from the friendly confines of the Curry Hicks Cage, have a very good chance to play their 13 home games next season in the Springfield Civil Center, assistant Director of Athletics Chet Gladchuk said.

"We have a very good chance at this point," Gladchuk said of being in Springfield for the 1984-85 season, "barring some major problems in negotiations."

The Minutemen are bring forced to look for a new home while the Cage undergoes $2.5 million renovations that are scheduled to start this spring.

Gladchuk said that Athletic Director Frank McInerney will be negotiating with the Springfield mayor's office and the Civic Center administration this week over problems with dates, times and scheduling.

The Springfield Indians American Hockey League team are the prime tenants in the Civic Center and play a lot on Friday and Saturday nights.

"There shouldn't be that many problems," Gladchuk said referring to the schedule. "The majority of our games are on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday nights." He said the Saturday night games can be moved to Saturday afternoons.

The women's basketball team will play their home games and practice at Amherst College. Gladchuk did mention that there may be some doubleheader possibilities available at the 8,000 (for basketball) seat Civic Center but those details have to be ironed out.

"Amherst College (for the men) was very heavily considered," Gladchuk said. "We wanted to emulate the Cage situation." But the Amherst administration was concerned about parking and the Lord Jeff arena seats only 2,000.

The men's team may have some practices at Amherst, Boyden Gym and in the Civic Center, Gladchuk said. "We are going to try and work something out close to home," said Gladchuk. "But they'll have some practices in Springfield to help them get used to the home court."

Gladchuk said an agreement should be completed by the end of the week. "We are very excited. The Civic Center is a first class operation."

Pigskin coach to be picked

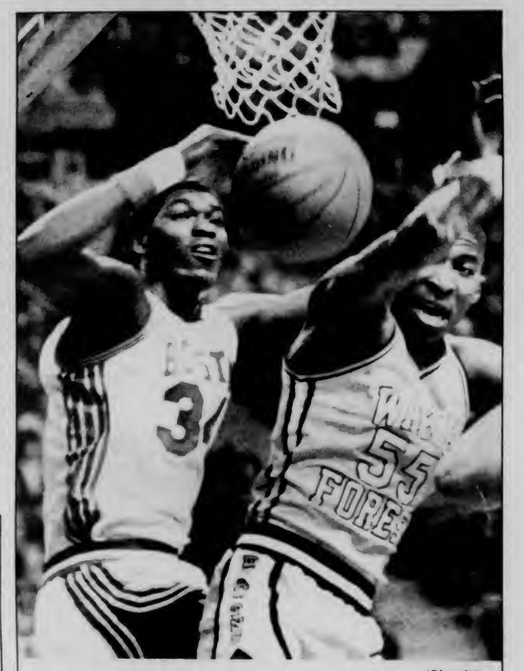
There should be a new head football coach at the University of Massachusetts next week if everything goes as planned, assistant Director of Athletics Chet Gladchuk said yesterday.

Gladchuk said Dr. David Bischoff met with the three finalists over the weekend and Bischoff, the Physical Education department dean, will meet with Athletic Director Frank McInerney today to make a recommendation to Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey.

Duffey makes the final decision on the coach and Gladchuk said that there should be an announcement by the middle of the week.

The three finalists are Frank Novack, who is currently the running back coach for the USFL Oklahoma Outlaws, Bob Stull, the offensive coordinator for the University of Washington, and Paul Schudell, the offensive line coach at the University of Michigan.

Washington has been in the Aloha Bowl the past two years and Michigan lost the Sugar Bowl game to Auburn on New Year's Day.



The three finalists were drawn from a list of six contenders that included UMass defense coordinator Jim Reid. Forty-two people applied for the head coaching job.

Bob Pickett, a former UMass defensiv coordinator, resigned as head coach after six years due to personal reasons on February 11.

Houston's Akeem Olajuwon (34) scored 29 points to lead the Cougars past Wake Forest 68-63 and win a berth in the Final Four for the third straight year. Houston will be joined by Georgetown, who crushed underdog Dayton 61-49 Sunday, Virginia, who outlasted Indiana on Saturday 50-48 and Kentucky, who topped Illinois 54-51. Virginia (21-11) meets Houston (31-4) while Kentucky (29-4) faces Georgetown (32-3) Saturday in the semi's in Seattle.

Softball team's pluses outdo minuses in South Carolina

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

It was a week of pluses and minuses for the University of Massachusetts softball team that spent a sunny week in Pontiac, South Carolina to open their 1984 season.

In the win-loss column, the pluses were greater as the Minutewomen posted a 9-4 record. Another plus was the improving play of the freshmen and the young team that features only two upperclassmen in the lineup.

Minuses, besides the losses, was the loss of junior first baseman Missy Oman with cartilage damage in her knee. Head coach Elaine Sortino said doctors will look at Oman's knee today to determine the damage.

"She was ripping the ball," Sortino said of the eight games she played. "She was the best hitter down there bar none."

The pluses were plentiful as UMass defeated Bowling Green twice, Ohio University twice, Rutgers in an important Atlantic 10 clash, Seton Hall, Drexel, and East Michigan. Massachusetts split with Michigan State and lost to South Carolina, Adelphi and Bowling Green.

"We have never had such tough competition down here," Sortino said. "The teams came down prepared like it was the end-of-the season."

It helped the Minutewomen who play all sophomores and freshmen except for senior co-captains Allyson Rioux (shortstop) and Tina Coffin (outfield).

"It was a good trip," Sortino said. "The solidarity of the defense got a little better each game."

UMass started out by winning their first game, 2-0 win over Bowling Green. Rioux had a triple and 2 RBI.

South Carolina, who finished third at the 1983 NCAA championships, eked out a 1-0 win in a great defensive battle. Lynn Stockley, the sophomore, gave up two hits.

UMass fell to Bowling Green 3-1 and then dropped a bizarre game to Michigan State. The teams tied 2-2 and to decide it, a runner was placed on second with no outs and the teams played on as in international play.

UMass lost the game 3-2 and then blew a 7-1 lead but hung on to take a 8-7 victory in overtime over Michigan St. again under international rules.

Stockley one-hit Rutgers 4-1 as Oman went 2 for 4 and Beth Talbott went 2 for 3. UM beat Bowling Green again 3-2 but lost Oman in the process.

In the next game against Ohio, Stockley (4-4) struck out five and tossed a no-hitter. Freshman Ann King, who had three game winning hits as DH, caught and regular catcher Talbott was at first.

Adelphi nipped UM 1-0 as the relay throw from the outfield hit Sally Maher's (18 now) foot in a freak play in the top of the seventh.

Cathy Reed, another sophomore pitcher, posted a 5-0 record. Freshmen Carol Fratarolli, Robin Read, Debbie Cole and King came up with big hits as did the sophomores Maher, Janet Miller, Talbott.

Chalk up another plus for UMass. The young, strong team is growing.

Strother is confident suit will be settled

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

The Associate Director of the Office of Planning and Budget said yesterday she is confident an agreement can be reached soon with the University of Massachusetts in connection with a sexual discrimination suit.

"It looks very hopeful" that some kind of an agreement can be reached. "Something should be happening fairly soon," said Rosemarie Strother, who claims she was denied a promotion, which was eventually given to a man, because she is a woman.

Strother filed sexual discrimination charges in May 1983 with both the Federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (FEEOC) and the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination. In her suit she charged John L. DeNyse, vice-chancellor for Administration and Finance, with sexual discrimination for his naming Paul Page to be acting director of the Office of Planning and Budget over her despite her qualifications for the position.

Since the suit was filed last spring, Strother and DeNyse have met only once to discuss the charges. Both met with the FEEOC March 16 in Boston.

While no formal agreement came out of that meeting, both sides agreed to keep silent on what occurred.

"What we agreed on at the meeting was that we were not going to discuss what went on at the meeting publicly."

"It's in the hands of the (FEEOC) and it looks very hopeful," Strother said.

Strother, her lawyer David Burris, DeNyse, UMass attorney Sydney Myers, the director of Affirmative Action Thelma Griffith-Johnson, Raymond Bender, an DeNyse's associates and a representative from the FEEOC attended the meeting.

Neither DeNyse nor Myers could be reached for comment.

Strother said the FEEOC is now reviewing the materials which both sides presented at the meeting and that she is supposed to be receiving some response from the agency soon.

"I don't think (the agency) means on dragging it out any longer than just any kind of paper work that they might have to do," she said.

Strother has been the associate director of the office since 1979 and a University employee since 1966.

Residents will decide future of bus service

By DAVID LINTON
Collegian Staff

It could be thumbs up for many students wishing to go to the malls and other Hadley businesses if residents vote to withdraw from the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority in a referendum next year.

Stephen Gazillo, assistant to the administrator of the PVTA, said if Hadley decides to withdraw, bus service between Amherst and Northampton would not be affected. Approximately 3,000 students are shuttled daily between the two towns.

"It would probably mean faster service because the buses would no longer be making stops in Hadley," he said.

But, Gazillo added that there could be the "potential" for an increase in costs to Amherst and Northampton for the transit system but the cost "would not be significant." He also said there would be no increase in student fees for bus service.

Gazillo said businesses along the six mile stretch of Route 9 in Hadley would probably be affected if the town decides to withdraw. Selectman Harry Barstow said the Board has met with representatives from businesses on Route 9 but have reached no written agreements to help pay for the transit system.

A clear majority of the 478 Hadley residents at last weeks Town Meeting voted to put their PVTA membership on a referendum for elections next March, Barstow said. The referendum will give voters the option to withdraw from the transit system in fiscal year 1985, he said.

"It goes back to the voters where it belongs and not to a board or a select minority of people," Barstow said yesterday.

Last March, residents at the Town Meeting voted to withdraw from the PVTA but the vote was later ruled not legally binding. According to Massachusetts General Laws, a town must hold an election to withdraw from a public transit system.

By putting the PVTA question on the ballot, town officials will be able to review the town's assessment for the transit service when determining the budget for the town, Barstow said. If it is determined that the transit system is creating a strain on the budget, the referendum will enable residents to get out of the system, he said.

Hadley's assessment for the service is about $200,000, Gazillo said, but the town is reimbursed by the five college transportation system which receives state and federal subsidies. The total cost to Hadley taxpayers is about $15,000, he said.

Sex discrimination rulings cause confusion

By DIANE LANE
Collegian Staff

Decisions handed down by the United States Supreme Court headed by Chief Justice Warren Burger from 1971 to the present on the issue of sex discrimination demonstrate a doctrinal confusion and "harsh dissent" among the justices, according to Political Scientist Leslie Goldstein.

Goldstein, a three year winner of the Distinguished Teacher Award at the University of Delaware, said yesterday afternoon at Smith College, "there are some very, very tough problems lurking" in sex discrimination cases.

According to Goldstein, the Burger Court has been faced with three problem areas when dealing with sex discrimination and these include the issue of pregnancy, single-sex education and unwed fathers Goldstein said the existence of policy relevant differences between men and women have made resolution of these issues "difficult."

"All of the problem areas deal with biological differences between men and women," Goldstein said.

The Supreme Court has alternately ruled both for and against discrimination of pregnant women. In 1974 and 1975 the Supreme Court ruled that "freedom of personal choice is a fundamental liberty," finding against discrimination of pregnant women but in 1976 and 1977 the same court ruled that "although sex discrimination is forbidden by the 14th Amendment, pregnancy discrimination isn't sex discrimination."

"They ruled that pregnancy discrimination only discriminates against pregnant persons, and therefore does not discriminate against all women," Goldstein said.

The same ambivalence was demonstrated in cases involving the rights of unwed fathers, Goldstein said. In 1972 the Supreme Court ruled that unwed fathers have "fundamental rights" and that the law cannot make "blanket discrimination" against unwed fathers. In another case however, the court ruled that the law could treat unwed fathers differently from unwed mothers.

Goldstein said there is no easy answer to these problems and that cases being tried involve clashes between "widely accepted norms." According to Goldstein, the Supreme Court should "stay its own hand" and show restraint by not accepting these controversial cases to allow more policy "experimentation" in state courts.

"There is a need for more national diversity in sex discrimination cases. If state courts are allowed to decide these cases, eventually a coherent judicial doctrine might evolve," Goldstein said.

The invisible disability-deafness

By FRED STEINWAY
Collegian Staff

Deaf students live in an unusal and lively world.

I sit at a telephone in University of Massachusetts' Deaf Services office on the second floor of Whitmore and talk with a deaf student I met the day before. We can talk over the telephone because the phone is equipped with a keyboard and an electric readout strip so that the messages glow in bright red letters.

Later I meet another deaf student in person. We converse through a combination of lipreading, voice and handsign interpretation. The interpreters are Deaf Services' Hannah Yaffe and Geary Gravel.

Karen is a UMass junior, majoring in fashion marketing. She is a transfer student and this is her third college. Some people develop deafness after they have already learned to talk, but Karen was born deaf.

AID PROTEST — Two Vermont police officers drag a protester from a Vermont senators office yesterday. The protester wanted the senator to end his support of US military aid to Central America.

Springfield man charged with murder

SPRINGFIELD — A man who devoted his life to caring for his elderly mother and disabled twin brother was in stable condition in a Springfield hospital yesterday, charged with their murder, authorities said.

Springfield police said Walter Schauer, 41, covered with blood from a suicide attempt, met them at the door of the family's home Sunday morning after calling police and calmly informing them of the killings.

Police Capt. Ernest Stelzer said the department received a telephone call around 7:45 a.m. Sunday from "a man who said he just killed his mother and brother. A cruiser went up there, and he greeted them at the door."

"The first thing we did was put him in the ambulance," said Lt. Edward McGovern, one of the officers dispatched to the scene.

Schauer was rushed to Wesson Memorial Hopsital for surgery to repair wounds to his neck, arm and wrist that apparently were self-inflicted, presumbly with an electric carving knife found at the scene, Stelzer said.

The body of Edna Schauer, 77, was found in the kitchen while William Schauer's corpse was in a back bedroom, Stelzer said.

"It was strangulation in both cases," said Medical Examiner Bruce Dziura following autopsies. "Death occurred somewhere around 1 a.m. give or take an hour."

Four New Bedford rapists receive sentences to Walpole

FALL RIVER — Four men were sentenced to prison terms ranging from 6 to 12 years yesterday for the gang rape of a woman on a barrom pool table. The judge said the four "brutalized a defenseless young woman and sought to degrade and destroy her human, individual dignity."

The lawyer for the victim said afterward that she has moved permanently from the area.

"There were five sentences in this case — one of them exile," said her lawyer, Scott Charnas.

As friends and family wept, Superior Court Judge William Young imposed terms of 9 to 12 years upon Silva, 27, Victor Raposo, 23, and John Cordeiro, 24. Silva sobbed as the judge announced his decision.

Young also sentenced Joseph Vieira, 28, to a term of 6 to 8 years.

A crowd of several hundred stood quietly outside the century-old courthouse while the sentences were read. But the silence erupted into shouts of "Let them go!"

All the sentences will be served at Walpole State Prison, a tough maximum-security facility. Under state law Vieira must serve at least four years of his sentence. The others face a minimum of six years behind bars before being eligible for parole.

"These individuals stand convicted of most serious crimes: crimes of extreme violence that brutalized a defenseless young woman and sought to degrade and destroy her human, individual dignity," the judge said in a memorandum accompanying the sentences. "Such crimes warrant a significant sanction."

Officer testifies in rape case

NEWBURYPORT — A woman who said she was raped by two police officers after a drinking bout "didn't appear to be drunk" and police did not order blood-alcohol tests on her, a policewoman testified yesterday.

Lynn Officer Shirley Franklin said she interviewed the victim at a hospital Nov. 23 after the woman said she was raped at an empty Lynn bar.

"Did you tell them at the hospital to take a blood alcohol test?" asked John Tierney, a defense attorney.

"This person alleges she had a lot to drink."

The officer answered no.

"It never occurred to you to ask her to submit to a Breathalyzer?" the attorney asked. "No," said Franklin.

The lawyer asked if a Breathalyzer was available at the Lynn Police station.

"I don't know," she said.

Asked why she did not order a test, the officer said the woman smelled of alcohol, but added, "She didn't appear to be drunk."

Lynn police officers Edward Jackson and Unree Poellnitz Jr. are on trial for aggravated rape and drugging a person for sexual intercourse. Stephen Harden, owner of the Ye Olde Ox Bar in Lynn, is charged with aiding the two men under the state's joint venture statute.

The woman, a 21-year-old welfare mother who says she suffers a learning disability, has testified the two officers raped her in the empty bar after getting her drunk.

Reagan waiting for acid rain result

BOSTON — Interior Secretary William Clark told environment and wildlife officials yesterday that President Reagan is not going to act against acid rain until he is sure the causes and effects are known.

"As soon as people fully understand the causes and effects, the solution will be forthcoming," he told the 49th North American Wildlife and Natural Resources Conference.

Speaking after Canadian Environment Minister Charles L. Caccia made an eloquent plea for strong, joint action against acid rain, Clark said the United States has already spent $126 million to research and action on the problem and he is asking $6 million more for fiscal 1985.

"President Reagan is not going to ask the American people to throw great amounts of money into solutions that are in question," he added.

Clark, who took over at Interior four months ago after serving as Reagan's assistant for national security affairs, said the United States is as concerned as Canada about now acid rain affects the environment.

"It's no time for two good neighbors to be arm wrestling over such an issue," Clark added. "It's time to roll up our sleeves and work on it."

Clark, a California state judge for 12 years, said there are far too many court suits on environment issues, including a backlog of 4,000 in his department alone. He urged a "common sense" approach to disputes.

Police kept busy during spring break

University of Massachusetts police arrested a 31 year-old resident of Prince Dormitory, following a car chase on North Pleasant Street at 3 a.m. Sunday.

The man was arrested on charges of driving while under the influence of alcohol, speeding, and failure to stay within marked lanes, police said.

In other business, a car parked on the fourth level of the Campus Center Parking Garage had the passenger seat slashed and a pair of sneakers, gloves and a screwdriver stolen. Total estimate of damage is between $200 and $275, according to police. The incident was reported at 11:51 a.m. on Sunday. There was no sign of forced and there are no suspects, police said.

A plant valued at $200 was stolen from the second floor lobby of Boyden Gymnasium between 5 p.m. last Wednesday and 7 a.m. last Thursday, according to police. Police said more than one person must have been involved because of the size of the plant.

A car parked in a Southwest residential area parking lot was scratched with a key causing more than $75 damage, police said. The incident was reported at 7:23 a.m. Saturday.

The Durfee Conservatory is blooming

By LEONORA FOLEY
Collegian Correspondent

For more than 100 years, the Durfee Conservatory has been more than just a greenhouse.

When built in 1867, it was the center of the University of Massachusetts as an agricultural school and had a large collection of tropical plants.

It has developed into an enjoyable and informational escape for students of the University, as well as many visitors from outside the school, according to John Tristan, foreman of the conservatory.

There are about 600 different species of plants, with the variety ranging from herbs to bonsai to papaya and coffee plants. Every continent except Antarctica is represented in the four rooms.

The conservatory also carries winners of the All-American Award Show, a display of new flower and vegetable varieties produced by different growers across the United States.

The Durfee Conservatory is "a beautiful resource," Tristan said and access is not limited to botany or plant and soil science majors.

Anthropology and art majors also often visit the garden and Tristan encourages everyone to come and visit.

He said he has set up chairs for students to sit and study. He will even give cuttings of plants," within reason.

"The conservatory is open to all students," Tristan said, and he said he hopes students won't wait until they are seniors to visit.

The Durfee Conservatory is open from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday and tours and weekend appointments can be arranged by calling 545-2242. The conservatory is located next to French Hall near University Health Services.

Students provide first aid

By TERESA QUIRION
Collegian Correspondent

The Fire and First Aid Unit at the Univerisity of Massachusetts is a student organization of Emergency Medical Technicians providing fire prevention and first aid services on campus.

The organization has approximately 30 members, all with cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR) certification. They have received additional training in evacuation, crowd control and fire extinguishing from the University Fire Prevention staff and the Department of Health and Safety.

The Fire and First Aid Unit is headed by Co-presidents Clayton Jordan and Peter Robichaud and advisor Keith Hoyle, University fire prevention officer.

Each day calls are received requesting the unit's services at the Department of Health and Safety. One of the co-presidents picks up the list of calls and assigns available members to the tasks.

Typical assignments include attendance at concerts or athletic events and guard duty in dormitories where alarm systems are not functioning. The unit is ready to provide help should the need for emergency evacuation or medical aid arise.

Each month the UMass Fine Arts Center sends a schedule of upcoming events to the Fire and First Aid Unit. At the unit's monthly meeting members are assigned to most of the functions taking place there. They are paid for their work.

Some members of the unit are employed as fire investigators when regular fire inspectors are not available. These people are trained fire marshals with fire department experience. They are also members of the UMass Fire Force which operates a one engine company in the Amherst Fire Department.

The unit is also active in teaching first aid courses at the University. The organization has sponsored 14 courses in CPR so far this year and have been responsible for colloquia in wilderness rescue, rape awareness and drug assessment. Equipment for the courses is donated by the American Red Cross and University Health Services. The unit is currently applying for an equipment grant from the Student Activities Office in order to expand its teaching capacity.

"Demand for CPR training is tremendous," Jordan said, "and our largest impact is in our instruction."

★ The deaf live in a challenging silent world

Deaf students live in a world that is also often challenging. "When I grew up, parents, relatives, friends felt pity for me — a deaf girl," Karen said. "They didn't really realize I was human. They treated me like a dog. A dog can't talk back, you have to tell a dog what to do. That's what it was like.

"I went to residential school for 13 years. Now I feel the dog's leash is off. But the collar is still there. I have to depend on hearing people to do things for me, like make my phone calls.

"Communication is the number one problem. People think you can't communicate with a deaf person, but just use common sense: face the person. Speak slowly. Ask, 'Can you lip-read?' Use a pad and pencil."

The other colleges Karen attended provided a wide range of deaf services. At UMass, she found that "they only provide interpreters. Disability Services here covers both wheelchair- and hearing disabled people. Because the wheelchair- disabled population at UMass is much larger, Deaf Services gets less money," Karen said.

It's important there be a room where deaf people can ask for help, or a telephone a deaf person could use. Many times I've needed that. It's a really serious issue," Karen said.

According to interpreter Yaffe, the word "deaf" is not considered a slur.

"When asked whether they prefer to be known as disabled or handicapped, most deaf people say, 'I don't know, as long as you talk to me,'" Yaffe said.

"Communication is so great a problem that deaf people form a subculture, " said Yaffe. "Niney-five percent of deaf people marry each other, and many express a wish to have deaf children. This may seem odd until you realize the deaf form an ethnic minority in your own culture."

Deaf Services provides certified interpreters for deaf students for all classes and anything class-related, including student-teacher conferences, special workshops and plays.

"Geary and I do most of the interpreting," Yaffe said. "except for people we hire for work before 9 a.m. and nightcourses. We don't pay for tutors but we do provide interpreters for tutors," she said. Many deaf people at UMass are clients of the Massachusetts Rehabilitation Commission, which pays tuition and part of the cost of interpreters.

American Sign Language (ASL) is a distinct language with its own characteristic grammar borrowed in part from French Sign Language. In contrast Signed English and Signed Exact English are manual codes that use ASL signs, but rely on exact word-for-word transliteration. "I think Signed Exact English is very painfully exact to watch," Yaffe said.

Because it has a linguistic grammar of its own, much criticism of ASL comes from the ethnocentric views of hearing people. The grammatical structure of ASL is closer to Chinese than to English, "so it is tempting for people who don't know ASL to say it is pidgeon English," Yaffe said. Most teachers of deaf children are hearing persons raised speaking English or one of its variants instead of ASL, which is "the more fluid language," Yaffe said. Lipreading is not as fail-safe as most people think. "Only 30 percent of the sounds in speech are visible on the lips," said Yaffe. "A lip reader does a lot of guesswork."

Regular classmates can serve as notetakers for deaf students by slipping carbon paper under the page as they write in class, Yaffe said. "Deafness is the invisible handicap, because you can't see a hearing-aid, and not all wear one. Many people talk to the deaf and think they are rude when they don't turn around." she said.

Although the deaf form a distinct cultural group, "it's too bad deaf and hearing people don't interact more," said Yaffe. "On a campus of 25,000 they form a definite minority. We are trying to step up recruitment of deaf students for next year."

Although deaf students are free to live wherever they want, the University does provide a corridor in Thoreau Dormitory in Southwest residential area reserved for people who are committed to learning or using sign language. The university provides flashing lights for fire alarms and the special telephones free to all deaf students. Every Friday night at 7:00 free films are provided by the National Captioning Institute as a social service.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Gay and Lesbian Awareness Week

The University of Massachusetts, unlike other major schools, has made tremendous improvement over the last several years in dealing with sexism, racism and anti-semitism. This week UMass continues on the right path of educating and informing the diverse five-college population about sensitive and vital social issues. This week is Gay and Lesbian Awareness Week.

The event, which is sponsored by almost 20 campus-wide groups including the East Side Residential Area, the People's Gay Alliance, the Everywoman's Center, to name a few, is for both homosexual students and heterosexual students. The week promises to bring students, regardless of sexual preference, together to discuss openly homosexuality and, more importantly, homophobia.

Many students are unaware of the problem of homophobia. They fail to realize that denying an individual the right of sexual preference is a form of discrimination. Many homosexual and bisexual students who are open and honest about their sexuality face harassment, including verbal and physical abuse in the residence hall system, around the campus in the work place and even in classrooms.

As a result of this harassment, many homosexuals stay "in the closet," afraid not of their own sexuality but of other's narrowness.

It has been said that people can do the most damage when they are afraid of something which they believe to be "unnatural", "out of the ordinary," or which they simply do not understand. Many people are misinformed about homosexuality, and as a result, damage those who seek to inform themselves. That is one of the reasons UMass needs an event like Gay and Lesbian Awareness Week: to inform and to educate.

It is also said that those who seek not to be informed are going to stay that way. It is doubtful that homophobics will attend any of the workshops, films, or performances scheduled for the week. And that is unfortunate. But by the mere designation of such a week, it is possible that somewhere on this campus, someone will look twice at themselves and others and gain respect for individual rights.

Lecture needs more discussion

To the Editor,

Your reporter made a valiant attempt to summarize a complex, two-hour discussion in a few words. ("Morality and war: professors urge re-evaluation", Collegian, Monday, March 12, p. 1). But the over-all impression of the piece is not quite what I had hoped to convey in the Humanities Fellows Lecture, "From Machiavelli to MAD (Mutually Assured Destruction)". I would, therefore, like to clarify and amplify several points.

First, the contrasts models I explored—realism and just war doctrine—are not, as is sometimes supposed, accounts of human reality limited to matters of war. They also involve larger visions of the social world in which men and women are constituted in particular and contrasting ways. Realism, in political discourse, is that mode of thinking that can be traced at least as far back as the declaration of the representatives of Athens to their counterparts from the island of Melos that "might makes right", or Thrasymachus' insistence to Socrates that justice is the interest of the stronger. In its early modern and profoundly influential incarnations, realism is traceable from the works of Machiavelli and, later, Hobbes. It was my argument that realist presumptions wash out consideration of a whole ranger of human qualities, denying much about us that makes us human, including our capacities for kindness, decency, responsibility, and so on. Interestingly, what also disappears altogether or is incorporated only under terms that 'privatize', is the image of the woman, most especially the maternal woman, and those imperatives that have been linked historically with her. Within just war discourse, the woman is neither invisible, nor barely visible on the other side of a public-private divide. But she appears in the guise of the 'beautiful soul', a being who keeps alive virtues and values out of place in the 'tough world' of politics and war although this world is chastened, in just war thinking, by moral values.

Second, I did not embrace the 'moral Mother' ideal but instead located that ideal inside particular discursive traditions, pointing out the ways in which the ideal is always in danger of derailment into sentimentalism and naive celebrations of female virtue.

Third, my discussion of 'abstraction' was, in fact, an indictment of a peculiar mode of thinking I called 'abstracted', one that makes it possible for human beings to 'think' others to death, often by the millions, in making their strategic plans and manufacturing engines of mass destruction. Thus they disassociate themselves from horror, presuming they can unleash the demons but somehow control them simultaneously.

Fourth, the article omitted my conclusion which called for a discourse that might incorporate feminist concerns and imperatives but on terms that did not lodge feminism inside the ways of thought I had earlier criticized. To this end I offered an appreciative gloss on Hannah Arendt's On Violence, assaying the distinction she forges between violence or force and genuine power and political empowerment. To the extent that 'maternal virtues' exist, they can become part of a civic ideal only by being absorbed inside a larger civic vision. It seemed to me Arendt pointed the way towards that complex end.

The importance of Pro-Choice

One day, shortly after my father had left home for the last time, I watched my mother cry as she folded clothes over our dryer. She had had nine children already, two in diapers, no job, and was pregnant. She didn't know how she was going to care for another child and in desperation was considering an abortion. She asked me how I felt about it, probably hoping that I'd approve. But, unfortunately, I warned her that she would never forgive herself and that she'd have to live with it the rest of her life. That was the first time I had ever thought about abortion. I was ten at the time. I was like most good little boys, who knew that abortions were gross and that only evil women who dwelled in Boston had them.

Richard Vigeant

Fortunately my views on abortion have changed for the better. By the time I reached high school I still felt that abortion was wrong, but because I so strongly believed in democracy (as every good American high schooler does), I also felt that a woman had the right to make her own decision. That's when I became Pro-Choice, even though I wasn't conscious of the term at that time. By the time I graduated from high school, I knew a few woman friends who had had abortions and just couldn't see the wrong in it, no matter how hard I tried. Today, I believe that abortion is preferrable in many cases, both for the mother and the unwanted child.

As a male political activist working for the Pro-Choice movement I'm often asked why I work on a "womens' issue." The right to abortion is not just a womens' issue. All rights concern all citizens. Personally, I feel cheated when rights are denied to women. I feel those rights are my own. Whether men like it or not they are just as much responsible for abortion rights as women are. Considering that more than 90 percent of Congress is male and that the Supreme Court was all-male in 1973, when they guaranteed womens' rights to abortion with the Roe vs. Wade decision, I'd say men are quite involved with the abortion issue. Also, any man sexually involved with a woman must realize that reproductive rights affect him.

Today abortion rights are being threatened more vigorously than ever. The New Right and the hypocritical Pro-Lifers, a small but strong minority, are pushing for anti-abortion legislation and have won some battles already. On Sept. 22, 1983 the Hyde Amendment, which restricts the use of federal Medicaid funds for abortion, was signed into law as part of the 1984 Labor Health and Human Services Appropriations Bill. Luckily, a life endangerment exception was added to the amendment for cases of rape, incest, and medical emergency. On Nov. 14, 1983 The Smith Amendment, which prohibits federal employee health insurance plans from providing funds for abortion, was signed by President Reagan.

On Jan. 13, 1984 President Reagan declared Jan. 22, the anniversary of Roe vs. Wade, as National Security of Life Day. He went as far as comparing abortion to slavery by saying: "Slavery cheapened and mocked our dedication to the freedom and equality of all men and women. Can we say that abortion will be less corrosive to the values we hold dear?" Ten days later between 35,000 and 75,000 anti-choice activists marched in Washington and were greeted whole-heartedly by the President from his balcony in the White House. If re-elected, and if he has the opportunity to appoint Supreme Court justices, he will surely appoint members that are anti-choice. If this happens Roe vs. Wade will almost certainly be overturned; bringing us back to the days where 5,000 to 10,000 American women died each year from illegal abortions.

In Massachusetts, on Jan. 4, 1983, the legislature approved a proposed anti-abortion amendment to the state constitution. If approved again, this spring, it will become a binding referendum in the November elections. At its mildest it can limit funding of abortion for low-income women. At its worst it can lead to the end of legal abortion in Massachusetts. If Massachusetts, considered to be a liberal state, passes this amendment, it will set a terrifying precedent that will rock the country. Rights that have been hard won will perish under unsuspecting eyes.

Pro-Choice people are not sleeping. A grass-roots movement joining people from all walks of life is gaining a strong momentum. On March 28, thousands of Pro-Choice supporters are going to rally at the State House in opposition of the proposed amendment. Organization is moving on a state and national level. It is just beginning.

So, here I am today, a man thrilled to be working for reproductive rights. I am also a person frightened to death at what damage the so-called "moral" backlash can bring. Now, if a woman asked me if I thought abortion was alright I'd say, "If you really feel that you don't want a baby now, you don't have to go through with it. The ultimate choice is yours." I just hope that choice remains the status quo and that funds, that have been taken away, are restored for those women who make the difficult decision to have an abortion and can not afford one.

Arts

A new form of canvas

By CHARLES FRANCIS CARROLL
Collegian Staff

There will be a presentation of Nam June Paik at the Student Union Gallery tonight, and a personal appearance by Nam June Paik at the Hampden Theater on Wednesday night. UMass may never be the same!

Who is Nam June Paik, you may wonder? The Picasso of Video! At least that's one impression. Others have equated him with George Washington, Marcel Duchamp, and Roone Arledge. It all becomes a bit bewildering. The only description that will do is Nam June Paik as Nam June Paik.

The master innovator of video art is this year's artist-in-residence at the Union Video Center. The artist-in-residence program was created to add greater depth to the Union Video Center, the sole comprehensive scource for video training at the University. It has exposed students to several prominent video artists, such as Ros Barron two years ago and Bill Viola last year. But bringing Nam June Paik here is a tour de force for U.V.C.

Denis Martin, director of Union Video, said it is a milestone in his career, and stated further that it should finally establish U.V.C. at the center of the valley for video. Having Paik here gives Martin great personal satisfaction as well. I inquired how any one as renowned as Paik was available and Martin called it an "unexpected supprise."

"When I first called Electronic Arts Intermix in New York, they gave me Paik's number and wished me luck. I called everyone else and came up empty. So as a last chance I called Paik. The phone rang twice and Nam June Paik said Hello."

Martin attended Paik's Whitney museum exhibit which continues to make a vivid impression on him. "There never had been anything like it before...it gave a whole new sense to video installations: arrangements of lighted images, put together with a video synthesizer, producing a visual assault, in a corner of a room, a pyramid of monitors, some upsidedown and some on their sides."

"There was one piece there, 'Zen for T.V.,' which had a vertical line across the screen. The set was put on its side. Anyway, it broke, and I was there when Paik came down to fix it. He adjusted it to restore the earlier non-working status which had transformed into a functional work of art."

Nam June Paik's illustrious career began long before his retrospective at the Whitney. Born in Korea in 1932, Paik became accomplished in piano and composition while studying classical music. Paik then travelled to Japan and enrolled at Tokyo University in 1952, graduating four years later with a degree in aesthetics. But it was his move to Europe, eventually to Cologne, Germany, that lead him to electronic music and video. And in video, Paik found a new form of canvas.

But it wasn't until the Whitney show, in 1981, that the "father of video" became as famous as he was infamous. The Whitney show spanned Paik's artistic development, from early work playing original compositions on a piano with heads hanging off it and then demolishing it with an axe, to the more elaborate, later video installations playing piano with a video camera.

Paik tests our common sensibility, if not our nerves with a unique version of reality delivered through such so-called "Neo-dada acts." In spite of them or because of the, Paik is able to challenge ordinary reality by his technological exploitation of the television medium, on the one hand, creating and inventing, on the other, attacking art and technology.

A very sophisticated artist who has been often misunderstood by his critics, Paik leads a Zenny iconoclastic life, without commercial T.V., stereo, or car. The critics have failed to recognize the humanity of his work, much of which is in collaboration with the forefront of the avant-garde, because it has appeared to them to be "exaggerated" (Hilton Cramer). Yet, behind the illusion of fantasy, created by the special effects of dazzling color, feedback, and video montage, Paik's subject matter is all too real.

For instance, I recently viewed "Allen and Allen's Complaint," a video by Paik about the poets Allen Ginsberg and his father Louis Ginsberg on tour together and I found it to be extremely sensitive and revealing, almost documentary. The special effects only heightened the pathos between father and son.

Mr. Video comes to UMass.

Ginsberg recently joined Paik, along with many of the other artists who have contributed to his distinguished career in celebrating the arrival of 1984 with an hour-length show on public television New Year's Day, called "Good Morning, Mr. Orwell." I was lucky enough to catch it. Paik intended the performance to be "liberating" and I suppose that's what makes it so captivating: from the opening number of Laurie Anderson and Peter Gabriel's "excellent birds" against a background of radioactive snow to John Cage plucking heartbeat tremors on an electronic coto, from "Wake Up (it's 1984)" by Oingo Boingo to Allen Ginsberg's informative "Do the Meditation," from Charlotte Morman's moaning T.V. cello playing to Peter Orlofsky yodeling "Never will I forget how sweet you are," its hard to take your eyes away. Perhaps, that's why Paik warns "BIG BROTHER IS NOT WATCHING YOU, BUT T.V. IS EATING UP YOUR BRAINS!"

As what he has called a "counterpoint" to the Orwell salute, which was performed live via satellite hook-up between New York and Paris, Paik has assembled a two-channel video installation, "1984 in 1984." On Wednesday, March 28 at 7:00 p.m., Paik will exhibit from his recent work at Hampden Theater in Southwest. At this time, Paik will also lead in informal lecture/discussion.

Paik's appearance will be preceded by two nights of exhibitions of earlier works. On Monday, March 26, the following works will be shown: Lake Placid, Global Groove, Media Shuttle-Moscow to New York, and Edited for Television. Both showings will take place in the Student Union Gallery, beginning at 7:30 p.m.

Be sure you get there early for all shows, especially Paik's perfomance at Hampden Theater: Paik is a major attraction. But, if you should be late, Paik can be viewed live in the Hampden Lobby on what else, but video monitors.

Paik's appearance is the highlight of the Fifth Annual Video Art Festival at U.V.C. In addition to the artist-in-residence program, there is an open competition for area video artists featuring cash prizes in three categories: Narrative, Avante-garde, and Documentary.

Jimi Hendrix remembered

JIMI HENDRIX, THE SPIRIT LIVES ON...
Nona Hatay
Last Gasp of San Francisco Press, 61 pages, $9.95

By PETER WISSOKER
Collegian Staff

I first heard Jimi Hendrix on the radio around the time I was twelve or so. I was in the sixth grade and he was already dead. I then purchased the Jimi Hendrix/Otis Redding at the Monterey Pop Festival extravaganza, which I listened to for many years. I was very heavily influenced by "Wild Thing," "Rock Me Baby," and the other songs on the album. Thinking about these songs, pretending that I could play covers of them and other songs by the Who, the Beach Boys, Eric Clapton, the Beatles and most of all the Rolling Stones. This allowed me to cope with Jr. High School in the mid-seventies by ignoring everything that was going on around me and thinking about music instead, all day and all night.

But the real shock came when I saw The Jimi Hendrix Story, or whatever that movie is called, where they show him playing the solo for "Rock Me Baby," not as I had imagined it, with his hands going all over the place, but with his teeth. After years of thinking Hendrix-equals gadgets my opinion began to change.

This personal testimonial is simular, although perhaps a bit more down to earth, to what you will find in Jimi Hendrix, the Spirit Lives On... Basically a bound fanzine, The Spirit..., put together by Montegue resident Nona Hatay, is a collection of quotes from people who either knew or were influenced by Jimi Hendrix interspersed over a series of photographs; some straight shots of a Hendrix show that Hatay shot in New York in 1969 and some altered to form collages of what and where Jimi was.

While most of the concert photography is your basic Hendrix type shot(s); his head, him playing the guitar with his mouth open, shot from his navel up, etc...there are a few pictures that represent a real advance in rock photography. They actually show Hendrix as a person. In particular there is a picture of him on stage playing, showing his whole body, shoes, guitar, wah-wah pedal and all. There he is, suddenly he has a height. This photograph does away with almost two decades of mythology that was developed from the time that Hendrix first became famous. This mythology he first played up to, but in the year or so before he died, he came to feel that it was a hazard to his career and to the lives of those who underplayed their own self-worth while elevating him, Jimi Hendrix, to some role of mythic God/Human.

But the central focus of the book is really Noma Hatay's collages which have been displayed around the world. Hatay has taken some of Hendrix's songs and made what she feels to be pictoral representations of them. At first I was put off by these because they are in black and white, which isn't the way I picture Hendrix's music at all. Still, some of the collages work, particularly the superimposed image of Hendrix outside of Radio City Music and the picture that goes with the song "Axis, Bold as Love," which shows Hendrix almost dissolving into the light and dark contrasts of the background.

Georgetown advances to the Final Four against Kentucky

WASHINGTON (AP) — The No. 2-ranked Georgetown Hoyas are headed for Seattle, making their second trip in three years to the Final Four of the NCAA basketball tournament.

Georgetown posted a 61-49 victory over Dayton Sunday in Los Angeles to capture the NCAA West Regional championship, then headed to Seattle where the Hoyas will battle Mideast champion Kentucky in Saturday's semifinal.

"It'll be a whale of a game," Dayton Coach Don Donoher of the Georgetown-Kentucky matchup. "I know I'll be in my seat early.

"They might want to use a four- or five-man officiating crew. They should get an NFL crew. I think it will be a matchup between the Rockies and Alps."

Georgetown held Dayton's star forward, Rossevelt Chapman, to 13 points on 10 shots. Chapman had scored 93 points in NCAA victories over Louisiana State, Oklahoma and Washington.

"I'm greatly impressed with their defense," Donoher said of the Hoyas. "They're relentless' they're all over us."

Chapman said the Hoya's 7-foot center Patrick Ewing is "frightening."

"Ewing's very mammoth. He's like an octopus; he's hands all over," Chapman said.

"Georgetown makes a big difference in your game style because you have to arc your shots higher. [illegible] in the air and use hang time, it was very difficult. He really changed my game around, and I guess if he hadn't it might have been a different story," Chapman said.

Georgetown Coach John Thompson said he was "as nervous as I've ever been before a ball game...because it was kind of difficult to play a game that leads you to the Final Four, and to play that game to prevent from losing."

Ewing, the regional's most valuable player, scored a team-high 15 points, one more than guard Michael Jackson. Ewing also had seven rebounds, three assists and three blocked shots.

Georgetown reserves scored 22 points and had 19 rebounds, including 10 by Bill Martin, another key defender against Chapman.

Georgetown was the overwhelming favorite—so much so that there were 3,443 no-shows. But the Hoyas will be taking on someone their own size when they face Kentucky on Saturday.

They Hoyas, 32-2, are seeking the national title, which narrowly escaped them in 1982 when Ewing was a freshman. Georgetown missed four straight one-and-one free throws late in the Dayton game. But with 16 seconds left, Thompson went down to the bench, shaking hands with players.

"It's time to get emotional," Thompson said. "We're headed for the Final Four."

Minutemen hit well, but win only four of 13 in Alburquerque,N.M.

By SCOTT HOOD
Collegian Staff

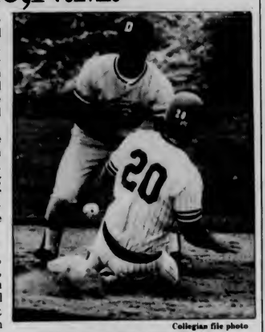
Cape Canaveral, Florida is the official launcing pad for the United States space program, but maybe NASA should take a closer look at Alburquerque, N.M. Last week, during an eight-day tournament in which the University of Massachusetts participated, enough missiles, and baseballs were propelled into the New Mexico thin air to make even Carl Sagan green with envy.

Consider: UMass, as a team, batted .333 for the 13 games, of which they won four. However, their opponents hit .401 and produced 152 runs, and average of 11.6 per game. UMass mustered a "measely" 108 runs. And that's only the beginning. In the 13 games, the Minutemen and the opposition, which consisted of New Mexico, Delaware, Southern Illinois-Edwarsville, Wisconsin, and Wyoming combined for 57 doubles and 25 home runs.

Individually for UMass, fine performances were turned in by Jack Bloise, who hit .487 and collected 19 hits and 9 stolen bases, and Steve Messina, who hit .425, collected 17 hits, and drove in 20 runs. Bloise has seemingly won the second base war with Tim Foster, while Messina has nearly matched his 18 hits accumulated in 32 games in 1983 and quadrupled his RBI output of five.

Jeff Cimini improved his chances of winning the first base slot by batting .355. In New Mexico, Cimini split the first base duty with Todd Comeau. Probably the most amazing exhibition hitting was turned in by Bruce Kingman, who reached base 14 consecutive times over a four-game stretch in two days. In the tournament Kingman walked 17 times.

The Minutemen, who finished third in the tourney tied with Delaware, defeated Wisconsin, a Big Ten team, three times, once by a score of 23-11 and another by 17-16. Delaware clubbed UMass 23-8 in an affair that saw the Blue Hens explode (and that's an understatement) for 17 runs in the fifth inning. Prior to that they had only led 6-5.



Another high scoring game between the two eastern universities ended with Delaware prevailing 15-10. However, UMass later returned the favor, registering the first Minutemen win ever over Delaware, 11-8. The victory ended a seven-game losing streak for UMass against the Blue Hens.

Now the pitching. Yes, the Minutemen ended the tourney with an ERA over 11.00, but there were bright spots. Tony Presnal, Bob Kostro, and Jim Knopf, a transfer from a community college in New Jersey, all pitched respectively in starting roles. Matt Subocz was the primary reliever and even won two games on the same day against Delaware and Wisconsin.

"I've never seen a ball carry so well. It was a hitter's paradise," said UMass coach Dick Berquist. "Although some of the scores are large, I have good feelings about this team. We've shown we can score runs and hopefully it will carry over into the northern season. I don't feel so bad about our pitching, although it's a little strange to be optimistic with such a high ERA.

I feel we now have three adequate college starting pitchers in Presnal, Kostro, and Knopf.

Overall, it was one of the best tournaments ever for UMass. All the accomodations were great. It was baseball all day, every day for the entire week."

UMass first baseman Todd Comeau (20) slides safely into second base in a game from last season.

The Minutemen open their Atlantic 10 schedule on Saturday when they travel to Philadelphia to take on Temple, considered the best team in the league, for three games. A doulbeheader on Saturday will be followed by a single game on Sunday. The home opener will be a week from today against the University of Connecticut.

Massachusetts will compete in the Eastern Division of the Atlantic 10. Other teams in the division besides Temple, include St. Joseph's (they come to Amherst for a three game series April 7-8), Rhode Island, and Rutgers.

Stull to be named head football coach

Bob Stull, the offensive coordinator for the University of Washington, has been chosen for the head football coaching job at the University of Massachusetts, sources said yesterday.

The Seattle Times reported Stull's appointment in Monday's editions, the Associated Press said last night. The Times said Stull was enroute to Amherst to be introduced at a news conference today.

There will be a noon press conference at the Northampton Hilton to introduce Stull.

Chuck Niemi, the assistant sports information director at Washington, confirmed that Stull had been offered the job.

Stull, 39, has coached 10 years under coach Don James and became the offensive coordinator in 1979.

With Stull at the helm of the offense, Washington went on to five bowl games including the 1980 Rose Bowl, a 24-6 loss to Michigan, and the past two Aloha Bowls. Washington posted an 8-4 record in the Pac-10 this year.

Stull's 1980 offense was the most productive in the school's history as they gained 4,206 yards. Washington was ranked number one in the country during that year.

Forty-two applicants were vying for the job that Bob Pickett resigned from on February 11 after six year behind the bench.

Running Rebels win IM Basketball title

By DAN LEBERFELD
Collegian Staff

While the rest of UMass was preparing to head home on Thursday night, a basketball spectacle was occurring—the intramural finals. In the men's final the Running Rebels soundly defeated Chutzpah 57-45 before a standing room only crowd in Boyden Gym.

The Running Rebels, who are made up of all Western Massachusetts players, mastered the running game to a "T". They ran through their opponents with ease on their way to the final. This string of victories inlcuded a decisive win in the semi-finals over perrenial powerhouse GQ.

"The Running Rebels are a strong, deep team whose running game eventually wears you down," said John Laden, whose Flying Dutchmen squad was a third round playoff victim of the Rebels.

Chutzpah on the other hand encountered a rockier route to the final. They beat a strong Black Magic squad in the third round. In the quarter-finals they were involved in a strange string of events. Due to an officiating foulup in a loss to Heat n' Serve, the final three minutes of that game were replayed. They came out on top the second time and proceeded to defeat the Ex-Hogsters in the semi-finals.

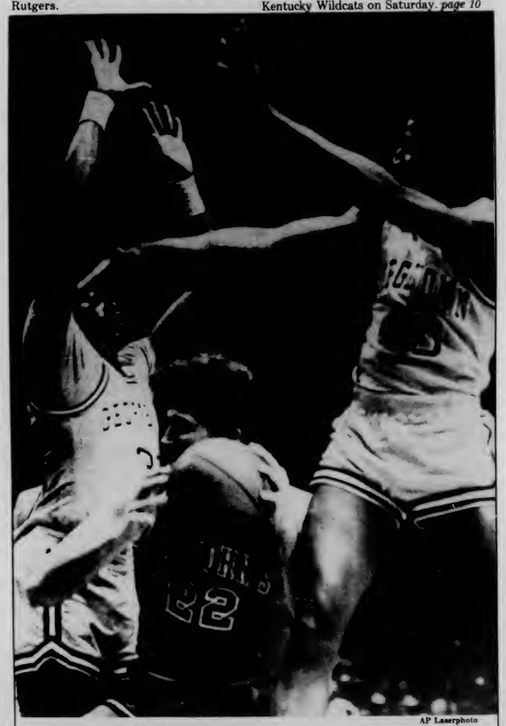
In the first half of the finals, the Running Rebels ran out to a 16-6 lead. 6'3" senior center Mark Goggins had the hot hand early hitting for eight points.

Chutzpah lost their 6-7 center Jeff Aron early to 3 fouls but dug in deep and came away with a 26-25 lead at the half. Mike "the Mad Bomber" Kline sank a 25 foot jump shot at the buzzer to put his team on top. Kline had eight first half points.

The Running Rebels huddled at halftime, realigned their strategy and just blew out Chutzpah in the second half.

"We set up a special defense to shut down Kline and we rebounded much better," said senior captain Brad McGrath of Northampton.

The star of the second half for the Rebels had to be Northampton's Greg Wickles, a 6'3" senior forward. Wickles, whose brother, 6'6" Chris is a standout player at Clark University, was an inside force and finished up with a game high 14 points.



The roof just fell in on the Chutzpah squad who were just hapless in the second half. Everything went wrong for them including Aron fouling out and Kline going down with a sprained ankle.

The Rebels opened up a 53-33 lead and never looked back. Their running and bench strength just wore outmanned Chutzpah out.

"We played a much smarter game in the second half," said Rebel coach Ed Panzica.

In the woman's final, the Strikers, a team made up of UMass women's soccer players defeated the Dancing UMies, a team made up of UMass women's field hockey players, 27-23. Christine Taggart led the Strikers with 9 points and Andrea Muccini paced the Dancing UMies with eight.

Just think—maybe one day one of these diehard intramural participants might end up in the NCAA Final Four like former University of Virginia intramural player Kenton Edelin.

Regents discuss tuition policy

By JOHN KENNEY
and the Associated Press

BOSTON — The Board of Regents yesterday met to discuss the recent tuition policy, which was approved earlier this month. The Board ignored pleas from students, legislators and the governor's office to delay setting the new policy for the state's 29 colleges and universities.

Students objecting to the policy, which requires them to pay up to a third of the cost of their education, complained at a news conference that they had been excluded from the process of drafting the policy.

The policy, approved by the Regents March 13, calls for a raise in tuition by as much as 15 percent in one school year.

Gerard Indelicato, special assistant to the governor on education, told reporters after the news conference that he too had asked for a delay and it had not been granted. Indelicato charged he received a commitment from regent vice-chair, David Beaubien, that the regents would only enact a "proposed" policy, and follow the vote with a 30-day review of the plan.

"They did not live up to their agreement," Indelicato said. At his Wellesly business office, Beaubien said, "I certainly discussed it with him. I was very sympathetic and the board was sympathetic. I cannot commit the board.

"It was the consensus of the board, due to the fact we had been criticized severely in the past for increasing tuition without a tuition policy, that it was important to get the policy in place because the tuition increase was inevitable. It was the board's feeling we had delayed it too long already," Beaubien said.

He said the board recognized in retrospect there probably was not enough student input. "I'm going to encourage the students to come forward with recommendations or changes, and we'll see if we can accomodate them," Beaubien added. "We feel the policy is open for criticism and we can change it at any time."

"We're realistically talking about putting the cost of education out of students' reach," said Steve Barross, a student at Roxbury Community College.

The students, legislators and Indelicato said they still want a delay in the policy so it can be more fully reviewed, but the regents are scheduled to vote on yet to be disclosed tuition increases April 11.

Fran Pheeney, chair of public policy in the Student Senate at the University of Massachusetts said yesterday that, "The 33 percent cap is unfair. It's very deceptive and potentially very inflationary." Theoretically the cap would act as a ceiling on the cost of tuition. But Pheeney said that "as fees and tuition increase so too will the overall cost of education."

"We're not arguing the need for a policy. We're saying that the cap is unfair. 23.7 percent of the students who had a proven need for financial aid this past year got no aid at all. And in fiscal year 1983 there was a 15 percent decrease in national financial aid. The point is that this proposed tuition increase will make it more difficult to attend school. This is a public land grant institution and is set up for people who have traditionally been denied access to higher education."

Regent Vice Chancellor John Duff claims that financial aid is out there. But Pheeney cites the tuition waiver policy, which claims the average need for a waiver at $2661 a year. The average tuition waiver in Massachusetts is $384 a year.

Pheeney said that tuition increases "will make this more of a private institution."

Senate candidates to debate at UMass

By LISA MARIE CANTWELL
Collegian Staff

Candidates competing for the United States senate seat currently held by Paul Tsongas who has announced he will not seek re-election, will participate in a panel discussion at the University of Massachusetts on Saturday.

State Secretary Michael Connolly, Lieutenant Governor John Kerry, Congressman Edward Markey, and Congressman James Shannon are four of the ten hopefuls who will attend the event. All four of the candidates are democrats.

Republican hopefuls Raymond Shamie and Elliot Richardson, and Democrat David Bartley have declined invitations to the Massachusetts Public Interest Research group (MassPirg) sponsored panel discussion, citing previous campaign commitments. According to MassPirg's Boston office, three other candidates-Republican Mildred Jefferson and democrats John Pierce Lynch and William Hebert have responded with tentative acceptances.

Jay Holland, UMass MassPirg spokesman, said the panel is "designed to present the candidates with environmental and student related issues. "We want to keep the focus on the issues, not just on the candidate's personalities," he said.

Specifically, MassPirg Representatives will ask the candidates to give their stands on acid rain legislation, hazardous waste, student financial aid issues and student voter registration, along with audience participation questions and concerns, Holland said.

"These are issues which affect everyone," he said, "there is a lot of political potential, and students can make a difference, at least by voting."

"By coming here, the candidates are recognizing that student input is important in the political process. If student's votes were not important, they would not waste their time."

The panel discussion is part of a weekend long series of workshops and discussions, on environmental and public interest issues. The panel discussion will begin at 1 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom, and is open to the public.

Big Dan's outcome not affected by T.V.

Portuguese stirred by coverage

By MIRIAM ZOLL
Collegian Staff

Local rape and legal authorities said the outcome of the Big Dan's rape trial in New Bedford was not affected by the presence of television cameras in the courtroom but that the reaction of the Portuguese community was.

At the conclusion of the four week, internationally publicized gang rape trial, four of the six defendants received sentences of at least six years in Walpole State Prison.

All of the defendants, as well as the victim, one of the prosecutors, and several of the jurors, are Portuguese-Americans. The New Bedford Portuguese community has held two demonstrations, ranging from 4,000 to 10,000 strong, and signed a 16,000 signature petition protesting that the men were discriminated against because they were Portuguese.

Ethan Katsh, a professor in the Legal Studies Department at the University of Massachusetts who specializes in television and the law, said a separation must be made between the internal and external effects of televised cases.

"I don't think T.V. affects what goes on in the courtroom in your typical case," he said. "I don't think anyone was overly dramatic because of T.V. or that the verdict was harsher because of it."

Katsh, however, said the presence of cameras "intensified the reaction of the Portuguese community because the trial became a national issue."

"They probably wouldn't have been nearly as upset if it hadn't been nationally televised," he said. "If cameras hadn't been allowed in the courtroom, there probably would have been some nights the trial wouldn't have made the nightly news."

Kathy Alexander, Counselor-Advocate at the Everywoman's Center (EWC) at UMass said there was no additional drama because of television cameras and that what people saw on television was "what rape victims experience all the time" during rape trials.

"The publicity and circus atmosphere of the New Bedford trial is what every rape trial is like. This one wasn't unique," she said.

Regarding the actions of the Portuguese community, Alexander said the media, continually publicizing that all the defendants were Portuguese immigrants understandably angered the New Bedford Portuguese community.

"If the men had been white, I doubt the media would have used Irish or English labels. Picking up on the fact they're Portuguese was terrible."

Nancy Braxton, an Amherst attorney and professor in the legal studies and women's studies programs at UMass, said the national network coverage helped publicize that rape really does happen.

"I'm pleased that it got national coverage but it was probably excruciating for the victim," she said.

Braxton said the sentences, which range from six to 12 years, were unusually long sentences compared to most rape cases she is familiar with.

"In cases in Hampshire County recently, if you just get a couple of years and get out in a third of that time, it's not that big a deal. But if you get nine to 12 years, and you serve four years, that must seem more significant to anyone than a couple of months," she said.

Alexander said the victim's confidentiality was violated when the media revealed her name and that "it wasn't necesary to use it on cable or in newspapers."

Hart wipes out Mondale in Connecticut primary

HARTFORD, Conn. —Gary Hart, cementing a six-state sweep of New England, won an easy victory yesterday over Walter F. Mondale in the Connecticut Democratic presidential primary - prelude to next week's showdown in New York.

Hart said the win demonstrated that voters "want a break with the establishment politics of the past."

At the Old Pump Inn tavern in Brooklyn, he was asked if he now considers himself the favorite for nomination. "Frontrunnership seems to change about once a week," said the Colorado senator. "We'll wait and see."

"It was apparently a very good win for Gary Hart, and I commend him for it," Mondale told reporters. "We now go to New York."

Hart piled up 53 percent of the Connecticut vote. Former Vice President Mondale had 29 percent, and the Rev. Jesse Jackson, continuing to poll strongly among blacks, had 12 percent.

Hart, who has been criticizing Mondale for declining to urge an immediate withdrawal of U.S. forces from Central America, said he felt his stand on the volatile issue had won voter approval.

"I think the results showed a rejection of a foreign policy which calls for the continued presence of American troops in Honduras and the possible loss of American lives," he said.

He declined to predict how Connecticut would help his campaign in New York, saying only, "We expect to do very well." A small-sample poll of New York voters by ABC News-Washington Post, conducted Sunday through Tuesday, showed Mondale ahead by 10 points with a six-point margin of error.

Hart won 33 of the 52 Connectiuct delegates at stake. Mondale took 18 delegates to the Democratic National Convention and Jackson 1.

Mondale continues to hold a substantial lead nationwide. Including Connecticut, he has 692 delegates to 422 for Hart. Jackson has 76 and there were 160 uncommitted delegates. It takes 1,967 delegates to win the nomination.

Hart's strength in past primaries held up among the so-called "yuppies," the young urban professionals responding to his call for new ideas in government.

Victory was total. Hart rolled up large majorities in almost every town.

He scored well among all demographic groups, according to network polling place interviews. ABC said Hart held a 2-1 advantage among Roman Catholic voters, who made up more than half the turnout. Hart won more narrowly over Mondale among Jewish voters - potentially significant because Jews make up more than a third of the voting population in New York - where 252 delegates will be at stake.

Hart also defeated Mondale among union voters in Connecticut, despite the AFL-CIO's endorsement for the former vice president.

"This isn't a victory, it's a wipeout," declared Hart aide Carla McDonald. "He's got a message, the people of New England heard that."

Said Mondale: "I think it's fair to say I didn't do well anywhere."

Cuban authorities seize Piedmont plane hijackers

MIAMI, FL — Three men demanding $5 million hijacked a Piedmont Aviation jet with 57 people aboard to Havana on Tuesday, but were quickly taken into custody by Cuban authorities, the Federal Aviation Administration said.

The takeover of the Charleston, S.C.,-to-Miami flight was the first time in six months that a domestic flight had been hijacked to Cuba and the 12th such incident since last May 1.

"The word 'explosives' was mentioned but we don't know what they have," said Jack Barker, an Atlanta-based spokesman for the FAA. No injuries were reported.

Dennis Feldman, an FAA spokesman in Washington, said the Boeing 737 landed in Havana at 4:20 p.m. EST. Less than an hour later he said the FAA had received word that the hijackers were in custody.

The flight arrived safely in Miami shortly before 7 p.m., said controller Robert Craig.

Flight 451, which originated in Newark, N.J., and stopped in Charlotte, N.C., was hijacked at 3:43 p.m. EST after departing Charleston, said Feldman.

Joe Leahy, operations manager for Charleston International Airport, said the flight's crew was notified over south Florida that people aboard wanted the plane taken to Cuba.

As the plane approached the Miami airport, a passenger handed a flight attendant a note, said Ken Carlson of Piedmont headquarters in Winston-Salem, N.C.

The man, "claiming to be armed and claiming to have explosives on board the aircraft, and claiming to have two accomplices on board, demanded that the plane be flown to Havana," Carlson said.

"He promised that the crew and passengers would be released unharmed after landing."

The hijacker's claim that he had two accomplices had not been confirmed, Carlson said. The jet was carrying 52 passengers and a five-member crew, he said.

The last hijacking to Cuba was on Sept. 22, when a New York-to-Virgin Islands flight was diverted after a man with a black box claimed to have a bomb and demanded to go to Havana. There were 10 earlier hijackings to Cuba beginning last May 1 involving South Florida flights.

Officials at Miami International Airport stopped two men before boarding a Piedmont flight to Tampa Sept. 14 and charged them in a suspected hijacking attempt. Two other attempted hijackings were thwarted in the air by passengers who overpowered air pirates.

Shortly after the rash of hijackings started last year, FAA stepped up security measures by placing sky marshals aboard certain flights and making more thorough baggage checks.

Barker said there was no sky marshal aboard Flight 451.

He also said he was surprised that anyone would divert a flight to Cuba since the island government has indicated that all air pirates receive harsh treatment.

"These people face long prison terms in Cuba," Barker said.

Former Gov heads list to push drinking age to 21

BOSTON — Former Gov. John Volpe led a long list of witnesses who pushed Tuesday for a hike in the Massachusetts drinking age to 21 from 20 in hopes of reducing alcohol-related highway deaths.

Volpe, who served as chairman of a presidential commission on drunken driving, told a legislative committee the age change was the single most effective step the state could take to curb alcohol abuse among young motorists.

"When you combine an immature driver with an immature drinker, then you have a deadly combination," said Volpe, whose federal panel recommended a national drinking age of 21.

House Speaker Thomas McGee, Chairman James Barnett of the National Transportation Safety Board and groups like Mothers Against Drunken Driving, the Massachusetts Medical Society and the American Automobile Association also endorsed the age change.

But Sen. Louis Bertonazzi, who helped write the state's 1982 crackdown on drunken driving that calls for mandatory jail sentences for repeat offenders, urged the panel to move slowly.

Bertonazzi, D-Milford, said the change could backfire by seeing minors drive across state lines for booze, then drive back inebriated.

Massachusetts lowered the drinking age from 21 to 18 in 1973, then raised it to 20 in 1979 at the urging of former Gov. Edward J. King. King wanted the age back up to 21, but said a two-year hike was better than none.

Rape case to be movie

BOSTON — Citing wide public interest, Metromedia Television announced yesterday that it plans to produce a 90-minute "docudrama" of the highly publicized New Bedford barroom rape case, using transcripts from the trials as a basis for the story.

"The subject of rape is so important in this country...that we feel it is important for the public to have an opportunity to examine the transcript," said S. James Coppersmith, vice-president and general manager of WCVB-TV, the Boston Metromedia station that will produce the movie with Thomas McCann Associates of Boston. The 90-minute drama, scheduled for distribution this fall, would draw from the hundreds of hours of court transcripts as well as the social issues surrounding the case, Coppersmith said.

The case received widespread national attention after police reported a crowd of men cheered while a woman was raped on a pool table for more than two hours.

More facts in Lynn rape

NEWBURYPORT - An officer who investigated the case of two Lynn policemen accused of getting a woman drunk and raping her in a bar testified Tuesday that the bar owner heard the woman tell one officer, "Boy, you're good."

Cpt. John J. O'Rourke, a state police officer with the Essex County district attorney's office, testified that Stephen Hardin, owner of the Ye Olde Ox Tavern in Lynn, told him he came upstairs from the cellar and found officer Edward Jackson, 31, on top of the woman.

O'Rourke said Hardin told him the woman was saying, "Boy, you're good. You've really got...."

O'Rourke also said Hardin told him three times that if he hadn't been the bar owner, he "would have been the third one on."

Lt. Detective Alfred Duemling, who took the original statement from the other accused officer, Unree Poellnitz, Jr., 34, testified that Poellnitz told him that the woman put her arms around him and kissed him.

"... and then she stated to him, 'now watch this. I don't want you to be jealous,' and she went to the other officer, Jackson, and she began to embrace him and kiss him and I believe he described it as being passionate," Duemling quoted Poellnitz as saying.

Select board candidates speak out

By DAVID LINTON
Collegian Staff

Candidates for Amherst town offices in next month's election voiced their views and qualifications last night at a forum sponsored by the Amherst League of Women Voters.

Each candidate made a five minute opening statement before fielding questions from an audience of about 40 people.

One candidate, who is running unopposed for elector of the Oliver Smith Will, Rosemary Sprague, was not present at the forum due to the flu, according to a member of the league of Women Voters.

The only contest in the Amherst April 10 election is for the two opening seats on the Board of Selectmen in which three candidates, Joan Golowich, Charles Ferguson and incumbent Richard Minear are hoping to fill.

In her opening statement, Golowich, who is the Finance Committee chair, said the town is in "an excellent position, financially" because it has not "been hurt yet" by Proposition 2½ but warned that "we have to plan for the future."

"I see problems down the road. We won't be able to look at the state and federal governments for help so we are on our own, unfortunately," she said.

Among some of her qualifications, Golowich said she has served on the Finance Committee for the past four years, has been a Town Meeting member since 1971 and has served on several committee and administrative posts.

"My interst is financial and that is the way I look at things," she said.

In a statement, which at times drew laughter from the audience, Ferguson said he was running for the board of Selectmen because he wanted to assure the voters of a choice.

"I wouldn't want to hold a public office by default," he sid.

Ferguson, a newcomer in Amherst, voiced concern for the lack of women and citizens running for town offices. He said that the people in Amherst's "sister city" in Estonia, U.S.S.R. must say that elections in Amherst are no different than elections in Russia.

"My candidacy is no joke. It's not frivolous. I'm not going to waste my time and energy on something I don't think is worth running for," Ferguson said.

Incumbent Minear, who is a Japanese history professor at the University of Massachusetts, said he is committed to openess in town government. Minear was elected to the board in 1981. Before his election to the board, he served on the Planning Board and has been a Town Meeting member.

Other candidates, who are running unopposed are: Incumbent William Field, for town moderator; Francesca Maltese for school committee; Thomas Lardner and incumbent Vera Joseph Peterson for Jones Library Trustees.

Rape is a crime against state

By LISA STRATOULY
Collegian Correspondent

Editors note: This is the first of a two-part series about the legal and medical aspects of rape.

Unknown to most people, rape is legally regarded as a crime against the state in which it was committed, rather than a crime against the woman who was raped, according to Sally Borden, assistant to the Victim/Witness Assistance Program of the District Attorney's Office in Northampton.

"The state itself brings charges against the alledged assailant and the victim's name is not mentioned," Borden said.

The Victim/Witness program acts as a link between a sexual assault victim and the legal system, providing information about the legal procedure for those wishing to prosecute.

Borden said that since rape is considered a crime against the state in which it was committed, the victim's role is to act as a witness for that state. A decision by the victim to drop charges once the prosecution has begun involves a complex procedure due to the legal involvement of the state as well as the victims role as witness to the crime.

According tc Borden, legal prosecution begins with a very detailed statement from the victim, including details of the nature of the assault and the circumstances surrounding it. Police officers usually ask questions relating to information concerning who, what, where, how, and when.

"It is not uncommon for women to feel defensive from these types of detailed and personal questions, but the police officers try to be as sensitive as possible", she said.

The Sensitive Crimes Unit at UMass, located in Dickinson Hall, is a police unit specifically trained to deal with sensitive crimes, such as sexual assault and harassment.

Mary Dumas, a police officer in that unit, said an important objective is to make the victim feel safe, as well as to restore some of the power taken away from the victim by the assault.

Dumas also said their unit caters to the needs of the victims by providing a safe and private environment where the victim is informed of her rights as well as options: including counseling and legal services.

"We make sure the victim stays in control of the situation -- all the decisions are made by her-- we only provide support, information, and counseling," she said.

Select board considers new dumping site

By BOB BURGESS
Collegian Staff

Amherst town Meeting members will vote April 30 on a proposal made by Amherst Auto Recycling Inc. to relocate its dumping site into one of the town's main water supply centers, as a result of the Amherst Board of Selectmen's approval of the plan Monday night.

The 4-1 vote, to allow the company to move its dump within an area which supplies Amherst, including the University of Massachusetts, with about 60 percent of its water, came amid protests by Amherst Citizens Against Pollution (ACAP) that the plan, which involves capping the present landfill and moving to an area farther east on Old Belchertown Road, had not been thoroughly studied. Amherst Auto Recycling owns the land, which contains an underground stream used for drinking water.

Gordon B. Palley, president of the company, stated in a letter addressed to Town Meeting members that the major parts of the plan, designed "to protect the concerns of the Town on safeguarding the quality of the Amherst water supply," are: a vinyl liner underneath the work area at the new site, covered with sand and crushed stone; a connection to the area's sanity sewer to carry collected water off the liner; and an interceptor collection manhole to check water coming from the work area.

The relocation of the dump comes as a result of a Department of Environmental Quality Engineering order closing the present site by January 1983, but that has yet to take place.

K. Nour Mahmoud, a member of ACAP, said "We're dealing with an area which supplies most of the town's water and I would recommend an analysis be made of not only the present site, but the lining to be used at the proposed site. Perhaps two liners should be used."

Mark Myers, another member of ACAP, said "The new site is on ground which is less permeable than the site used now. Chemicals tend to stay out of the soil for a while, but they may still travel along until they reach a place where they may seep in and contaminate the aquifer." Amherst Auto Recycling has, according to Myers, deposited oil drained from cars into the dump.

Myers also said that he has found traces of magnesium and iron, but amounts were not mentioned. Myers added, "It seems to me that the new site could not do the damage that the old site has already done."

Town manager Barry Del Castilho said "This is not to be a hazardous waste disposal site," and that the members of town meeting were the people who would approve or disapprove of this proposal. The selectmen voted only to put this on the Town Meeting agenda.

Also on Monday night's selectmen agenda was a request by the trustees of the Jones Library to "clear up" a misunderstanding concerning the library's budget for the next fiscal year. Del Castilho said yesterday.

"There is disagreement on whether their budget proposal goes through the town manager and then to the finance committee or straight to the finance committee, or directly to town meeting."

SGA's Senate to elect officers

By JOHN VINCENT
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association's presidential elections were just completed before spring break, yet the Undergraduate Student Senate will hold elections tonight to appoint new senate officers.

Student Senators will conduct an inhouse, secret ballot election for the positions of Treasurer and Speaker.

Current Treasurer Eric Nitzsche, a junior finance major, said he will not run again because of "not being recognized for what I've done." Nitzsche also said the internal bickering between student senators interfered with the progress of his work.

Senate Speaker Chris Sullivan, a junior math major, said he will run for re-election because "I can do a lot next year; the job has just begun." He plans to recruit more people for the senate, keep the senators better informed, and help work for a set of common goals in the SGA.

As presiding officer of the Senate, the Speaker manages the "large bureaucracy" of the Senate by overseeing the minutes and agenda of the meetings, action on the Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF), committee chairmen, and regulating paid staff and affiliated agencies, said Sullivan.

As Treasurer, Nitzsche manages the finances of the SATF, monitors the financial situations of all RSO groups and Student Controlled Businesses, recommends financial policies to the Senate, and investigates financial policy violations. He also assists people who want to request funding from the Senate.

Sullivan and Nitzsche both said that although they are paid for only 20 hours a week, they work 40.

Sullivan said that the election of the SGA officers will be approved tonight but the officials may not be officially installed until next week's meeting.

Grad Senate approves budget

By SEAN CASEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Graduate Student Senate approved last night its budget for fiscal year 1985, including the revenues it will receive, its expenditures, and yearly funding.

The budget projects that the senate will spend about $220,564 in 1985, and the projected budget surplus at the end of the year should be almost $39,000.

The yearly funding requests, which were approved by the senate finance committee, were accepted by the senate with only two changes: The Outing Club, which was originally denied funding on the grounds that their fees were considered nominal by some finance committee members and able to absorb additional expenditures, was granted $500, and Nummo News, which was originally granted $4,000 by the finance committee, was ultimately given its original request of $5,615 by virtue of what committee members and senators considered a better budget presentation.

As in past budgets, the largest yearly funding allocation was awarded to UMass Transit Services. The $70,400 allocation had already been agreed upon in the contract which the graduate senate negotiated with Transit Services, a budget which comes up for renegotiation next year.

The second largest allocation was the $47,393 for the Legal Services Office (LSO). Legal Services was created with one-quarter yearly support from the graduate senate and three-quarters from the Student Government Association. When this expenditure was questioned, senate Treasurer Stephen Keye told the senate that the charter of the LSO may be questioned in hearings to be held in April.

Meeting to discuss importance of student involvement

By YADIRA BETANCES
Collegian Staff

An organization awareness meeting will be held today at 6 p.m. in room 169 of the Campus Center complex at the University of Massachusetts to stress why Third World students should participate in the Student Government Association (SGA), campus-wide committees and various Third World students Organizations.

The meeting is sponsored by the Third World Legislative Caucus of the SGA and the Office of Third World Affairs.

Sherwood Thompson, director of the Office of Third World Affairs said he encourages Third World students, members of Third World organizations as well as students interested in joining organizations to attend.

Thompson explained if student involvement in Third World organizations is not maintained, the SGA will nullify Third World Student groups.

The meeting will give students an essence of what's going on in terms of the future of many Third World organizations and to make students aware and inspired to participate, he said.

He added he will have an opportunity to explain students involvement in the SGA and other organizations. "Your contribution, even in small ways can change the image of the University," he said.

"Students are the mirror of the University. Students mirror the University image and students mirror the university support service," Thompson said.

"Students can actually transform the University. The University can offer an environment conducive and accomodating to their needs," he said.

Students interest have not changed over the years, and by participating in the many Third World organizations now existing on campus students will be adding to the multi-cultural focus of the University, Thompson said.

"As Third World people at UMass, our presence here is not a fun and games affair, we are charged and duty bound to serve our time," he said.

Thompson stressed Third World people owe their present status to the many struggles waged during the Human Rights movement of the 1960s, a struggle which he said is still going on today.

"We (Third World community) must dispell the myth we are our brother's and sister's keeper. We must work together in diligence and unity showing responsibility with accountability."

Third World student members of the SGA play the integrate part in the planning and operation of high governing committee of the SGA, he said. Working for the SGA, Thompson said, "enhances everyone's life."

Announcements

The Duke Ellington Committee proudly prsents the 7th annual Solos & Duos Series at the University of Massachusetts. The Solos & Duos Series has traditionally been an exciting chance to personally experience the talents of fine jazz musicians in the comfortable and intimate atmosphere of the Cape Cod Lounge at UMass. The Series begins Friday, March 30th at 8:00 p.m. with Don Pullen, Solo Pianist. The show is free to the public.

Students Advocating Financial Aid, a campus based student lobbying group, will be traveling to Washington, D.C. on April 1st through Wednesday, April 4th.

SAFA enjoys a fine reputation in Washington, D.C. and has been proclaimed by Tip O'Neil as being "One of the finest student lobbying organizations of its kind."

All new members are welcome to lobbying sessions from Monday through Thursday from 4:00 - 5:30 p.m. this week, in preparation for the trip. If you have any questions, please call Cindy Howard, president of SAFA at 256-1474 or 545-0306.

"It is an honor representing Third World groups and organizations in the SGA. We are preceeded as leaders of the Third World community," Robert Teixeira chairman of the Third World Caucus and an Afro-American studies Senior said.

"(The) student government offers a wide array of opportunities to develop skills in public speaking, writing, accounting, budgeting, etc.," Teixeira said. He also added "it is exciting to work with potential leaders of this society whether they are allies or not."

"Students should continue to strongly support those student organizations that service them. These positive activities are the most constructive ways to spend our social life," Teixeira said.

Porn on campus needs protest

To the Editor,

As concerned women and men of the community, we are writing to protest the display and sale of pornographic magazines by the Munchies and Campus Center stores at the University of Massachusetts. Clearly, pornography degrades both women and men and should be condemned for that reason alone. But recent studies have begun to expose an even uglier side to pornography, showing that it encourages men to committ real acts of violence against real women.

It seems especially hypocritical that the university condones the sale of this material in light of its newly-adopted policy against sexual harassment, which is defined to include "public display of photographs, pin-ups calendars, etc. which portray sexually explicit, offensive, or demeaning images."

There is a strong movement within the university community, comprised of both student and staff members, to address this issue. We are not calling for censorship of pornography, but rather for an examination of its content, values, and effect on our lives in a time when rape, woman battering, and child sexual abuse are epidemic. The policy regarding pornography of the university stores will change only with committed, concerted action. Toward that end, we urge you to contact the President of the Student Board of Governors of the Campus Center and the Merchandise Manager of the University Store.

Editor's note: This letter was signed by the following groups: Committee for Equal Rights and Reproductive Freedom, Everywoman's Center, Gay and Lesbian Activists, Hampshire County N.O.W., Men Against Violence Against Women, Necessities, SCERA Women's Issues Team, Undergraduate Women's Caucus, Western Massachusetts Latin American Solidarity Committee, Women's Forum Against Media Violence, Women's Leadership Project, Womonfyre Books.

On 'Smallminded' criticism

To the Editor

I was hoping that it would not become necessary to respond to editorials against the Commuter Area Government, but the Daniel Holways in the Senate and in the student community need to be held responsible for the untruths that they write and the smallmindedness that they demonstrate in public.

Referring to yesterday's Op-Ed column titled "Commuters Do Need Democracy" (of March 26), Mr. Holway states that our reorganization proposal was "rammed through" the senate. Later he states that this board has two representatives that "don't even have to be commuters". To top it off, he then states that the board appoints itself completing the undemocratic process. In all of the assertions Mr. Holway is quite mistaken.

If Mr. Holway was at the Senate meeting the night our reorganization proposal was passed he should have noticed that the Commuters made no secret about past problems. If he was paying attention he would have noticed that our proposal was voted on by the Senate body four times, all four times passing. This is hardly ramming it through.

If Mr. Holway had read our proposal, he would have noticed the provision on the front page which states that all governing board members must be commuters.

The aim of this letter, however, is not merely to enlighten the obtuse Mr. Holway, but rather to say that the Commuter office went to the Senate for their support--and received it. Everyone in the room knew the situation; we did not attempt to hide anything. Some people rant over the issue of democracy, but when it works against their personal interests, they shed tears and call names.

Sexism affects men and women

To the Editor

Today, we saw for the first time the agenda for Lesbian and Gay Awareness Week. As gay men and R.A.'s, we were very interested in the coming week's events. To our surprise, we saw an event that displayed rampant sexism. On Thursday, 29 March, there will be a slide show called "Lesbian Images in Photography 1850-1984". The advertisement states that this workshop is strictly "women only".

None of the events of the week are for men only, and we feel it is discriminatory to bar one particular sex from any of the workshops during the week. As oppressed groups, gay men and lesbians should be working together, not trying to exclude each other from their respective events. This action, in our opinion, also strengthens the stereotype of the "separatist, man-hating lesbian". It would be considered intolerable if, for example, the gay men's health workshop was publicized as "for men only". Granted it is a male-oriented event, however, women are equally welcome to attend. We, as men and as gays, ask only for the same consideration.

It is important to remember that discrimination can go in both directions. In the battle against sexism, we must not only fight for the rights of women, but also for the rights of men.

We feel that the exclusion of men from this presentation is discriminatory and in direct violation of University policies aimed at ending sexism on campus.

We shall be present at the slide show and hope that other men, straight and gay, will attend as well. We must stand up for our rights.

Nuns thank supporters

To the Editor

This letter is to thank the hundreds of people who wrote to us while we were in prison and those who contributed money to the "Women of Faith Defense Fund." Your kindnesses shattered the isolation of prison and nourished our hope that we will bring this arms race to an end.

Sister Judy Beaumont O.S.B. and Sister Ann Shay S.N.D. of Hartford, Connecticut entered the Adult Correctional Institute, Friday, March 23, to begin their 30 day sentence. Judy and Ann are the last of the eight Women of Faith to serve their sentence. Please send them a card or letter of support within the next three weeks.

The arms race is the greatest sign of failure in human community. We feel our action alone won't stop the arms race and lessen the risk of nuclear war but that our action in combination with the actions of others will accelerate a political process ultimately leading to the abolition of nuclear weapons. The community we develope and share in the process is a gift and sign of the world wide community in progress.

Thank you again for your kindnesses.

On behalf of Frances Crowe, Victoria Safford, Joan Balles, Sister Judy Beaumont O.S.B., Sister Ann Shay S.N.D., Kate Champa, and Sister Ann Welch R.S.M.

Imagining the unthinkable

Those of you who enjoy having sex and are planning on not having children in the near future will probably be interested to learn that our so-called "liberal" state is trying to eliminate state funded abortions.

The newest anti-abortion amendment already passed through the Massachusetts State House once, with an overwhelmingly anti-choice majority vote of 113-56. If it passes the second time around, it will become a binding referendum on the November ballot that could cut off all Medicaid monies used to fund abortions.

Some of us may have a hard time imagining the dangerous implications an amendment like this could have on our lives. And many of us probably can't understand why so many women's groups and reproductive rights organizations throughout the state are alarmingly upset and frightened that this amendment will be passed. How could we understand?

Miriam Zoll

Most of us were still in grade school in 1973 when the United States Supreme Court upheld the Roe v. Wade court decision that legalized abortion in America for the first time since 1869. Most of us don't remember that prior to 1973 an estimated one million women had illegal abortions every year. We were too young to know that at least 3,000 women died every year trying to terminate their unwanted pregnancies.

Most of us are not aware that on the average, 6,000 women per year admitted themselves to hospitals in the New York City area alone because of medical complications due to incomplete abortions. Most of us can't imagine what it would feel like to be pregnant and not have access to safe medical abortions.

The majority of us come from middle-class or upper-middle-class backgrounds. Most of us can afford the $200 to $300 bill abortion clinics charge. Most of us don't have to depend on state funded medical monies to pay for abortions if we ever needed one. But poor women do.

Poor mothers. Poor sisters. Poor aunts and nieces. Women who already have six kids and can't afford to feed or clothe another one. If state funded abortions disappeared, we'd probably witness the return of the "backroom" abortion and we'd probably hear stories about poor women who shove anything from coat hangers to Drano up their vaginas hoping to end their unwanted pregnancies. And there would be a good chance that women would be dying in the ghettos again, in the projects, and in the hospital emergency rooms.

This issue goes beyond the question of state funded abortions however, because any anti-abortion legislation threatens every woman's right to choose whether or not she decides to have an abortion. And many feminists and reproductive rights groups are predicting that access to safe and legal abortions would be severely jeopardized if Ronald Reagan was re-elected this November.

If Reagan is elected to a second term, it is very likely that he would appoint at least two Supreme Court justices who share his anti-abortion politics. It is also probable that the Supreme Court could rule that the Constitution does not guarantee women's rights to have abortions, and that it could reverse the Roe v. Wade decision and allow individual states to create their own abortion laws.

Now imagine that the anti-abortion amendment currently in the Massachusetts State House passes and state funding is eliminated. Imagine that Reagan is re-elected and he appoints two anti-abortion justices and the Supreme Court rules that states should draft their own abortion laws. Imagine that Massachusetts outlaws abortion all together. Imagine what this would do to us.

Against the tuition increase

To the Editor,

To the Honorable Representative ————————:

I would like to bring to your attention the Board of Regent's newly adopted Tuition Policy. The Policy has many flaws, a few of which are: that the policy allows for tuition to be set at 33 percent of the overall cost of education, which could increase tuition dramatically in Massachusetts which already has the highest cost of public education in comparison to other land grant universities in New England. It permits a 15 percent increase in tuition yearly (a possible 60 percent increase in four years to students). It could also effectively deny access to public higher education to economically disadvantaged students.

For these reasons and others I encourage you to vote against the Board of Regent's Tuition Policy as part of the Regent's budget.

Fran Pheeny

Editor's Note: The Public Policy team has a table set up outside the Hatch for the next two weeks. Available at the table will be form letters like this one so you can send the message to your representative.

EAST SIDE

Why 'On Campus'?

Today marks the first issue of the bi-weekly Collegian supplement ON CAMPUS. This new section will be a double page pullout comprised of an east side section and a west side section, with a shared feature space and calendar. This sheet will serve to inform you of activities and news of concern to you as on campus students living in the residential areas.

We foresee this page growing to serve your needs as students, with help from the residentially based groups and governments. We also hope this combined effort will serve to bring unity to the areas which comprise on campus life, by responding to a long ignored need of students and groups to share information.

Any residentially based groups wishing to contribute information call East Side 546-6534, West Side 546-5709 or mail it to the Collegian 113 Campus Center.

Sincerely
John P. Forti

Self Help Workshops

Toward Becoming A Successful Student: This three-session workshop will focus on "getting better control of our time and life." The primary goal of more efficient time management will be achieved by becoming familiar with a number of strategies for increasing concentration, remembering and responding successfully on exams.

Techniques in learning how to relax will also be explored. There will be opportunities to experience some techniques for increasing calmness, serenity and enjoyment. The second series of this workshop will be held on Tuesdays, 3:00-5:00 p.m. on April 2, 9, and 23, sign-up at Room 322, Berkshire House.

Preparing To Choose A Major: A Career/Life Strategy for Undecided Sophomores: Having trouble deciding on a major field of study? This workshop is for CASIAC or any undecided who are interested in declaring a major during.

Counseling Week of This Semester It is a two-session experience designed to initiate choice by helping participants explore and assess their educational/personal values, interests and strengths. This workshop will be offered twice, on Tuesday, April 10 with a follow-up on April 17 and on Thursday, April 12 with a follow-up on April 19. Workshops are from 4 to 6 p.m.

To register for a workshop, call the Counseling and Career Development Center, at 545-0333. You may sign-up until the day the workshops begin. All workshops are in Berkshire House.

Spring Seminar for Students with Problem drinking parents: Many students have concerns about family members with drinking problems.

The Alcohol Education Program of the University Health Services is holding its second of two seminars on the subject next week covering:

– signs and symptoms of problem drinking parents and alcoholism
– family systems and alcoholism
– common problems facing adult children of alcoholics
– resources for help locally and in your hometown area.

Seminar Two is entitled: "Alcoholism and family systems: Breaking the Cycle." This session features role playing activites to identify disfunctional family patterns which prevent an alcholic from entering treatment. Discussion will focus on practical strategies and resources for non-alcoholic family members.

This session will take place on Thursday, April 5 from 7 - 9 p.m. in Room 302, University Health Services. Students are encouraged to attend but must pre-register by calling 549-2671, Ext. 181.

East Side Arts

East Side arts, Butterfield Arts Group and Central Area Government are sponsoring an "Arts Bus" to New York City on April 1. The bus will leaving at 7 a.m. from the Haigis Mall and leave Rockefeller Center at 9 p.m. the same evening. Visit New York's galleries, museums, Broadway, or just shop. Sign up and $18 must be in tomorrow 3/29 at Hills North rm. 439 from 9-1, or at the Campus Center table from 1-5. For further information contact Donna at 546-4581 or Debbie at 545-0422.

East Side arts council is looking for mimes, jugglers and performers who want exposure and wish to perform at the East Side event, contact Debbie at 545-0422.

Gay Awareness Week

The goals of Lesbian and Gay Awareness Week are two-fold:

1. To support, nurture, and celebrate the lives of the approximately 10 percent of the campus community who are lesbian or gay.

2. To raise the awareness of non-lesbian, gay and bisexual students about how "homophobia" impacts on their lives and relationships as well as to become more aware of the specific needs, issues, and realities of life for lesbians and gays.

This is the first time a week of activities: films, speakers, workshops, slideshows, workshops and cultural events like a coffeehouse on lesbian and gay themes has occurred at the University. A planning committee of students, staff, R.A.'s, and administrators coordinated by Felice Yeskel, Lesbian/Gay Awareness Trainer on the East side, has been meeting for a few months to plan the week. The planning committee has received financial support from many sources across campus.

Many times lesbian and gay issues are not attended to and are invisible on campus, a concentrated week of activities is designed to help this situation change. The organizers hope that a diverse group of students will attend, and have included a range of activities, so that there might be something of interest for everyone. They especially hope that students who may never have thought about lesbian and gay issues will attend the events, and have tried to make the events of the week safe and comfortable for everyone.

For more information about the weeks events call: Res. Ed. East – 5-0422, PGA – 5-0154, Lesbian & Gay Counseling Collective 5-2645.

Gullah! at Hampden

The Third World Theater at the University of Massachusetts will close its Spring '84 season with an original production of GULLAH! Thursday-Saturday, April 5-7 and 12-14 at 8 p.m. and a Sunday matinee April 8 and 15 at 2 p.m. in Hampden Theater, UMass.

This new musical play by the acclaimed playwright, novelist and director Alice Childress touches on the lives of Afro-American descendants of Native African slaves, who reside in sea islands off the coast of South Carolina and Georgia. The play focuses on a young college graduate student, born on the island, who returns to study his people. The encounter between the modern and traditional worlds is both touching and humorous as he finds his way back to his roots.

Alice Childress received an Obie Award for her play Trouble in Mind and the first Paul Robeson Award for her Outstanding Contribution to the Performing Arts, from the Black Filmmakers' Hall of Fame. Her other plays include Wedding Band and Wine in the Wilderness, both stage and television successes. A Hero Ain't Nothin' but a Sandwich and the more recently published novels A Short Walk and Rainbow Jordan have been widely praised.

Ms. Childress will offer a public lecture in conjunction with the premiere of GULLAH!, on Saturday, April 7, 1 p.m. in the Smith College green room (Theater Building).

Nam June Paik presents his video art works

Nam June Paik, in the context of the 5th annual Video Arts Festival is showing his most resent video work, called "1984", at Hampden Theatre, on March 28th at 7:00 p.m. A discussion and reception will follow at Hampden Gallery at 8:00 p.m.

"1984", is the result of Paik's video piece "Good Morning Mr. Orwell," which was shown by P.B.S. in New York, through satellite from Centre Pompidou in Paris, on the 1st of January 1984.

Paik, a Korean born artist and musician, got interested in television from the perspective of a composer, but soon found out that the problems of music, performance and television were closely linked.

A key-principle underlying his art, is the solution to a problem taken from the field of information science, the inbalance between information input and output with all of its physiological, political and social effects. As Paik saw it, before the rise of video as an art form, T.V. technology had been developed to make passive consumers of its audience. So, much of his T.V. sculpture and video tape work is directed toward the activation of the T.V. audience.

An issue that is being carried through his work is the humanization of technology and as Paik mentioned, "no cybernated art...but art for cybernated life."

The reception and discussion will take place after the performance at Hampden Gallery at 8:00 p.m.

Gallery hours are Monday through Friday, 3-7 p.m. and Sunday, 2-5 p.m. (Closed on Saturday). For more information contact the director at 549-6791.

Are you tired of standing in line at the Grad Tower to use the computer? We know how you feel. So to alleviate this problem, Southwest Area Government once again is sponsoring a Computer Center in Hampden Student Center. If you would like to sign up to use the computer, please call the S.W.A.G. Office at 5-0960. Space is limited!

Spring Concert! Spring Concert!

It's coming!! Spring Concert is just around the corner!! Would you like to get involved? There are openings for people who would like to work on Security, Hospitality or Stage Crews, please call the S.W.A.G. office at 5-0960.

Are You Stuck In A Rut?!?

Could be because you're parked in lot 21 or 22. If you haven't noticed the parking lot surface is in pathetic shape. This problem has caused many a flat tire. Since these lots are for student use, we would like you the students to push the administration to do something about this problem. So if you could, please help us get the administration to repave by writing to Ms. Dorothy Thayer, Chair of Parking and Transportation, Psychology Dept., Tobin Hall Campus.

Also, coming up at this week's SWAG meeting is the debate over the National Association for Student Personnel Administrations (NASPA) Resolution on Marketing Alcoholic Beverages on Campus. This resolution sets guidelines as to the activities of beverage alcohol advertising and what types of marketing will not be permitted. While the idea of the resolution seems to be viewed favorably by the house councils and area governments, the actual resolution seems to contain "rather ambiguous language because of statements that (bring about questions of moral judgement and ideals)," according to Dave McCarthy, co-president of SWAG. All students are invited to attend the SWAG meetings held in Hampden Center, adjacent to Munchies at 7:00 p.m.

Center for Racial Studies

The Center For Racial Studies will sponsor a Black History "Match Wits" Contest on Sunday, April 8, 1984 at 6:00 p.m. in the Hampden Theater, Southwest.

The "MATCH WITS" Contest, an adaptation of the College Bowl format, is a question and answer game concerning the history, culture and achievements of Black Americans.

Resource materials for the round-robin, question and answer event will be given to designated contestants once their entry form and entry fee is $1.00 is received. The entry dealine is March 30, 1984.

A Scholars award of $150.00 will be awarded to the winning team and commemorative Black History prizes will be awarded to the other contestants. For additional information contact Sandra Levy, Center for Racial Studies, 545-0472.

Southwest Arts
Jeffrey Keough's display

"THE KEEPER" an installation by Jeffrey Keough, will be exhibited March 27 through April 13, 1984 at Hampden Gallery, Southwest Residential College, UMass. An opening reception will be held Tuesday, March 27, 5-7 p.m.

In his installation, Keough seeks to communicate his environmental concerns by transforming the gallery dramatically, through a series of props, architectonic elements, large drawings, lighting and sound.

Keough is an artist who lives and works in Northampton. He has studied sculpture at the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston. His work has mainly been large, outdoor environmental pieces, as interventions to the physical environment by the use of different materials such as inflatables, neon and architectural elements. He participated in the New England Arts Festival with the piece "The Electrician's Son." His environmental aesthetics are being transferred indoors now, toward an object-oriented work.

Hampden Gallery is open Monday through Friday, 3-7 p.m., Sunday, 2-5 p.m. (Saturday closed).

For more information call Ketty Nikitaides, director at 549-6791.

Declaration of dependence

THE ALARM DECLARATION
(IRS Records)

By ADAM BRIGHTMAN
Collegian Correspondent

When I first saw The Alarm open for U2 last year, I thought, "Oh, wow! It's The Clash with acoustic guitars!" I must admit I was impressed by their formula of football-cheer choruses, driving rhythms and acoustic strumming. In short, their songs sound like left-wing marching anthems.

I was fairly impressed with their debut LP. It was clear that they had picked a brand of music which resembled early Clash, and had decided to expand upon it with acoustic guitar and harmonica.

The Alarm's new album, Declaration, does contain some of that Clash-inspired formula. "Marching On" and "Where Were You When the Storm Broke?" have a majesty about them that makes me want to lace-up my army boots and join the march. There are other elements at work on this record, though.

U2 seems to have rubbed the band in a new direction. "Howling Wind" and "Third Light" display the slower, direct beat, non-melodic flow, and electric guitar of that group. "Shout to the Devil" is a photocopy of U2's recent work right down to the "impassioned" vocal wailing and psychotic drone in the background. It also sounds ridiculous.

"Sixty-Eight Guns" comes on like a weak cross between Springsteen and The Clash (Hey! They even mention backstreets and guns!). The horns on that and other cuts, however, really enhance the music.

One truly worthwhile cut on this record is the shortened acoustic version of the Summer of '83 hit, "The Stand". It best states their attitudes with a humble message of defiance. The Alarm seem to be abandoning the acoustic attack and driving rhythm of The Clash in order to now try to emulate U2. "Howling Wind" points in this direction. It is only marginally successful.

Another complaint might be that their lyrics are a bit impersonal. They sing of romantic heros, being true to oneself and fighting back without showing any evidence of individual experiences. They never make it clear what they're fighting back against—are they fighting oppression or impression? Perhaps they want political respect like The Clash and U2, but aren't willing to do anything to get it.

I read somewhere that these guys consider themselves punks of a new order, but this album suggests musical confusion in a sum of influences. Then again, they might just be posers. The future will tell. In the meantime, I'd pass up this album for their debut LP, or better yet, see them on stage.

One More from MacDonald

By JON STRYMISH
Collegian Correspondent

One More Sunday by John MacDonald is a mess of moral overgeneralizations. On the one hand, there's the Reverend Mathew Meadow's preaching against all the sins of the world, and on the other there's MacDonald preaching against Meadows. Mathew Meadows is a good old time southern capitalist fundamentalist, who saw nothing wrong with taking the faithful, as long as it's for a good cause.

This is MacDonald's 50th book and it packs very little importance or pretension. It does have five or six quirky but believable characters, whom I could imagine as real people trying their hardest in a weird situation. Their psychiatric problems are stated outright so we do not have to work to find them but I was still intrigued about how they would solve their various dilemmas. I wouldn't want to live with these people for more than a week.

Most of the characters are sly; they come up with some interesting ideas to get themselves ahead. A computer programmer sets into his system a device to make all the records go away if he is fired. A Japanese believer, who worships the microchip, builds a voice synthesizer, which allows secretaries to make calls as Mathew Meadows. This personal touch is very useful for increasing donations. Many of these ideas could be useful for the student who is heading into the business world.

The Reverend's cause, the Church of the Eternal Believer, is a success taking in over two million dollars a week but it has some problems. Meadows is getting senile and his son John isn't sure about the goodness of the Church. A nosy reporter from New York disappears as she is investigating the Church, and now her husband is looking for her. The government wants to interfere with business and those psychiatric problems of these elders are coming dangerously close to being scandels.

This might sound an empty soap opera or a bestseller, but this is not all there is to MacDonald's writing. His scenarios of each person's past try to give us some insight into why people become believers, and why each person has fit into their role. Through many of the important conversations he keeps two sets of dialogue running at the same time, and it works; we see the characters motivations and manueverings. The effect is like the balcony scene from Annie Hall.

MacDonald has a very simple straightforward writing style which is much like John Steinbeck with some extra sex added. He manages to keep all the strands of the story together and never loses the reader's interest.

John D. MacDonald, author of One More Sunday.

Stull hopes for a wide-open offense

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON - Hoping to breathe new life into the University of Massachusetts football program, Robert Stull, a successful offensive coordinator at the University of Washington, was appointed the 21st coach in a press conference at the Northampton Hilton, yesterday.

Stull, 38, said he plans to, offensively, throw the ball and mix up the plays and make UMass a more exciting football team to watch. Stull also announced goals of his are to win the Yankee Conference title and win the Division I-AA national title.

The new coach, in his first head coaching job, also said that the present staff will not be fired.

"I'm very excited to be here," Stull said. "I'm very impressed with the people at the University of Massachusetts and their fine tradition here."

Stull was chosen from a field of 54 applicants in a national search and received a four year contract. Stull has been offensive coordinator at Washington since 1979 and the Huskies have posted a 47-12 record.

"I believe football is a spectator sport. I want to throw the ball and mix it up. I don't believe in three yards and a cloud of dust."
—New football coach Bob Stull

In the five year span, Huskie grid teams have broken the school record for total offense twice and have averaged 26.9 points a game.

"I believe football is a spectator sport," Stull said. "I would like to throw the ball and mix it up. I don't believe in three yards and a cloud of dust.

"At Washington, our offense was balanced and here I want to have the ability to throw or run. I want to have a wide-open offense but all of this depends on the personel here.

"We will have to recognize our strengths and weaknesses and adjust," he said. Stull wants to evaluate the talent that is here.

Spring football practice opens on April 9 and the spring game is slated for May 5. Stull said he plans to use the spring to get the basics done and evaluate the team.

Stull's long range goals are to win Yankee Conference and the Div. I-AA crown.

"I'm hoping to build a quality program," he said. "The administration is moving in a positive direction." Stull said scholarships for the team will be increased from 60 to 70.

The present staff, including defensive coordinator Jim Reid, who was the interim coach after Bob Pickett resigned on February 11, will stay on according to Stull.

"I will work with the staff that is there," Stull said. "I don't see any problem at all."

Stull also said that an offensive coordinator would be added to the staff by the end of the week.

Stull said he will be more involved with the offense but he will work with both sides of the ball. Stull said he plans to 'coach' the coaches to evaluate practices.

Stull is a 1968 graduate from Kansas State where he was a three year letterman and captain of the football team. He received his undergraduate degree in physical education and has a masters in Education.

He has been at Washington since 1975, all under coach Don James, and was the receiver coach and recruiting coordinator until 1979 when he was appointed to the offensive coordinator, offensive line coach and recruiting coordinator positions.

NL picks - Braves out West, Dogfight in East

By MIKE LEVINE
Collegian Staff

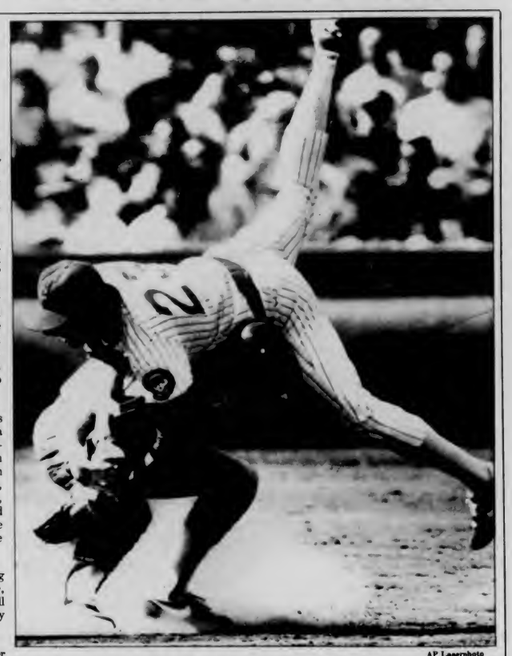
Season number 108 is almost here for the National League and this promises to be one of the most exciting seasons in years, with no fewer than seven legitimate pennant contenders, and a few others who could make large strides toward future pennants.

The Eastern Division promises to be another dogfight with Montreal, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, and St. Louis expected to be the top dogs.

However, the Expos, with the acquisition of left-handed reliever Gary Lucas and former Phillie Pete Rose, undoubtedly a true winner if there ever was one, should finally live up to their potential and take the NL East crown.

With Rose added to a solid hitting attack which includes Andre Dawson, Gary Carter, and Tim Wallach and Lucas, Jeff Reardon, and Dan Schatzeder in the bullpen to relieve Steve Rogers, Charlie Lea, and Bill Gullickson, anything less than first place will not be enough for fans from the Great White North.

Meanwhile, if St. Luis' Joaquin Andujar, Bob Forsch and friends can regain the form that took them to the World Series two years ago and George Hendrick and company continue their timely hitting, the Cardinals should make a pretty good run at the Expos.



Philadelphia's Wheeze Kids will need a repeat performance from Cy Young Award winner John Denny and replacements for Rose and Joe Morgan at first and second base to have a shot at repeating as champs. Also, the Pirates, with the addition of Amos Otis and John Tudor, can't be counted out. The Mets, despite showing some promise during spring training, shouldn't be a factor. The same goes for the Cubs, but that's nothing new for them.

As for things out West, the Atlanta Braves, with probably the most balanced attack in the majors, led by MVP Dale Murphy, should regain the NL West crown from the Dodgers. However, they will need to find a replacement for Phil Niekro in the starting rotation. The Padres, who have been the perennial doormats of the West since their inception in 1969, should give the Braves a good run with the acquisition of Goose Gossage to go with a fairly young pitching staff.

Dodger manager Tommy Lasorda's upset stomach this season will not be a result of Italian food, but of the horrendous defense that will prevent them from repeating as NL West champs. But with their starting pitching and experience, anything can happen. On the other hand, Houston's solid defense, along with good pitching, could make them a dark horse choice, but the hitting must come through.

The Giants, with their improved pitching and defense, could surprise a few people, while Cincinnati's Big Red Machine will need more than Dave Parker and Tony Perez to have a shot in this league.

It would be tough to predict the winner of a Montreal-Atlanta championship series, but let's hope new baseball commissioner Peter Uberroth has a heavy winter coat to withstand that cold Canadian wind in mid-October.

AP Laserphoto

The National League East race will probably be up in the air right down to the wire just like Cubs second baseman Ryne Sandberg (23) in a 1982 game being held up by the Phillies Mike Schmidt. Philadelphia, Montreal, St. Louis and Pittsburgh should be fighting it out until October.

Zulu opens practice

The University of Massachusetts women's Ultimate Frisbee team began practice for its 1984 Spring season Monday under sunny skies. ZULU (Zoo Ultimate Ladies Union), who won the 1982 Ultimate National Championship, holds practice on the Southwest playing field daily.

The women started running laps in the Cage the week before spring break. Due to the snow-covered fields, practice outside was too cold and too dangerous.

The team looks very good this season," said team captain Taara Hoffman. "The women who have played before are in good shape and the rookies are enthusiastic and are catching on quickly.

ZULU's practice consists of one lap running around the track that circles the stadium (1.6 miles), practicing throws, and doing various offensive and defensive drills.

After last Spring the team decreased greatly, leaving only three veterans from the 1982 National championship team to continue this past Fall. Many ZULU women graduated or left the area to play with other teams, leaving few dedicated players this fall.

The first tournament of this season is the April Fool's Fest which will be in Virginia this weekend but ZULU is unable to go due to a lack of field space. The UMass men's ultimate team, ZOO Disc, will be participating.

The women will be hosting a one-day tournament on April 7 and they will be in Boston the weekend of April 14th.

J.R. Richard is cut by Houston

COCOA, Fla. (AP) — J.R. Richard, whose fastball had taken him to the top of the pitching profession before he was felled by a stroke in 1980, was released by the Houston Astros Tuesday, apparently spelling an end to his baseball career.

Richard, 34, had been attempting a major league comeback with the Astros, who invited him to spring training this season as a non-rostered player.

Richard's agent, Tom Reich, had said this was Richard's last shot at reclaiming his All-Star career.

Richard had not pitched in any A Team exhibition games and had been signed to a contract with the Astors' Triple A affiliate at Tucson, Ariz.

Student acquitted of setting carpet fire in Moore

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts, first year student charged with setting fire to a carpet in his dormitory, during the series of fires at the school last semester was found innocent Tuesday in Hampshire District Court.

John D. Campbell, 18, of Stoughton, was acquitted by Judge Edward G. Shea after an hour-long trial. Campbell is a Moore House resident and one of three students arrested at UMass last December in connection with the series of small fires that occurred in various dormitories since September.

Defense attorney Arthur Serota of Springfield presented evidence to the court that the incident "was basically horseplay and no harmful intent was present."

Campbell was charged with violating General Law 266 Section 98, intentional destruction of schoolhouse property, after he was discovered with a lighter and a spray can in Moore House, and was later seen by student security personnel kneeling near "foot high" flames. Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey suspended and later reinstated Campbell.

Serota said yesterday, "The school was in a crisis situation with 30 some-odd fires, on campus but to toss individual rights out the window was wrong."

"John was just fooling around with a few friends. The fire was an accident. Those are the facts and the judge saw them that way," Serota said.

Two other students were charged in connection with fires. One student was charged with setting two fires and one with ripping a fire alarm from a wall. The charges were dropped in the first case, and probation with restitution was ordered in the second. Both were also suspended and later reinstated by Duffey.

Assistant District Attorney Rosemary Tarantino said her office prosecuted the case based on the evidence they had. She referred, at the trial, to the statement by the student security worker who identified Campbell as being at the scene of the fire.

"The Crampton incidents were a black mark on the school, but in this case the school acted a bit too quickly in an incident that was, in all reality, just an accident. The same thing might not have happened at another time," Serota said.

"The media was quick to tie John in with the fires but this was an isolated incident," Serota said. "Hopefully his being found innocent will be pointed out."

Campbell could not be reached for comment yesterday but Serota said his client was "back in school and finally free of this case."

Sullivan defeats Flynn to retain speaker's seat

By IAN POLUMBAUM
Collegian Staff

Incumbent Speaker Chris Sullivan defeated Governmental Affairs chairman Jay Flynn by a 2-1 margin in the Undergraduate Student senate's annual elections last night.

Former Student Government Association (SGA) Finance Committee head John Mooridian won the treasurer's post over Joseph Sparks, SGA budget chairman.

Sullivan received 45 secret ballot votes to Flynn's 21, after speeches by both candidates and debate on the Senate floor.

Sullivan said he was "proud of my record of hard work and reliability...(and my) historical perspective on the SGA's dealings with the administration that I believe is unmatched."

Jamie Sterling, who nominated Sullivan, said the Speaker "has a willingness to work with new senators" and "knows what the issues are that the SGA has to work on with the administrators."

Several students cited Sullivan's skills as a negotiator with the administration, the long hours he devoted to his job, and most of all his "supportiveness" and "sensitivity" toward co-workers, particularly minorities.

"I'm speaking as a black and a female," said Senator Sharon Jackson. "Chris has made me feel a real part of the Senate. He's always been there when I needed to talk to him."

But Flynn supporters asserted that Sullivan was to blame for the divisions that have wracked the Senate through much of the past year. Sullivan's tenure, said Senator Reuven Carlyle, has been marked by "hatred, tension, (and) power struggles."

"Consistently we've seen a speaker who's biased," added Senator Tim Rudolph. "We've seen the Senate split right down the middle."

Dakin Ferris, former student attorney general, came to Sullivan's defense: "It's ridiculous to believe that one person is responsible for all the bickering."

Flynn said that conflicts and confusion had arisen because the Senate had not followed parliamentary procedure strictly. "We must respect structure and rules," he said, "so everyone is treated exactly the same."

Flynn also rebutted accusations that he was not a student last semester by displaying what he said were letters from professors whose classes he had taken.

In the debate before the treasurer election, both the candidates and their supporters refrained from attacking each other. "Please don't vote against anybody," Sparks told the Senate.

500 attend pro-choice rally in Boston

By MIRIAM ZOLL
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — Twenty-five area students joined with more than 500 pro-choice activists at the Statehouse yesterday afternoon to protest an anti-choice amendment that could eliminate all state-funded abortions in Massachusetts.

The rally, titled "Voices for Choice Day," was co-sponsored by more than 50 reproductive rights groups from throughout Massachusetts, including the University of Massachusetts Committee for Equal Rights and Reproductive Freedoms (CERRF).

Republican and Democratic state senators and representatives, five U.S. Senate candidates, and other guest speakers discussed the anti-choice amendment and the ramifications it would have if passed.

Rep. Susan Schur, D-Newton, a leading opponent of the proposed amendment, said it would be difficult to swing the current anti-choice votes in time for the second vote on May 9.

"It's important that we become politically aware and selective about our representatives," she said. "We need to take the anti-abortion amendment into the political arena."

A November 1983 poll indicated 79 percent of Massachusetts voters agreed abortion is "a personal, private choice that state governments should stay out of."

There is a chance, however, that even with the pro-choice majority, the amendment could be voted into law if it passes through the House and becomes a binding referendum.

Kathleen Steven-Arvenitis, legislative chairwoman of the Springfield chapter for the National Organization for Women (NOW), said that because Massachusetts is a predominantly Catholic state, pro-life groups think the amendment could be passed here and other states could adopt similar bills.

Janet Gallagher, National President of Catholics for Free Choice (CFFC), who is also a lawyer for the Civil Liberties Union working out of Hampshire College, said Catholics hold a "variety of opinions on the abortion issue" and that polls show that at least 79 percent of Roman Catholics disagree with Church teachings opposing abortion.

Susan Tatelman, a Boston lawyer and member of several of the groups co-sponsoring the rally, said the proposed anti-abortion amendment will "waste taxpayers money."

"Assuming the legislation is passed in the legislature and then is approved on a referenda vote, at the first sign of enforcement it will be challenged by women's and civil rights groups. It will be brought to the court and deemed unconstitutional. And that inevitable litigation wastes taxpayers money," Tatelman said.

Democratic U.S. Senate candidates Lt. Governor John Kerry, Congressman Edward Markey, D-Malden, Con-

President presses for funds for El Salvador 'insurance'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is pressing Capitol Hill to approve its request for $61.7 million in emergency military aid to El Salvador for its war with leftist guerrillas.

President Reagan, meeting with a group of insurance agents, said Tuesday the aid package is "an insurance policy to protect against the chaos that would result from allowing anti-American Marxists to shoot their way to power in Central America."

Testifying before a House panel considering the request, Langhorne A. Motley, assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, declared that there was "no time to lose."

"El Salvador needs supplies now, not just next summer," he said.

Rep. Clarence Long, D-Md., chairman of the Appropriations subcommittee that screens foreign aid, called Salvadoran elections over the weekend "a heartening development." But he said a solution in the conflict is not near "as long as the military kills more of its own people than the guerrillas."

Reagan first asked for $93 million in aid but scaled that down to $61.7 million in an agreement with Senate Democrats.

Senators of both parties said that when the measure reaches the floor they will seek to toughen a provision linking the aid to periodic reports by the president that the Salvadorans are making progress in disbanding right-wing death squads, blamed for thousands of political murders.

In other action, the House Budget Committee tentatively approved a plan supported by Democratic leaders to reduce the federal deficit by $182 billion on what was styled a "pay-as-you-go" basis.

Murder witness stays quiet for 15 years to save his life

SEBRING, Fla. (AP) — The prosecution's key witness testified yesterday that he waited 15 years before implicating William Kelley in the 1966 murder of millionaire cattle baron Charles Von Maxcy out of fear for his life.

"I knew if I mentioned William Kelley's name I wouldn't be alive today. I figured I'd take my chances in court," John Sweet told jurors in Kelley's first-degree murder trial.

But under cross examination by defense attorney Jack Edmund of Bartow, the 68-year-old Sweet admitted that he started cooperating with police only after receiving immunity from prosecution.

Sweet, who remains under a federal protection program, is the key state witness against the Kelley, 41, of Brockton, Mass. he has been charged in the Oct. 3, 1966 slaying of Maxcy, who was discovered stabbed four times in the back and shot once in the back of his head at his home.

Kelley was tried on the same first-degree murder charge last year, but a retrial was scheduled after a jury became deadlocked in Januarv.

Sweet has identified Kelley as one of two Massachusetts men who shared a $20,000 payoff for Maxcy's murder.

University in Beirut bombed; warring factions exchange

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) - Artillery shelling erupted in Beirut's Moslem and Christian neighborhoods yesterday and security sources reported at least 50 people were killed or wounded in Moslem areas.

There was no immediate casualty report from Christian east Beirut. The security sources did not give a breakdown on the number of dead or injured.

Also yesterday a bomb exploded at an American University of Beirut classroom 10 minutes before students were to arrive for class. No one was injured.

The shelling came as President Amin Gemayel's administration tried to accelerate efforts to disengage Lebanon's warring factions and achieve a permanent cease-fire.

One witness, who declined to be identified, said he heard five shells hit the Sanaye neighborhood in Moslem west Beirut. Security sources said shells also fell in several other Moslem neighborhoods and in the Palestinian refugee camps of Sabra and Chatilla.

Christian radio stations reported shelling in the east Beirut neighborhood of Ashrafiyeh and in the suburbs of Furn el-Shubbak and Baabda, site of the presidential palace. The radio stations reported shelling along the Mediterranean Coast as far north as Jounieh, 12 miles north of the capital.

Grand jury drops officer's charges

BOSTON — A Suffolk County grand jury refused yesterday to indict a Boston police officer charged with rape after the victim refused to testify, District Attorney Newman Flanagan announced.

Superior Court Chief Justice Thomas R. Morse Jr. questioned the 27-year-old woman during what the district attorney's spokesman, Dave Rodman, called a "full and extensive hearing," then declined to compel her to testify.

The grand jury returned no bill against Officer Robert Ford, 31, who was charged with raping the woman Jan. 19 on the floor of a private police club, the Midtown Social and Athletic club, during his 30-minute dinner break.

House speaker seeks audit of aide salaries to keep position

BOSTON - Speaker Thomas McGee, escalating his effort to retain control of the Massachusetts House, called yesterday for a salary freeze for legislative aides and for an independent audit of House spending.

McGee, who is being challenged by ousted majority leader George Keverian for the speaker's position in 1985, said the package of reforms would improve the fiscal responsibility and public accountability of the House.

The changes were seen as an effort by McGee to display his leadership and increase support among House members who have not decided whether to support him or Keverian in the leadership showdown next January.

Boy killed in auto crash gives with transplants

MILFORD — David Gotham's death at 16 after a weekend car crash has meant life to at least two other people.

David's heart was transplanted into the chest of a 16-year-old boy during a "successful" operation at Presbyterian-University Hospital in Pittsburgh early Tuesday morning.

Bruce Zalneratis, senior procurement specialist with the New England Organ Bank in Boston, said the patient was in excellent condition about 12 hours after surgery.

The patient, whom officials declined to identify, suffered from idiopathic cardiomyopathy, a deterioration of the pumping portion of the heart, Zalneratis told the Middlesex News in an interview published yesterday.

David's liver was transplanted into an unidentified 27-year-old woman Tuesday at New England Deaconess Hospital in Boston. She is in stable condition.

"He's already saved a life," said Richard Gotham, David's older brother. "His liver has already saved someone's life in Boston. The hospital told us without it the patient would have died."

Both of David's kidneys were to be transplanted yesterday to unidentified New England recipients. One is a 49-year-old Connecticut male, the other recipient is from the Boston area, Zalneratis said.

"This is what he would want," his mother, Cynthia Gotham, "he had a special gift about caring about other people. We had lost a life, but if it would help someone else, it would be worth doing."

Food Services denied Hampden space

By LARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Staff

Plans by the University of Massachusetts Auxiliary Services to appropriate space in Hampden Commons for a new computer facility, for use by University Food Services, have been cancelled, according to Southwest Area Government (SWAG) Co-president Michael Bean.

"Midway through last semester, we were notified that Auxiliary Services would be needing the Craft Shop and the ID Office in Hampden Commons for a new computer facility," Bean said.

"University Food Services had already taken over a study area in Hampden and we were concerned about a further loss of student-utilized space, so Co-president Dave McCarthy, myself and Charles Durant from the vice-chancellor's office, began to solicit student opinion throughout the Southwest body," Bean said.

Bean said they found that students did not want to give up any more space in Hampden Commons. The three then started working with Vice-Chancellor Dennis L. Madson, Chancellor Joseph Duffey, Dean of Students William Field and Vice-Chancellor John L. DeNyse to retain the areas in question, Bean said.

"Basically, SWAG put together a proposal that would allow Southwest to retain the Craft Shop and ID Office for our own use as student areas," Bean said, "and the administration, notably Dennis Madson, was very receptive to our plan."

After discussing the issue with the administration this semester, Madson informed Bean that Auxiliary Services would not be moving into Hampden Commons as previously planned, Bean said.

Marie Cappadona, director of University Food Services, said that although she had not been officially notified of this decision, she understood it to be true.

Homosexuals still struggle to obtain 'equal treatment'

By TAARA EDEN HOFFMAN
Collegian Staff

The battle for equal treatment of homosexuals must be won in people's hearts and minds and not only in the legislature, said the first editor of the first national lesbian magazine last night at the University of Massachusetts.

Barbara Gittings, the keynote speaker for Lesbian and Gay Awareness Week spoke on "Lesbian and Gay Liberation: What Every Heterosexual Needs to Know."

Gittings, coordinator of the Gay Task Force — American Library Association, read letters she has received in the past from homosexuals expressing their desire to be understood and share their feelings with others like them.

Gittings, the editor of the lesbian magazine The Ladder from 1963 to 1966, is the consultant to the National Council of Churches. She worked with the American Psychiatric Association and helped change wording of the psychiatric definition of homosexual from one with the words "mental disorder" to one with the words "alternative lifestyle."

Practicality, perseverance, presence, and playfulness is the "four part prescription" to keep from getting discouraged within the movement, Gittings said.

Gays and non-gays "should concentrate on jobs where they can get results, rather than jobs that have been done before," she said. People should support others' work in the movement and be patient and persistant.

"Gays must keep up the gay presence, reminding everyone that gay people are everywhere," she said. Finally, gays should "let loose our sense of humor."

"Coming out is very personal," Gittings said. "Every lesbian and gay must do it in his or her own way at his or her own pace."

Gittings joined the gay rights movement in 1958 when there were only six gay organizations in the country with only 150 people active in them.

Today, there are 1500 organizations of all kinds supporting gays, Gittings said. There are gay social, political, and religious organizations, lobbying groups, publications, law firms and community centers, she said. One strong group is the Parents and Friends of Lesbians and Gays. This group is a "wonderful bridge to the non-gay world," Gittings said.

Both opponents and supporters of gay rights accuse gays of "flaunting" their sexuality, she said. Gays want to "express ourselves the same way non-gays do."

Gittings held up three photocopied pages of heterosexual wedding announcements from a prominent newspaper. "How much more public can you get about your sexual interests?" she said.

Pamphlet advises victims of assault

By LISA STRATOULY
Collegian Correspondent

Editors' Note: This is the second of a two-part series about the legal and medical aspects of rape.

A publication now being distributed by the Everywoman's Center at the University of Massachusetts, warns that while the medical examination for sexual assault victims may be embarrassing, it is essential for providing appropriate medical care and legal evidence.

Kathy Alexander, Counselor/Advocate co-ordinator at the EWC, said a detailed description of the assault in the victim's own words is necessary to guide the examination.

"The description should include physical surroundings, threats, force, trauma, sexual acts demanded and performed, penetration by penis or other body object, ejaculation and weapons used," she said.

Victims are advised not to change clothes after they are assaulted because the condition of victim's clothing is usually recorded by the physician, and some items may be held as evidence, the publication states.

It also recommends victims do not take showers, douche, defecate, clip their fingernails, or eat or swallow liquids, because samples of semen, pubic hair, and skin may be removed by these activities.

After the assault, a victim's first impulse may be to change or remove reminders of the incident, the pamphlet states. Although these measures may be psychologically comforting, they may also destroy important physical evidence that could be used in identifying or prosecuting the assailant.

The pamphlet, titled "Rape and Sexual Assault: Prevention and Treatment," describes the processes victims of assault must go through when prosecuting.

Physicians will pay strict attention to the possibility of pregnancy and sexually transmitted disease, according to the pamphlet. Pregnancy tests may be obtained 42 days after the first day of the last menstrual period. Tests for gonorrea that may result from the incident can be obtained five days after the attack, and 30 days later for syphilis, the pamphlet stated. Penicillin or another antibiotic is usually given as a preventive measure at the time of the examination.

Smith to adopt five college schedule

By JEANETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

Smith College students will have new class schedules next year after a decision by the Board of Trustee's to conform their class timetables to those of the four other area colleges.

The four area colleges, Hampshire, Amherst, UMass and Mount Holyoke, all operate on a Monday-Wednesday-Friday and a Tuesday-Thursday set of time schedules. Smith currently runs on a Monday-Tuesday-Wednesday and a Wednesday-Thursday-Friday time schedule.

The alterations have been under consideration for many years, said Yvonne Freccero, director of institutional research. A five college long range study was done in 1980 and it "recommended that Smith develop a schedule compatible with the other colleges," Freccero said.

"The changes will bring the students in line with the other colleges class schedules," said Ann Shanahan, director of public relations at Smith. The modification will make it easier for a greater number of Smith students, as well as other area college students, who participate in the five college exchange, Shanahan said.

"It makes (Smith) a part of the five college program," said John Brady, associate professor of geology at Smith and a member of the committee of academic policy.

The changes will also relieve the overload of classes which occur on Wednesday morning.

The schedule shift will take place in September of 1985 to allow time to work out schedules. "We want to get the best possible schedule for everybody," Freccero said.

"The students are pleased," Shanahan said.

Faith Hawkins, a sophomore sociology/economics major said, "I think it's the best thing they could have done. It makes the five college system work."

Laura Joslin, a junior said, "It's all-right, but a lot of classes are going to be longer. It'll take getting used to."

Carol Lui, a first year undeclared major said, "I think it'll be more beneficial for students to be able to take classes at other institutions."

The change, however, will not be beneficial to all Smith students. The Ada Comstock Scholars, a group of older women who commute from places such as Vermont, New Hampshire and Connecticut, stay at Smith for three days to take classes.

"Institutionally, it's a good thing, for us it's a disaster," said Elenor Ratham, director of the program. There are several solutions being considered, she said.

University graduate program rated

By RONDA APPLEBAUM
Collegian Staff

In a recent assessment of the research-doctorate programs in the United States, the University of Massachusetts fared well, in comparison to many other colleges in the Northeast.

"UMass did well in these ratings, but UMass is always improving and even better than these ratings show," said Dean of Graduate Studies, E.B. Piedmonte

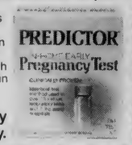
From 1980 to 1982 the conference Board of Associated Research Councils sponsored a survey of research-doctorate programs in the United States, focusing on the social and behavioral sciences. This council, comprised of the American Council of Learned Societies, the [illegible] Council on Education, the National Research Council and the Social Science Research Council, studied only programs awarding research doctorates and their effectiveness in preparing students for careers in research.

Dean Piedmonte said, "This is the best system there is for rating schools. It is a sophisticated rating system, but it is subjective, reputational and dated."

Programs were evaluated by faculty members in anthropology, economics, history, political science, psychology and sociology programs across the United States.

According to Michael Weinberg, special assistant to the dean of graduate study and research at UMass, the quality of graduate programs have an impact on the undergraduate experience.

Schools were chosen in the Northeast which are known to have "good reputations." Some of the areas of the council's survey include: the number of faculty members in the program, the scholarly quality of the program's faculty, the effectiveness of the program in educating research scholars/scientists, and the evaluator's familiarity with the work of the program's faculty.



Think you're pregnant?

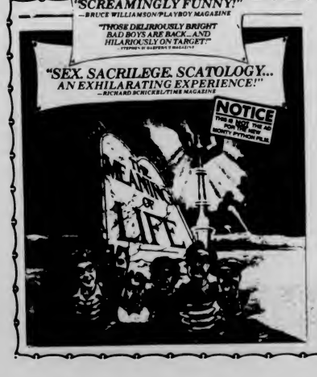
Use Predictor In-Home Pregnancy Test. It's the same as a hospital test.

You're on your own for the first time and life is a lot different now. If you think you might be pregnant, you want to know for sure. This is the time to use Predictor In-Home Pregnancy Test. It's the exact same test method used in over 2,000 hospitals and 13 million laboratory tests nationwide. So you know Predictor is accurate.

Predictor can be used as soon as nine days after you miss your period. It's convenient and gives you results in just one hour. Think you're pregnant? Remember, you can use Predictor with confidence, it's the test method used in over 2,000 American hospitals.

Nothing Predicts Pregnancy more accurately.

THE SHORTEST DISTANCE BETWEEN YOUR ENGINEERING DEGREE AND MANAGEMENT COULD BE O.C.S.



If O.C.S. (Army Officer Candidate School) looks tangential at first, look again. Look at it from management's point of view. Management wants engineering skill plus leadership ability in the people it moves up the ladder.

O.C.S. is a great place to get started on leadership. It is a 14-week challenge to your mental and physical toughness. And if you pass the tests, you will come out strong, sure and in great shape—a commissioned officer in the Army, ready to exercise the leadership that civilian companies put such a premium on.

If you are about to get your degree in engineering, the O.C.S. challenge could be your best next step.

gressman James Shannon, D-Lawrence, and William Hebert, along with Republican candidate Dr. Mildred Jefferson spoke briefly about their views regarding the amendment.

All but Jefferson, who was cheered by approximately 40 anti-choice demonstrators holding a picket march in front of the Statehouse steps, said they opposed the amendment.

Mary Klein, one of the anti-choice demonstrators who was removed from the rally for being disruptive, said she thought it "was a horror the rally was allowed in the Statehouse."

"This rally doesn't represent normal women, it represents abnormal women. Women's economic and social rights have been tainted by the lesbian and abortion stuff," she said.

Stevens-Arvenitis said that in 1982, approximately 75,000 live births and 45,000 abortions occurred in Massachusetts.

"The fact is, that if this is passed and abortion becomes illegal, these 45,000 women will go out and have illegal abortions," she said.

Tatelman, who is a member of the Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts, said there is a "discrepancy between the vocal and voting minority of anti-choice advocates and the silent, often non-voting majority of pro-choice advocates."

"Many people think that if they vote it won't make a difference but in this case it will make all the difference in the world," Tatelman said.

Stevens-Arvenitis said many young people don't understand that if this bill were passed it could also affect birth control methods like the Intra-Uterine Device (IUD) and the Pill.

Honors students trying to establish new RSO

MARY-SHEILA LOUGHLIN
Collegian Staff

Dissatisfied members of the National Honor Society are working to establish a new Registered Student Organization (RSO) to create a social and cultural atmosphere which they say is lacking in the University of Massachusetts Honor's Program.

Four executive members of the Honor Society said that when they joined the Honor's Program they were promised that it would be an academic experience as much as a social experience. They were told they would be offered the opportunity to meet other members of the program. However they said they feel the social aspect of the program has been largely ignored.

"Last semester there was one party and it was a lot of fun," said Lauren Glick, a first year psychology major. "But that was the only thing they ever did."

The 10 to 15 people who are working to organize the new RSO group have drawn up a constitution which states three main objectives, said Lauren Segarra, a first year College of Arts and Science major, and executive member of the group.

First she said the group wishes to create greater contact between the honor students and make students aware of cultural and social events on campus and in the area. As an example, she said they want to organize field trips to New York City art galleries.

Segarra said the group wants to have an induction ceremony for first year students and introduce them to the campus. Currently first year students register into the Honor's Program and are then left on their own, she said.

Stereo stolen from dorm

University of Massachusetts police reported a stereo receiver and cassette deck valued at $350 stolen from a third floor Mackimmie resident between March 16 and 25. Windows were found open in the room when the occupant returned from spring break.

A car parked in P lot, near Southwest residential area, was struck between March 12 and 25 causing an estimated $300 damage to the rear of the car, police said. There are no suspects and the case is under investigation, police said.

The driver's window of a car parked behind Webster Dormitory was smashed Sunday causing $75 damage, police said. The incident occured between 11:30 p.m. and 11:40 p.m..

The hypocrisy of pro-choice

Richard Vigeant's column, "The Importance of Pro-Choice," (March 27), made some interesting, although false points.

Mr. Vigeant's unsubstantiated claim of "hypocritical Pro-Lifers" is hypocritical in itself. I would like to see pro-abortionists labeled just that, as to say that they are champions of choice is negligent and misleading. What about the choice of a person to make his or her own life what he or she can, and not to be prejudged as a person of no worth, integrity or rights? Every choice possible in life-choices of lifestyle, career, marriage, etc.-is wantonly disregarded and taken away from the person by someone who decides that that person's life is not important enough to be preserved. It is not our right to make decisions concerning the quality of a baby's life or to trade off an entire life to possibly preserve the quality of another's.

Women who do not want children, should not have them, but that choice must be made before sexual activity not after the life processes are already in motion.

Mr. Vegeant did make one valid point when he said that abortion is not only a woman's issue; it is an issue vital to every human being because of the implications of abortion. If we decide that it is our place to take the life of just one human being, we have undermined and trivialized the sacredness of all human life. When we make this decision to take the life of the most fragile of us all, we open ourselves up to making this decision again and again in many situations. Anyone who is in favor of abortion, which justifies death for the most innocent among us, must also be in favor of the death penalty, which attempts to justify the death of those generally regarded as the most guilty. Indeed, we cannot allow ourselves to make either of these decisions.

If we argue, as some do, that abortion is right in the cases of possibly severely handicapped or infirmed babies, we again put ourselves in a dangerous position. If we allow ourselves to prejudge the quality of life in these cases, then shouldn't we be able to decide in the cases of chronically ill, mentally handicapped or even senile people, whose afflictions are readily observable? If you abhor this idea, I am with you. You must abhor it also in the guise of abortion.

As Albert Schweitzer once said, if we lose our reverence for any part of life, we will lose our reverence for all life. Please don't lose your reverence for human life by supporting abortion, the true enemy of all choice, made by some to appear just and acceptable.

Portuguese unfairly labeled

To the Editor,

During an interview about the outcome of the New Bedford rape trial on March 27, 1984 I was asked about the response of the Portuguese community to the trial and the publicity surrounding it, as well as many other aspects of the case. Throughout their coverage of the events between March 1983 and the present, the media had labeled these men as "Portuguese Immigrants." In the interview I stated that I would have found it surprising if the media had labeled white-Irish or white-English men according to their national origins if they had been involved in the rape.

The quote, as it was taken out of context in the March 28, front-page article, could lead one to believe that I considered Portuguese people non-white. I cannot believe that the contents of a half-hour interview — focusing primarily on the victim, the fact that this trial showed us what goes on daily in courtrooms, and the need for education of the community, and support for the victim — could result in such inappropriate reporting. I request a retraction and an apology.

Accepting them as they are

To the Editor,

I'd like to commend the Collegian on their coverage, so far, of the Lesbian and Gay Awareness Week. I was really uplifted to see the editorial in Tuesday's paper. I'm glad to see that the Collegian is becoming more aware of how it is important for all groups of people to learn about one another and get along with each other. Lesbian and Gay Awareness Week is trying to accomplish this.

Hopefully everyone, no matter what their backround or beliefs, will take advantage of what workshops and discussions we have to offer them. Through these events, I hope that people will better understand and accept gays and lesbians for who they are, and not rely on stereotypes.

A weekend of fun, information

To the Editor,

In the midst of a renewed interest in student activism, "new ideas" politics, and perhaps most importantly our developing sense of identity within this democratic society, what better time to become knowlegdable on the issues which really affect us. How, you might ask, could you get involved? The MassPIRG Annual Spring Conference is an answer and it starts this Friday, March 30th, right here at UMass.

The conference is an exciting weekend of learning about issues such as hazardous waste, energy conservation, and sales fraud, developing new skills such as investigative research, student leadership, and public speaking, and meeting new people from colleges and universities across Massachusetts. The conference will also have many opportunities for student and resource participants to gather informally for information sharing, discussion, and fun--including a Saturday night party extravaganza. Highlighted in the events to take place are an open panel discussion with several Massachusetts congressional representatives and special voter registration workshops and caucuses.

We're anticipating a very informative, enjoyable weekend and we eagerly encourage you to take part. For registration and more information, stop by the MassPIRG office in room 423 - S.U.B. or our table on the concourse. See you there.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

School prayer denies respect

Last Tuesday, March 20th, President Reagan's school prayer amendment died on the Senate floor, failing to get the two third majority required for passage. March 20th, as one senator put it, was not the day the Senate ruled against the Bible, it was the day they ruled for the constitution. I spent that Tuesday swimming through the sea of rhetoric in Washington rather than the Atlantic in Florida, and was quite surprised at what I saw and heard.

I saw Jerry Falwell's tax-exempt, socio-political machine take over the Capitol steps and make the Crusades look like the Battle of the Network Stars. I saw a newsman fall over backwards with a 40-pound camera on his shoulder for a ten-year senator from Colorado while others did not even bother to cross the street for the vice-president of the United States. And I heard probably the weakest arguments imaginable for a constitutional amendment that some evangelists were touting as an epic struggle between good and evil.

As I stood outside the Capitol building with a few hundred other socially conscious citizens I began to understand how Diogenes must have felt as I searched for an honest argument. I approached some men in blue blazers and "700 Club" insignias and asked them why we needed a school prayer amendment. Not to my surprise, their arguments were virtually identical.

The man in blue, showing me a coin for emphasis, told me that we were founded by Christians and therefore are a Christian society. What a salesman. Next, he asked me if our society has gotten any better since school prayer ended? It was becoming apparent to me that preachers are not necessarily good debators. I find it a little hard to believe that school prayer would have made an appreciable difference in our society. But this guy was ready for that one. "Then what's wrong with having it, if it makes no difference?", he said. Nice rationalization, but it does not prove anything.

There are a lot of things wrong with what school prayer stands for and what it would do. First, while the majority of Americans call themselves Christian, we are a pluralistic society. Majority may rule, but it was not designed to oppress, which is exactly what a school prayer would do to minority religions. For example, a Catholic child could grow up in a Mormon community in Utah, and that community could choose to adopt a Mormon prayer for its schools, as the amendment would allow. Should the child then be socially pressured into practicing part of another religion? That child is probably already ostracized from his or her friends because he or she does not take part in the same church activities. The men in blue scoffed at this one. "They're going to learn about oppression somewhere." Yes, I suppose they are, but I see no reason why anyone, especially children, should be subjected to forms of oppression that organized religion supposedly has always fought against.

As for the "In God We Trust" motto on our money, and the benedictions that take place in Congress, it must be made clear that these are separate issues. Those practices are not so much religious as they are traditional. School prayer was never a matter of tradition. It is another way of molding the minds of children when they are most vulnerable to ideas.

Schools must be allowed to teach only the most basic values of right and wrong. Parents are responsible for all else. If I were an atheist I would not be upset by tradition, but if I were forced to either pretend to believe in a God or let everyone know that I did not, I would be insulted. Why not ask if I am or was ever a member of a communist or socialist party, or any other organization that held unfavorable views towards the United States government or its leaders? If the 50s were the era of McCarthyism, are the 80s to be the era of Falwellism?

As for the "bettering society" argument, we already have a pledge of allegiance to the wall which does nothing to make us more patriotic, so how is a prayer, be it very religious or utterly generic, going to curb drug use or decrease the teenage pregnancy rate. People do not take drugs because of a lack of religion. According to the March 5 issue of U.S. News and World Report, religion in our society (college campuses included) is on the rise.

Anti-social behavior is usually a reaction to a society which is not satisfying the social needs of its people. Telling a kid that he 'has got to learn about oppression somewhere so he had better toughen up does not satisfy his need for support at a young age, and certainly does nothing to enhance his faith in religion (or the rest of society, for that matter).

America is supposed to be a bastion for freedom of thought, expression and religion. I have always thought that my God wanted me to live as he did, to be humble, to love and respect my fellow man, and to leave all judgement up to him. I have always known that if you really want to convince someone of an idea, you do not start off by insulting or alienating him or her. That, however, is exactly what school prayer would have done, and you can thank-whoever-you-want that it did not pass.

Moonies are people too!

To the Editor,

This letter is to respond to Professor Lenz's article 'The Moonies Have Returned' and like-sounding flyers recently distributed at UMass. In his article it is Lenz's opinion that Moonies are trained to 'exploit' others using 'a process called brainwashing' and 'mind-control'. But 'brainwashing' is just a negative way of saying what we Christians call the conversion experience. Jesus said you must be born again. In the Unification Movement we are truly born anew. To call this 'brainwashing' is simply not fair.

In his attack on the Unification Movement, Lenz wildly stabs at its use of buildings, money, newspapers and its relationships with other countries. To this we plead guilty. It's true. Moonies live in buildings, use money and relate to other peoples. But we do not swear by the gospel of the New York Times. Crude accusations and innuendo can be horribly misleading and deceptive.

It may be easy and popular to persecute new religious groups. So it was for Nero. So it was for Julian the Apostate. But does history remember them for their social reform? No, it remembers them as the great persecutors in human history. And so history may remember Prof. Lenz, if it remembers him at all.

Since I don't believe in an eye for an eye, all I can do is pray for Prof. Lenz. But he will surely reap what he has sown.

Another side to awareness

To the Editor,

This is Gay Awareness Week. If you have homophobia, this is your week to share your feelings and express what you think homosexuality is about. Be my guest to do so, it is your constitutional right. And I will not do anything to stop you from preaching about the beauty of lesbianism, and how it is "natural."

But I believe God did not put us here to have sexual encounters with people of the same gender. I believe homosexuals and lesbians have no concept of "reproduction of the species" and generally are ignorant of what nature really meant for men and women to do in fulfilling their gender roles and responsibilities.

I love my God and my country with all my heart, but it saddens me when I see people who have no idea of why we were placed on this Earth.

Amherst hockey snubbed

To the Editor,

I am writing to express my displeasure with your coverage of the ECAC Division III hockey final between Amherst and S.M.U. In the March 12th issue of the Collegian Peter Abraham writes: "It was a study in contrasts, the little state school that doesn't recruit, plays in a high school rink and stays in HoJo's against the private school in the private rink with the out-of-state monsters who grew up with a stick in their hands."

Let's get a few things straight, Peter. Amherst does not "recruit" hockey players. Every student here is subject to the same admissions requirements; athletic scholarships are unheard of. Nor, I think, would any sensible person accuse the college's hockey program (much less its rink) of being extravagant. As for "out-of-state monsters," I fail to see a connection between physical prowess and the location of one's hometown. You seem to imply that because Amherst draws students from many parts of the country (i.e., California and Florida) its hockey team was unduly advantaged. Surely you know that there isn't a state in the nation with a stronger--or prouder--hockey heritage than Massachusetts.

The point is that by casting this game as a battle between good-old-boy David and prepped-out Goliath, you perpetuate the nasty stereotypes that hang over our two schools like a bad odor. What you call "a study in contrasts" might easily be read as a study in prejudice--your own. It is unfortunate that such considerations should find their way into what was, purely and simply, some terrific hockey.

Pornography: chilling effects

I have before me a "cartoon" from PENTHOUSE magazine. It is evening in the cartoon. The scene is a deserted parking lot. Holding on to his unzipped pants, a man is running away from a young woman. He has obviously robbed and raped her. The woman is sitting in a daze, legs spread, dress torn, her purse and belongings scattered. She is breathless — but not from fear or anger. "Encore," she says weakly.

Jokes about rape. Jokes about child molestation. Lies about children being nymphomaniacs in small bodies. Lies about women yearning to be raped.

Yet there are those who insist that pornography encourages a mature, healthy sexuality. Does it? I open a copy of PLAYBOY to see the centerfold. Under the photo, the world's "Playmate of the Month." I open a copy of PENTHOUSE. Here, it is "Pet of the Month." NAPA'S (a car parts manufacturer) monthly publication calls its female models "pups." HUSTLER stages its monthly "Beaver Hunt." I look more closely to read the text of some of these publication. Here I see the words chick, fox, bird, kitten, feline, minx, filly, pig, vixen, puss, heifer. Are these women they're referring to or animals? Are women less than human? I continue to read. The female models are described as being delicious, scrumptious, delectable, savory, luscious. They are referred to as "pieces," or "a piece," especially of meat. Are women something to be eaten, something to be cut up and divided among the male digestors of pornography?

And there are those who insist that pornography is innocuous and provides a harmless "outlet" for (primarily) male sex drives. Perhaps, I think, this is worth checking out. And so I flip through photographs in countless pornographic magazines, skim the texts of novels sold in so-called "adult" bookstores, and watch a couple of "adult" movies. And I see and read about things that disturb and frighten me.

The women in these materials are being raped in one orifice after another by one, two, three, or gangs of men, performing sex with other women, with children, with non-human animals, and with inanimate objects, usually for the titilation of male voyeurs. Women are masturbating themselves with or being masturbated by someone else holding pool sticks, baseball bats, whiskey and wine bottles, foot-long zucchinis, jack hammers, power drills, pistols, knives.

They are being whipped, beaten until they are black and blue, tortured, urinated on, slapped, punched, forced to eat defecation — and they love it, they can't get enough. In many movies (both X-rated and mainstream), women eventually fall in love with the man (or men) who rapes them; they willingly have sex with the men who beat them. Some of these women portrayed in pornography don't like this treatment but cannot escape their oppressor. Others don't like it at first but quickly grow into insatiable nyphomaniacs, full of eager openings. But many of the women are depicted as genuinely loving this dehumanizing and violent treatment right from the very start. They will take "It" any time, any way; the bigger and rougher the better, the more the merrier.

I think of the real woman who was raped and sexually tortured for over two hours by (at least) four men on a pool table in a New Bedford bar, while other male bar patrons watched and cheered. I think of a woman in South Carolina who was gang-raped and tortured for over six hours; the rapists inserted various objects into her vagina. I think of a friend's sister who was tied and gagged by three men burglarizing her apartment. The men pulled up her nightgown, pulled off her underwear, and repeatedly raped her with their pistols, clicking the hammers each time. I remember a male friend of mine telling me years ago about this "show" he went to where a woman copulated with a live horse. I think of a mentally retarded woman who was self-sufficient enough to live on her own with some professional supervision. A man she had befriended invited her to his apartment where, with about nine of his buddies, she was gang-raped and had various objects poked up her vagina. The men even tried to get a dog to copulate with her.

I think about a college woman at a mid-western university who was gang-raped repeatedly by a group of men in her dorm. After having had their "turn" with her, the rapists proceeded to ram a broomstick up her vagina over and over again, until she died from internal hemorrage. I think about the issue of HUSTLER where women were shown hung up on meat hooks, like animals in a slaughterhouse.

I remember my former husband, a medic in Vietnam, telling me how his squad of about 25 men captured a Vietnamese hospital, killing all the patients and medical personnel except for one nurse. The men then stood in line, each taking their "turn" with her (my husband refused to rape her and was threatened with death by his own men for his stance). When the last man had finished, he rammed his gun barrel — red hot from having fired so many rounds — into her vagina and blew her to pieces.

My heart bleeds.

1:30pm	3	7	11	15	19
4:00pm	4	8	12	16	20

COURSE	SECTION	PERIOD
ANTH 270	1	14 --- implies that section 1 of ANTH will be examined on Wed., May 23 at 10:30 a.m.
ASTRON 100	1,2,3,4, 5	4 --- implies that ASTRON 100, sections 1,2,3,4 & 5 will be examined on Sat., May 19 at 4:00 p.m.
CHEM 112	2,3,4	17 --- implies that sections 2,3 & 4 will be examined on Thurs., May 24 at 8:00 a.m.

NOTE: WHEN SECTION NUMBERS WITHIN A COURSE ARE LISTED, ASSUME THAT ANY UNLISTED SECTION IS NOT SCHEDULED FOR AN EXAM.

11 See your instructor for information on the place of examination. He or she will NOT have this information before May 2, 1984.

111 CONFLICTS or MORE THAN TWO EXAMINATIONS IN ONE DAY. Students who have conflicts in their examination schedule (as published in this schedule) or who have more than three examinations scheduled for one calendar day, may report to the Schedule Office (168 Whitmore) for resolution of this problem.

PLEASE REVIEW THIS SCHEDULE CAREFULLY. THE SCHEDULE OFFICE WILL ASSIST IN RESOLVING RELATED PROBLEMS REPORTED ON OR BEFORE MAY 7, 1984. AFTER THAT DATE STUDENTS MUST CONTACT THEIR ACADEMIC DEAN.

DK's: live and slamming

THE DEAD KENNEDYS
A Skateboard Party
(Starving Missile Records)

By NEAL O'SHEA
Collegian Staff

This is a song that some people like and some people hate, but we're glad we did it. It's not against skinheads, it's not against longhairs, it's against people who are stupid in the head. This song is against racists, people who start fights...people who are facists in the head. Nazi rednecks fuck off!
— Jello Biafra introducing "Nazi Punks Fuck Off"

Rip open the seemy underside of Amerika and stand angrily agape at the horrors that unfold from our politics, businesses, and social systems. Defy these terrors with a screaming rhetoric of dissent and background it with stormy hardcore music and slam dancing vehemence. Record it all for posterity and you are left with A Skateboard Party, the latest album from The Dead Kennedys; San Francisco's outspoken hardcore/horror rockers.

Live albums are expected from conventional bands as low investment profit makers, but The Dead Kennedys parody these "greatest hits" concerts with a seventeen-song collection that is far from the typical live disc so obligatory for bands today. The tightest cuts on A Skateboard Party are probably "Trust Your Mechanic," "Forest Fire" and "Winnebago Warrier," all from their latest studio album, Plastic Surgery Disasters. However, the older songs don't slouch at all. Rather, songs like "Police Truck" (called "Police Jerk" on this album), "Chemical Warfare" and "Nazi Punks, Fuck Off" are double paced for crazed slam dancing action.

"Kiss ass while you bitch, so you can get rich, but the boss gets richer off you" spits out singer Jello Biafra in slight disharmony with East Bay Ray's agonizing guitar on "Holiday In Cambodia." And don't forget bassist Klaus Flouride and drummer D.H. Peligro giddily overpacing each other to explode every number into frenetic anthems against The Establishment.

No slick overdubs or production here folks, because what you hear is how it came across. Even the between-song banter is intact as we are treated to Jello Biafra rejecting a petition for an autograph and laughing at song requests from the audience when he passes the mike around. Yes, the vicious satire is complete.

The DK's have not sold out with a live album, nor have they decided to go for the money. They're still the same upstanding Amerikans they always were.

Reggae from another island

By BOB BURGESS
Collegian Staff

UB40 guitarist and singer Robbin Campbell has said one does not necessarily have to be Jamaican to "play good reggae," and if instrumental ability were the most important aspect of this music, he would have been correct.

Unfortunately for Campbell and UB40, however, reggae's popularity stems mainly from its unique vitality of spirit and messages of hope, things which the band failed to convey in their March 14 show. But to their credit, they come from England, not the Trenchtown section of Kingston, Jamaica.

UB40's first few songs brought the sell-out crowd to the highest point it would reach. Their opening number, the Rolling Stones' "Cherry O-Baby," and the hit single "Red, Red Wine" featured hot horn pieces and the strong vocals of Campbell, as well as consistently powerful keyboards. Amid the smoke and uncomfortable heat inside the SUB, many in the audience performed the trance-like dance which is common to both reggae and Grateful Dead shows. But that "enthusiasm" would soon die down.

The next part of the set contained songs which were relatively weak attempts at criticizing capitalism, and the U.S. in particular. UB40 are not Wailers' clones, and that became obvious. The few exceptions included great keyboards on "Don't do the Crime" and the saxaphones in "Sweet Sensations," with the guitarists adding occasional flashes of excitement. Lyrically, UB40 is solid, but in the SUB, most understanding was lost.

The show's close was satisfying, if only because Campbell dedicated "Keep on Movin" to the late king of reggae, Bob Marley. Singing with an aggressiveness not noticed since the second song, Campbell slowly and emotionally repeated the chorus "I gotta keep on movin/Where I can't be found," and by song's end, the sweaty crowd was back into the show.

UB40's party song, "Rock against Ronny," showed the band's sense of humor, and showcased a superb trumpeter and a dancing bass player. But overall, The vitality absent in most songs turned a critically-acclaimed band into a politically questionable one.

Musicianship is a small ingredient in the universal sounds of reggae, but UB40 does what it knows pretty well. The band can play, but does not find emotion an easy thing to show.

Richardson's adaption faithful to Irving

THE HOTEL NEW HAMPSHIRE
directed by Tony Richardson
At the Hampshire 4 Theaters

By RAMIN ZAHED
Collegian Correspondent

The Hotel New Hampshire, Tony Richardson's faithful adaptation of John Irving's best-selling novel is a pleasure to see. However, the fact remains that Irving's novels have too many eccentric characters to be summarized into two hours on the silver screen.

The story is very simple; we are introduced to the Berry family through a series of familiar Hollywood-style flashbacks. We see how mom and dad Berry meet, fall in love, get married and settle down in the Hotel New Hampshire. The family includes Franny (Jodie Foster), the elder daughter who has an incestuous relationship with her brother John (Rob Lowe); Frank (Paul McCrane), the elder son who loves to wear uniforms and announces early on that he is a homosexual; Lilly (Jennie Dundas) who stops growing at the age of eight and is referred to as a "dwarf"; Egg (Seth Green), the son of the family who carries the rotting corpse of a dog called Sorrow around, and Iowa Bob (Wilford Brimley), the weight-lifting grandfather.

The true confusion begins when they all move to Vienna. Here we have a whole new list of bizarre characters ranging from a group of prostitutes and revolutionaries to a beauty who walks around in a bear costume played by the exquisite Nastassia Kinski.

It takes a lot of talented people to bring all these personas to life, and talent is one thing the movie definitely has in abundance. Beau Bridges and Lisa Banes give solid performances as Father and Mother. Jodie Foster's dynamic presence outweighs the fact that she is a little too chubby for the part. Kinski, on the other hand deserves a lot of praise for her low-key portrayal of Suzie the Bear. Perhaps, one of these days she will finally get a major role in a good movie.

One has to see this movie, not expecting the Irving allegories, but to look at the ups and downs of a not so typical American family. Irving himself liked the movie as an independent work; different from his book, yet still enjoyable.

The Hotel New Hampshire is photographed on location in New England and Austria. The soundtrack is naturally soaked in Strauss's Waltzes. Also, the narration starts from the very beginning and does not even stop throughout the opening credits. So do not arrive late at the theater.

Once one realizes that the movie should not be compared with the book, it becomes more and more enjoyable. "Hotel" has its charming moments, a few funny scenes, some fake Austrian accents, and a beautiful cast. Why should one ask for more?

The Hotel New Hampshire is now playing at the Hampshire Four Cinema.

NEED HELP WITH YOUR STUDENT LOAN?

If you've attended college on a Guaranteed Student Loan or a National Direct Student Loan made after October 1, 1975, consider spending a couple of years in the Army.

If you train for certain specialties, the government will release you from 1/3 of your indebtedness (or $1,500, whichever is greater) for each year of active duty.

Obviously, a three-year enlistment cancels 100% of your debt. But if you sign up for the Army's exclusive two-year enlistment option, we'll still cancel 2/3 of your debt.

Plus, you may be eligible for generous educational incentives.

To find out how to serve your country and get out of debt, call the number below.

Sports Log

By TONY BETROS
Collegian Staff

Just a few thoughts...

The conclusion of one of the best NCAA tournaments ever is coming up this weekend in Seattle. The real game is Georgetown vs. Kentucky, as Ewing will go up against Bowie and Turpin in the battle of the Big Guys. Both clubs have an excellent starting five, but I'm picking Georgetown, because of their depth and because Ewing is having an incredible year...I also have a six-pack riding on the game so I'll either be a little drunk or a little poor on Saturday night...The Hoyas should be facing Houston, a.k.a. Phi Slamma Jamma. They look to be too tough for Virginia, but remember what N.C. State did last year--the two teams are very similar...If Virginia does happen to win it all, 10 dollars says that some newspaper will have the headline "Yes Virginia, there is an NCAA Championship." (Or a reasonable fascimile)

The tournament has been nothing short of sensational, with many games going to the last second and even the last shot...The Wake Forest-DePaul game was probably the best, as the Deamon Deacons tied it at the buzzer after about 10 seconds of scrambling for the loose ball. Wake then won it with another shot at the buzzer, sending Ray Meyer into a well-deserved, but bitter retirement...Speaking of coaching, I see that Larry Farmer quit at UCLA just after signing a new contract.

Let's face it, it'll be a long time before the legacy of John Wooden peters out...It would be pretty nice to have a job in sunny, beach-laden Southern California. I'm not picky.

The selection of NHL playoff teams isn't picky, either, as even UMass has a shot at it. The Bruins are more than likely going to play the Nordiques, who they beat in a 6-4 victory highlighted by 4 goals by Barry Pederson. The series should be a tough, physical one...The opposite should hold true in the other Adams Division contest. Buffalo has not lost to Montreal yet this year and the Habs just aren't the team they used to be. When you have to fight the Whalers for a playoff spot, it's time for a change.

Yes, baseball is here as the Major League season opens next week. The Phillies surprised everyone by trading Gary Matthews to the Cubs. Talk about a fate worse than death...The Mets have an infield prospect named Ross Jones who is turning a lot of heads with his fielding as well as hitting. Remember where you read it...The question is, will baseball compete with the ever popular USFL this spring. Seriously, a lot of people knock the new football league, but I like it. Of course, I also like lime kool-aid with strips of bologna in it.

Remember that Sports log isn't your only source of a fountain of information (is it a source at all?). Tonight and every Thursday night is Sports Talk on WMUA, here you the listener can call in and voice your own opinion on whatever you want. Air time is at 6 p.m.

Well, I did it. Hard to believe, but I did it. I went through this column without saying "Where's the beef?"....Definitely a first in recent history.
No more need be said.

GOODBYE — After 42 years of coaching, Ray Meyers of DePaul began his retirement last week after his team was knocked out of the NCAA tournament by Wake Forest.

The USFL- An alternative for the springtime

By GERRY deSIMA
Collegian Staff

I admit it.

It happens. On some Sundays, I sit down and try to tune in an ABC station and watch the United States Football League called by many a bush league below the standard of college, a waste of time, stupid, and at the worst time of the year to watch football.

Now come on, don't turn the page or go to another story, hear me out. It's not that bad. It's a viable alternative. Granted it's not the NFL but then it's not supposed to be.

There are some good and bad things about the USFL but it is not a waste of time.

On the positive side, the USFL has some exciting games. With some high flying passing, several of the games have been very exciting. Johnnie Walton, of the New Orleans Breakers, passed for over 400 yards in Sunday's thriller over the Chicago Blitz.

Boston's former favorite spring football team hung for a 42-38 win for the Breaker's fifth win in five starts. Only the Breakers and the defending champion Michigan Panthers are left undefeated.

The Breakers are just an example of the USFL's exciting teams. With the addition of 19-year-old sensation Marcus Dupree and the running of Frank Buford and the speedy Frank Lockett wide, New Orlearns has a multi-prupose offense.

Panthers quarterback Bobby Hebert passed for over 444 yards in Monday's win over the Houston Gamblers. "I don't see how you can't enjoy this," Hebert said after Monday's game. "If you like to see points scored, then you have to like this, whether it's college, NFL or USFL."

The USFL is a league that has improved over its inaugural season. No longer do you see the quarterbacks on the ground more than passing. The offense lines have matured and are playing much better.

And the quarterbacks are better. Hebert was sought after by several NFL teams as quarterbacks such as Tampa Bay's John Reaves, Philadelphia's Chuck Fusina and Houston's Jim Kelly could do a better job than Jack Thompson of the Buccaneers or Gifford Nielson of the Oilers.

Now to be fair, it is difficult to stay inside after a long cold winter and watch the USFL. But if it is raining or you're going to watch TV anyways, the USFL is better than all that Superstars garbage.

The league has some weak spots in Washington, Chicago (the trade of franchises between Arizona and Chicago was a raw deal for Chicago and the USFL) and San Antonio, but teams in New Orleans, Jacksonville, Tampa Bay and Denver are drawing big crowds.

The league was wrong to expand so quickly but if they can calm down Donald Trump of the Generals and J. William Oldenberg of the LA Express, the league might stay around.

Signing Steve Young, Mike Rozier (Pittsburgh Maulers), Dupree and getting Brian Sipe and Joe Cribbs was fine.

And it should stay. It's an entertainment alternative.

I wouldn't recommend watching the league every week but is it going to hurt to watch a game every once in a while? No.

Springtime football — The New Orleans Breakers newest edition, Marcus Dupree, goes through a workout earlier this year. Dupree is one of many college students to jump to the infant league, which has had its ups and downs since its inception.

Erika Hess captures title

OSLO, Norway (AP)- Erika Hess of Switzerland clinched the women's World Cup ski overall title and Tamara McKinney of Squaw Valley, Calif. and Marc Girardelli of Luxembourg won the slalom crowns in the season's final races Saturday.

Hess, a three-time world champion, earned her first-ever overall title in the first run when Hanni Wenzel of Liechtenstein, her only rival for the crown, missed a gate and was disqualified.

Wenzel, who won the World Cup in 1978 and 1980, skied well on the upper part of the course, but then disaster struck in the last major race of her career. She had said earlier that she would quit after this season.

Hess' triumph capped a brilliant Swiss showing in Alpine skiing this season. A week ago, Pirmin Zurbriggen captured the men's overall title. In the Winter Olympics, Switzerland won two gold medals and two silvers. Hess also won the giant slalom title in the World Cup.

Hess finished a disappointing fifth in the slalom at the Olympics.

Hess, 22, finished fourth Saturday, 1.43 seconds behind McKinney, who was fastest in both runs for a combined time of 1 minute, 29.21 seconds. McKinney was clocked in 45.30 for the first run and 43.91 in the second.

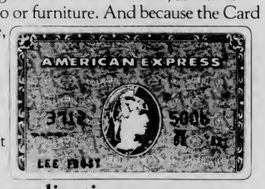
Didn't you know that if you're a senior with the promise of a $10,000 career-oriented job, you could have the American Express® Card?

Where have you been?



Asleep?

Because for some time American Express has been saying that we believe in your future. But even more than that. We believe in you now. And we've been proving it. A $10,000 job. That's it. No strings. No gimmicks. And this offer is even good for 12 months after you graduate.

But why do you need the American Express Card now? First of all, it's a good way to begin to establish your credit history. And you know that's important. Of course, the Card is also good for vacation travel, as well as for shopping for things like a new stereo or furniture. And because the Card is recognized and welcomed worldwide, so are you.

So call 800-528-8000 for a Special Student Application or look for one at your college bookstore or on your campus bulletin boards.

The American Express Card. Don't leave school without it.™

Look for an application on campus.

NCAA final four to feature classic matchups

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The Big Monster takes on the Twin Towers and Phi Slamma Jamma faces The Little Team That Could in a Final Four that finally lives up to pre-season expectations this Saturday in Seattle.

The Final Four has all the aspects of a classic pair of matchups. Underdog Virginia, which finished 6-8 in the ACC, against powerful Houston, which is making its third straight Final Four appearance, in the first game. Then the two neighborhood bullies of college basketball, Georgetown and Kentucky, come to blows in what should be World War III.

Houston, if this scribe and everyone he talks to is correct, should be too much for Virginia. As for the Hoya-Wildcat game Dayton coach Don Donoher put it best, "You'll need five officials for this one."

Houston-Virginia: The Cougars have the always-improving Akeem Olajuwon and their big man did a tune on Virginia when the two squads met earlier this year. The key however should be the play of point guard Alvin Franklin and his defensive work against Virginia's guards, Othell Wilson and Rick Carlisle. Virginia is on a roll, shocking the East Regional by beating Indiana but are up against a much bigger and quicker team this time.

Mindless Guy Lewis and Terry Holland are in a battle of coaching ineptness, but hey, they are in Seattle so don't complain. Watch Houston freshman Ricky Winslow, he can sky and if Virginia shuts off Akeem he'll be a factor. Take Houston giving the points.

Georgetown-Kentucky: The Hoyas bring more than their raincoats to the Northwest.

All-American Pat Ewing has developed into an offensive force this season but has yet to face a pair of players like Kentuck's Melvin Turpin and Sam Bowie. Turpin can be just as rough as Ewing in the paint, maybe the NCAA should assign a ref to watch just these two. Georgetown also tosses in freshman nut Michael Graham. The bald Graham literally knocked over Dayton in the West Regional, drawing the ire of CBS talking head Brent Musberger, but the approval of coach John Thompson. Bill Martin and Ralph Dalton are also frontline keys for the Hoyas.

Kentucky is, for once, the good guy in a game. Bowie is more overated than the Ginsu knife, but can be effective. Soph Kenny Walker will also trouble G-Town. But the key for both teams is guard play.

If Georgetown's David Wingate, Michael Jackson and Reggie Williams can refrain from 30 foot off-balance bombs, but develop a selective outside attack, Ewing will get open down low. Kentucky needs strong outside shooting from pointman Dicky Beal and Jimmy Master to free Bowie and Turpin. Look for Hoya guard Gene Smith to reside on Beal's back for the game, and maybe for Dalton to lay on Bowie. Rest assured Thompson will conceive something to chop down the Towers.

Kentucky will try to zone Ewing out of business and let the guards have their say from the perimeter. Joe B. Hall, in all his smugness, is probably sweating the game out as you read this. Wherever Thompson and his Hoyas are staying, (they won't tell) their almost completed goal of the Big East regular and tournament titles as well as the national title looms large.

This tournament proves that only fools bet on college hoop but take Georgetown by anything less than two, but don't use next semester's tuition money.

Regardless of the outcome, this year's college hoop season has been nothing less then spectacular. Unless you like North Carolina, you should be satisfied with the Final Four. College basketball has proven again what a game it is.

Rudolphquits senate; cites recent election

By IAN POLUMBAUM
Collegian Staff

Central resedential area representative Tim Rudolph, a losing candidate in the recent Student Government Association's presidential elections, has resigned from the Undergraduate Student Senate, saying he is "displeased" with that body's handling of the elections and with its performance on many other issues.

Rudolph, who ran with Donna Dooley in the presidential elections but was defeated by Rick Patrick and Jim Keller, announced his resignation Wednesday night after the Senate approved by acclamation the results of the elections. Keller/Patrick received 58 percent of the vote in the elections to Rudolph/Dooley's 29 percent. Rudolph has also resigned his position as United Areas Council co-president.

The presidential campaign was marred by numerous allegations of rule violations, including assertions that Rudolph and Dooley broke guidelines for printing posters.

"I'm displeased with the turnout of the election and how it was handled, not only by the (SGA) election subcommittee, but also by media coverage, in which my integrity was attacked," said Rudolph yesterday.

Rudolph added that he opposed many of the positions taken by the Senate and by what he described as its "elitist" leadership.

He said he was a reformist pledged to making campus issues more accessible "not only to students through more referenda, but also to the Senate."

"I've been in student government for two years now. I think I've become a sort of self-proclaimed leader of the loyal opposition," he said. "I've worked very hard."

In particular, Rudolph said he objected to the SGA being used as a world political forum.

"Bring campus politics back to UMass. We have so many issues here on campus," Rudolph noted.

"I'm hoping my loss won't be too much," he said. "There are still some keen, level-headed senators...but there will be the same old elected leadership."

Earlier Wednesday evening, the two candidates Rudolph supported, Joseph Sparks and Jay Flynn, lost the elections for Senate treasurer and speaker, respectively. These positions were won by John Mooradian and incumbent Chris Sullivan.

"I'm displeased with the turnout of the election and how it was handled, not only by the (SGA) election subcommittee, but also by media coverage."

Former Student Senator

"With the culmination of elections, none of which have gone his way, (Rudolph's) frustration came to a head," said SGA co-president Tom Ahern. "He comes from a different perspective than many students and senators."

"I can understand his frustration," said Sullivan.

Nevertheless, Ahern and several other SGA members said they were surprised by the resignation. Ahern said he hoped Rudolph would reconsider.

"He and I differ on many things, but he was out there fighting for what he believes. That's what's important," Rudolph said he was not sure whether he would rejoin the SGA in the future.

Students barely escape volcanic eruption

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

A group of University of Massachusetts students on a geological expedition in Hawaii nearly had their campsite blown out from under them as the active volcano they were studying erupted only hours after they slept on its rim.

"A [illegible] group told us she saw some ash rising from Mauna Loa (the volcano) which indicates an eruption, but we didn't believe her," said UMass senior Jeff Pollock, a geology major and member of the Hawaiian expedition.

"But when we were heading down the sheer mountain with a path of lava following us close behind we didn't think it was so funny," said the 23-year-old student who recently returned from his harrowing trip.

The trip was part of a vulcanology (the study of volcanoes) course and involved 20 students from UMass, Amherst and Mount Holyoke Colleges along with Massachusetts professor Michael Rhodes and Holyoke professor Martha Godchaux. The group left the Friday before Spring break and hiked the mountain a week later.

Only 14 people, including the two teachers, went up Mauna Loa, which rises 14,000 feet above sea level and is the largest active shield volcano in the world. After a bad cut and respiratory problems forced the departure of two of the dozen students, the group hiked to the summit.

At the top of the mountain the group slept in a cabin and tents, enjoying the view above the clouds, but contending with sub-zero temperatures.

"We slept 10 feet from the rim of the volcano," said Pollock. "Mainly because the scientists in the observatory that checks Mauna Loa told us there would be no eruption and we would be safe."

The students and professors then went down the mountain to a camp at the 10,000 foot level where they spent the night. It took them eight hours to climb down and they were hardly ready for what happened that evening.

More than 400 minor earthquakes (according to the observatory scientists) kept the group tossing and turning until 12:56 a.m. when a sizeable tremor rocked the campsite and woke them for good. At 1:15 Mauna Loa went off.

"There was a red glow in the sky and fountains of molten rock shot into the sky," recounted Pollock. "It was a tremendous sight. The area we had slept at the night before was a sea of lava. The impact was incredible."

Rescue helicopters warned the party to evacuate the area as rivers of lava flowed steadily down the mountain at about three miles per hour. "We were only able, because of the jagged rocks and bad terrain, to travel about one mile an hour so it's easy to see how worried we were," said Pollock.

The group scampered as quick as they possible could, down the remaining eight miles of volcano as the choppers stayed with them, unable to land because of the turbulence created by the heat and the rough terrain.

"A few diehards wanted to stay (at the second camp) and I suppose if they did...they surely would've died," said Pollock.

"It was the best learning experience I ever had," noted Pollock. "But next time I'd rather see it through a telescope than up close."

Biologist: yellow rain really bee feces

CAMBRIDGE - A Harvard biologist jumped "a large abyss from science to politics" in concluding that "yellow rain" falling in Southeast Asia is bee droppings, not Soviet-made chemical weapons, a critic says

The United States has charged that "yellow rain" - fungal toxins called trichothecenes - has caused at least 10,000 deaths in Laos, Cambodia and Afghanistan. Such chemical warfare is banned by international treaties, and the Soviet Union has denied the charges.

Harvard biologist Matthew Meselson said Wednesday that he and colleagues traveling in Thailand found that Asian honeybees make "massive defecation flights" that result in showers of yellow droppings that villagers mistake for aerial bombardments of chemical toxins.

"We think it is a mistake to identify yellow rain as an agent of chemical warfare," he said at a news conference. "It is in fact the feces of bees."

But Chester J. Mirocha, a plant pathologist at the University of Minnesota, said Meselson had shown only that bees can defecate in flight.

"As far as his connections with yellow rain and warfare, he jumps a large abyss from science to politics," Mirocha said. "I think he went there oriented as a political animal, and this to me is a little bit dangerous in terms of good science."

One Seabrook owner may cancel reactor

LUDLOW - The Massachusetts Municipal Wholesale Electric Co., which owns the third largest share of New Hampshire's Seabrook nuclear power project, will vote to cancel the second reactor, officials said yesterday.

"Our chief concern was the uncertainty of the final costs," said Mike Jones, communications manager for MMWEC, which provides power to 34 of the 40 municipal power companies in Massachusetts. The utility owns 11.6 percent of Seabrook.

According to Jones, the decision by MMWEC's board of directors came after a 2½-hour meeting with its member companies, which unanimously endorsed the move.

"We have been studying this closely for the 18 months and analyzing our costs and needs," Jones said.

Last year, MMWEC successfully lobbied for a slow-down on construction of the second reactor in hopes of speeding construction of the first reactor at Seabrook, now scheduled to be finished in December of 1986. But it abstained on a vote to outright cancel the second phase of the project.

Spring storm brings snow, high winds

BOSTON - An early spring storm howled through Massachusetts yesterday, pelting the state with ever-changing combinations of sleet, snow and rain powered by high winds sometimes gusting to 80 mph in some areas.

Elderly residents were evacuated in the central Massachusetts community of Lancaster after power failures, and others were evacuated from their homes on a Quincy beachfront because of high water, civil defense officials said.

"In Lancaster, some 50 to 75 elderly people were evacuated because of power outages in nursing homes and other facilities," said Robert Bouleau, state civil defense director, from emergency headquarters in Framingham which he said had been staffed Thursday afternoon.

"There also was an evacuation in Quincy of 12 to 15 families from Quincy Shore Drive because of water problems."

He said regional emergency centers were on standby in Belchertown, Westboro, Bridgewater and Tewksbury.

Numerous highway accidents were reported around the state as were scattered power outages caused by the high winds, falling tree limbs and accumulations of wet snow.

Logan International Airport was closed intermittently yesterday afternoon. Federal and state offices sent employees home about 1 p.m. and many schools also closed early.

Vietnam vets suffer stress years later

By ERIKA KLEIDERMAN
Collegian Correspondent

Vietnam veterans who think they escaped the war unharmed can end up feeling the effects years after their return home, according to a panel of experts.

At a group discussion on the effects of Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD) in Vietnam veterans yesterday at the University of Massachusetts, participants said victims can end up suffering long after they thought they would be all right.

PTSD is the delayed development of symptoms following a psychologically traumatic event. The stress disorder can be postponed and no symptoms may appear for years after the traumatic occurance according to Bill Edell, associate professor of psychology at UMass who added that the Vietnam War has demonstrated that this delayed reacion is a "serious problem" for veterans.

Richard Sette of the Veteran's Administration Hospital in Northampton said, "3 million individuals served in Vietnam and between 15,000 and one and a half million veterans suffer from PTSD and require some psychiatric help."

"The disorder has been labeled in the past as shell shock, combat fatigue and battle exhaustion, and before World War I, men suffering from PTSD were thought to be cowardly or poorly disciplined," said Edell.

The victim of PTSD commonly feels rejected from society and often lives in isolation or with a loaded gun near by at all times. They are usually viewed by others as being cold and uncaring. "To feel (emotions) is to lose control for many of these people," said Edell.

The risk of suicide in PTSD victims is very high said Sette and the number of deaths after the war experience is three times higher than during the actual battle for PTSD sufferers.

The two main causes for PTSD according to Richard Pearlstein of the V.A. hospital are difficult homecoming and the severity of combat. The Vietnam War produced the majority of cases due to the negative reception many returning veterans encountered in the United States and the brutality on the battlefield.

Veterans returning unwounded are more prone to the disorder than those who were wounded said Pearlstein. The reasoning is that wounded men were nurtured in hospitals and had time to "work out" the war. In addition many truck drivers experience PTSD because of inability to fight back.

"PTSD is a cultural disorder," noted Sette, who explained that men in the PTSD ward of the Northampton hospital react angrily when scenes of the fighting in Lebanon are shown on television news show. "If you ask one of the veterans how to say Vietnam in Spanish they say 'El Salvador' because they believe they are seeing the same thing all over again," said Sette.

UMass hosts Senate debate

By JOHN VINCENT
Collegian Correspondent

A debate by six Massachusetts senatorial hopefuls will highlight the annual Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group conference to be held this weekend at the University of Massachusetts.

The six candidates, Massachusetts Secretary of State Michael Connelly, Lt. Gov. John Kerry, U.S. Rep.s Edward Markey, D-Malden, and James Shannon, D-Lawrence, and private businessmen William Hebert and John Pierce Lynch will discuss environmental and student concerns tomorrow at 1 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

The conference will be much more than a senatorial debate though, with meetings of student lobbyists and lobbying training workshops planned throughout the weekend.

University of Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group Coordinator Rich McClintock said he hopes many students will participate in the events.

"We want students to put their complaints to action and come out to help," said McClintock.

He said the conference will consist mostly of MASSPIRG members but all students are encouraged to pay the nine dollar fee and attend.

There will be several information swapping meetings and training workshops going on at the same time from which the participants can choose from. They will be held from nine o'clock Saturday, all day and from ten o'clock on Sunday. Students can register Saturday in the Commonwealth Room or any time before that in the MASSPIRG office in the Student Union Building, said McClintock.

Student wants committee to fight cults

By SANDRA KONOPKA
Collegian Correspondant

A University of Massachusetts Undergraduate Student Senator is organizing a committee to prevent students from becoming victims of religious cults.

Tim Harris, a student senator and member of the Radical Student Union said he wants to form a committee that would bring speakers to the university to inform students about the techniques cults use.

"I feel very strongly about the Moonies," said Harris about the Unification Church, one of the cults he wants to work against. "The methods they use are very unfair. They prey on people who are unstable and are going through a fluctuating period in their lives, and they act like they're your best friend."

Some of the recruiting methods religious cults use, according to Harris, are isolation, hunger, fatigue, and deprivation. The victim is conditioned or softened up and then persuaded into new beliefs. Brainwashing is their basic technique, said Harris.

Harris said he came very close to getting involved with the Church of Scientology, an organization that operates much the same way as the Unification Church led by the Rev. Sun Myung Moon. Harris said he got out before it was too late, but others aren't that lucky.

"They are professionals at recruiting, and they do it subtly," said Harris. "The committee will educate students concerning their techniques." Harris has been distributing pamphlets in the campus center warning students of the recruiting techniques of the Unification Church and referring to Church member Thomas Wojcik as the group's new recruiter.

Harris said he will ask the Student Senate to form a committee rather than form a Recognized Student Organization, because he feels that it is the Senate's "obligation" to educate its students.

Harris said the committee would start next spring semester, the time when the Unification Church does most of its recruiting. The committee's activities would include dormitory education, leafletting, and movies about these organizations and the way they work, said Harris.

"They have a constitutional right to speak on their religion, but people's ignorance on brainwashing is the Church's strength," said Harris.

Wojcik, who admits to being a member of the Unification Church, said he thinks the establisment of the committee is "funny," and Harris' distribution of pamphlets warning against the organization is "trash."

"Their efforts are in vain, futile, and hopeless," said Wojcik. "They may influence many people, but there will be many that won't listen." Wojcik said he is not here recruiting, but to get people established in Godism and unification. "I talk to people all day about God, and I study and eat here too," said Wojcik. "I'm here to help people find God, and there is no legal means to stop me. People maintain that I use mind-control and that's ridiculous."

Wojcik said he is here "to put forth the ideals of God" and establish a student organization on campus.

"I'm here to get the Communists off campus," said Wojcik. "I don't mind the controversy, because people will have to listen to me, too."

Contest to pay $100 for new motto

MARY-SHEILA LOUGHLIN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Classics department will give $100 to the winner of its motto contest.

The department wants to update the school's motto which is the same as the state motto.

Classics professor Vincent Cleary said people affiliated with the University are encouraged to compete in the contest.

"There is still enough time to enter the contest," Cleary said. The deadline is April 13.

The current motto translated from Latin reads "with the sword he seeks peace, but only under freedom." This motto and the Native American logo accompanying it are also on the state seal.

Cleary said the quote came from a 17th century English political thinker named Sidney. The first part of the quote, he said, was left out when the state adopted the motto. The part left out of the beginning of the quote is "hostile hand of tirance."

"The sword in the logo on the seal is related to the part of the quote left out," said classics Chairman Edward Phinney. "The sword defies the tirant British."

Cleary added, "We want a motto which expresses the mission of the University, a motto that people can understand."

"Harvard University's motto reads in Latin, 'Veritas,' Cleary noted. "Translated into English that means truth. This is a simple motto which people can identify with."

Whitmore has also created a new logo for the University which has yet to be printed, Cleary said.

With the recent bad press the University has received, Professor Marios Philhilippides, also of the classics department said, "it will be good publicity for the University to have a new motto and logo."

The winner of the contest will be chosen April 29 by a committee of Phinney, Cleary and Philhilippides, a graduate student and an undergraduate student, both from the classics department. One alumnus, a librarian, and Roger Roche in Design and Production in Munson Hall, are also a part of the committee.

Cleary said entries may be written in English and the classics department will translate them into Latin, although they must be kept at a minimum of four to five words.

Applications can be obtained at 528 Herter. Only one application per person and all are encouraged to participate.

Writer speaks on Caribbean Crisis

By DARLENE JACKSON
Collegian Staff

A writer and scholar on Caribbean history lectured last night at Hampshire College on the Contemporary Caribbean Crisis.

Franklin W. Knight, a professor of history at the John Hopkins University, spoke to five college audiences.

His publications include: Slave Society in Cuba during the Nineteenth Century, The African Dimension of Latin American Societies, The Caribbean: The Genesis of a Fragmented Nationalism, and Africa and the Caribbean: Legacies of a Link which he co-edited with Margaret Crahen.

Between 1974 and 1982 he co-edited the John Hopkins University Press series of studies in Atlantic History and Culture; and since 1975 has edited the Caribbean section of the Handbook of Latin Studies, published by the Hispanic Division of the Library of Congress.

Dr. Knight's appearance was co-sponsored by the Black Studies and Caribbean Studies Programs at Hampshire College and the Five College Black Studies Executive Committee.

"My views of the Caribbean in the beginning had not been conventional, but they have been consistent," Knight said.

Knight said the Caribbean, "Is perhaps the most fascinating place in the world."

"I tell my students," he said, "if you want to begin to understand the Caribbean, you have to read the poet and the novelist of the Caribbean."

The Caribbean has always been in crisis because they are inherited societies and inherited societies are revolutionary societies, he said.

"The Caribbean crisis," Knight said, "is the crisis of the people desperately trying to forge their own world."

"The crisis of the 1980s is not new, but it is different," he said. The difference being in this coming year is the control that the people will have in their own world, Knight said.

"10-50 percent of the active labor force is unemployed," he said. "High unemployment coupled with the high expectation of the Caribbean people, is an explosive political force in the Caribbean," Knight said.

"Economic situations is the most serious condition facing Latin America today," he said. Ideology is not a major factor among the population at large, but it is part of the rhetoric in the Caribbean," Knight said.

"We have to understand," he said, "that what is democracy in the United States, is not democracy in the Caribbean." Political countries are a reality of today's world, Knight said.

Mary Berry, U.S. Commissioner on Civil Rights, will address black political power in the 1980s Tuesday, as part of Martin Luther King Week.

Martin Luther King Week begins

By YADIRA BETANCES

A lecture on Black Political Power in the 1980s by Mary Berry, United States Commissioner on Civil Rights will highlight Martin Luther King Week at the University of Massachusetts next week.

A gospel jubilee, several films on the life and achievement of King and a tribute to the Civil Rights leader at the Malcolm X Center will also be featured.

The week, which falls on the anniversary of the assassination of the Civil Rights leader has been celebrated at the University since 1979, said David Martin, a member of the Martin Luther King Week Planning Committee and an Inquiry Program sophomore.

The purpose of the celebration, Martin said, is "to share with the campus community the contributions Martin Luther King has made to our society."

Martin added that besides sharing King's contributions, the week also serves "to realize what work has to be done today to make his dream a reality."

"The week strives to show that even though Reagan has thrown back the movement a couple of steps there are still people like Mary Berry who are working to stem the reactionary tie against ignorance and prejudice," he said.

The Week's events also remind people that the movement for justice and civil rights for all men did not end with the death of Martin Luther King, Martin said.

Delphine Quarles, program consultant for the Student's Activities Office and a member of the planning committee, said this year's speaker will enlighten what is happening in the Civil Rights Movement of today, considering the controversy on the Civil Rights Commission cutback under the Reagan administration.

Today, the Civil Rights Movement is still active, but it is "more laid back," Martin said. Today's movement is not a protest movement, he said. It has changed its character moving from the streets to the board room, he said citing Andrew Young's statement 'Why go out on the streets and protest when you can pick up the telephone.'

Quarles said the movement is "still alive and well" although there are different ways of expressing the need like becoming involved in the government or lobbying for more rights for blacks. She also said the movement today is more subtle when compared with the one in the 60s.

Quarles said people should be aware of the contribution King made to the United States, to the world, to blacks and to the poor.

Quarles called the designation of King's birthday as a national holiday a "wonderful revelation." Although she said it should have been done a lot sooner, it was an important recognition made as a matter of respect. "No matter when, it was important," she said.

She said recognizing King's contribution to society will impact people to gain information about his life and achievements.

Stephen B. Oates, a university history professor and a biographer praised the United States for recognizing King's contribution to American history by making his birthday a national holiday.

"King paid a heavy penalty for his successes. His sufferings were prodigious, perhaps immeasurable," Oates said.

Oates will lecture Wednesday on the impact King and his fellow strugglers had on the United States history by working for the passage of civil rights legislation.

Oates said King's Selma campaign resulted in the voting rights act of 1964 that made possible Jimmy Carter's election in 1976 and Jesse Jackson's campaign for the presidency in 1984.

"There is absolutely nobody in American political life that behaves the way they did before blacks got the right to vote," he said.

BCP to celebrate anniversary

By JEANETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

The Bilingual Collegiate Program of the University of Massachusetts will celebrate their tenth anniversary this fall. They will commemorate this event with a week in September or October as 'BCP week', declared by university Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey.

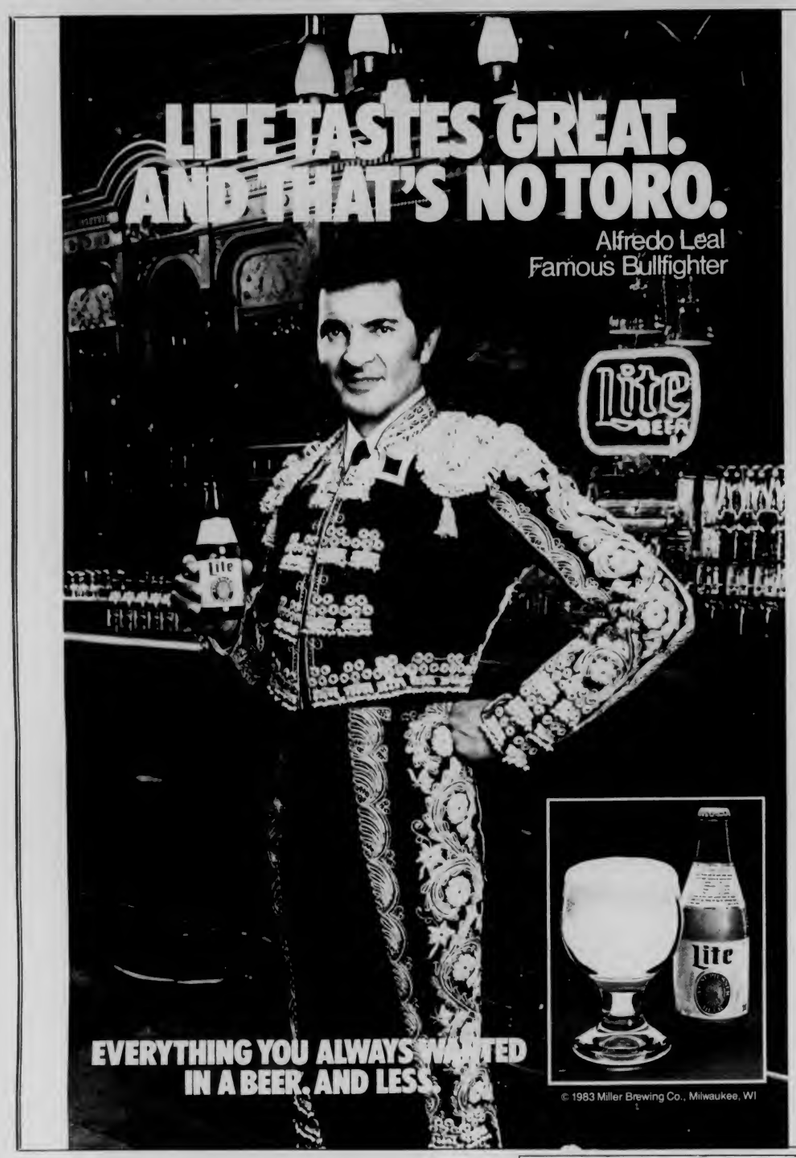
BCP began in August 1974 with 45 students and worked for two years in the "Equal Access and Outreach" program under the UMass Vice Chancelor for student affairs, mostly for Hispanics. Today, the program has 706 students of dilierent cultural background.

"Since 1940 this area (western Massachusetts) has received approximately eleven thousand Puerto Rican migrant workers," said Benjamin Rodriguez, Director of BCP. "81 percent of these people dropout of high school," he said.

BCP has worked to increase the number of economically disadvantaged students and insure them support services, Rodriguez said. They aid in exposing the cultural needs of the bilingual community at UMass and expose and encourage bilingual students to pursue graduate works. "We want to establish that education is so important. We recruit, give orientation and offer support," he said. "A college education offers you not only a better feeling academically but offers each person a unique opportunity for them to grow as an individual. It is an atmosphere that gives one the chance to discover the many diverse types of people there are in this world and how to incorporate them into your life and surroundings. The time that one is afforded in college to do this is exceptionally important to minority students because most have been surrounded by just one type of culture, their own. The transition is not an easy one, but like most things in life which are hard to obtain, the reward usually out does the pain," said Nelson Acosta, academic recruiter for the BCP.

"We have bilingual courses within different departments," Rodriguez said, who is also a professor in the school of education at UMass.

BCP gives support to bilingual students in English as a second language and also offers tutors to bilingual students, he said. BCP also stretches out to high school students, convincing them to stay in school and go further their education, he said.



David Jackson will be the featured singer in a gospel jubilee featuring the Voices of Harmony choir, Unlimited Joy choir, and Praise on Monday at 8 p.m. at the Student Union Ballroom, UMass. The jubilee will open the week of events for the Martin Luther King Week.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

'WE BELIEVE THE LIL' FELLAS LONG FOR A CHANCE TO EXPERIENCE DEMOCRACY AND THE ELECTORAL PROCESS AS WE KNOW IT.'

The problem that will not go away

Discrimination still exists

To the Editor,

Michael woke up and for a few minutes just lay still, a wonderfully warm, reassuring feeling spreading over his body as he watched Steven breathing deeply and contented, next to him. Today was the day they were to sign the papers, and the house, this house they worked on so long and hard fixing up together, would finally be theirs.

Michael thought back to the night he and Steven had first met through an ad in the "personals" section of the newspaper, some two and one-half years ago. Aware that initially the only attraction to one another was a common, modern-day affliction. Aware now that things were better--not perfect, but simply better. They had found each other--quite a feat in a world which constantly wrote, sang and paid homage to the theme of love, yet denied this most exquisite experience to any who strayed from its narrow, confining and paranoid limits. So many years of aching loneliness, frustratingly internalized for fear of rejection and ostracism, were now being paid off. Each new day brought with it more hope, more happiness, more self-acceptance--scarce commodities in years gone by.

Quietly, gingerly getting out of bed, Michael closed the door to the bedroom behind him and went into the kitchen. He turned on the radio to find out what had happened overnight. The Catholics had bombed a Protestant church in Ireland, killing five, three of them children. Fighting continued in war-ravaged Beruit, and in Boston another Vietnamese tenement had been torched.

As he sat waiting for the kettle to boil, Michael thought of how conditioned he, as well as everyone else, had become to accept such tragedy as simply part of life. He reached over, turned off the kettle and "Smash!" the morning's tranquility was shattered by the crashing glass.

Running into the living room, Michael found a large rock defiantly sitting inches from the stereo, a present for Steven. He ran and opened the front door, but there was no one to be seen. Picking up the rock, he read the attached note, neatly written on expensive paper: "Get out fags, leave our neighborhood!" Fear, followed by a dull, all-too-familiar rage built up inside of him.

"Why?" he asked himself. "We have done nothing, hurt no one. Can't they take us for who we are rather than what we are?"

The radio droned on in the kitchen, and Michael thought of the day's top stories. He thought of how much misery had been caused simply by man's irrational, almost pathological loathing of difference. Surrounded by so much hatred, Michael wondered if the world could really afford to snuff out love...any love.

Pondering this question for an instant, Michael said aloud; decisively and unequivocally, "No." He then put the rock down, turned around and shut off the radio as he hurried through the kitchen. Back in the bedroom, Michael slipped quietly underneath the covers, intending to wake up Steven and make love.

The pain others inflict

To the Editor,

This morning as I was walking to the Worcester Dining Commons, to eat breakfast, a white man that I had never seen before approached me. As I walked by him he called me a "scumbag" as asked me if I wanted some money to buy new pants. I asked if he was talking to me and he said "Yeah, you. You're a dyke."

The man kept yelling "You're a dyke, you're a dyke," until I started to follow him. He also called me a "prick" and a "nigger-lover", and seemed to enjoy shouting these obscenities.

Again, I had never seen this particularly ignorant man before this morning, and I strongly suspect he had never seen me. The poor slob probably just needed a seemingly defenseless person (a woman?) to antogonize in order to make him feel better (he might have had a rough week). I feel sorry for people, particularly the white, heterosexual men who are terribly uptight and insecure about themselves. They must feel that they need to attack women, gays, Blacks, and Jews to show how virile, witty and important they are. When will you learn?

To that man I'd like to tell you that you are a perfect example of the ultimate waste of time. You spend extensive money and time at an educational facility, yet remain as ignorant as the most despised among us. Happy Lesbian and Gay Awareness week. Happy Martin Luther King, Jr. week.

The silent and oppressed

To the Editor,

I am writing to you now to disclose some of my findings after studying here at the University of Massachusetts for four years. Initially upon my arrival I had no real understanding of what prejudice or discrimination really was.

However, presently, after being discriminated against personally I believe I have a firm grasp of the helplessness felt by all the "special interest" groups. Most recently I have read articles explaining how homosexuals and lesbians are harassed and discriminated against both socially and professionally. I have examined literature depicting the plight of minorities in this country, and it is appalling.

Women's issues are always in the news. Women are discriminated against in every conceivable way just because of their gender. I have read that the Supreme Court may eliminate the right a woman has to kill her baby in her womb (I believe the colloquial term is abortion).

However, there is a prejudice that exists at this university that few know about. Yes, few will understand how it feels to walk from class to class in fear; listening to jeering crowds scream, "Hey you, pointy ears!". Few will know the humility felt by a student much like myself upon being refused his/her legal right to employ the Vulcan Mind-Meld during quizzes and exams.

Yes! I am a Vulcan and I am proud! I want you to know that it takes great courage to admit this to you. Society wants to suppress Vulcans and delegate to them the lowest form of mental state. I feel it is time for the Vulcan community to come out of the closet. As soon as the gays are finished with their little stint we too should have an awareness week...Vulcan Awareness Week. We will no longer be the center of PolishVulcan jokes. We will not tolerate phaser fire from an ignorant society. It is time for us to stand up for what we believe in: Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Logic.

Live long and prosper.

Glory of the Royal Scam

It is ironic that Ronald Reagan addressed the National Association of Evangelicals on March 6 under the convention theme, "Leadership With Integrity". It is also a tribute to his ability to passionately advocate that which he finds necessary to neglect or abandon. First, consider this Reaganesque statement: "We must respect the rights and views of every American -because we are unshakeably committed to democratic values. Our Maker would have us be no less." Now consider a few examples of the Reagan Administration's actual performance in regard to "rights and views" and his commitment to "democratic values."

Thomas Pitoniak

On March 7, the Justice Department filed a legal brief challenging an ordinance in Dade County, Florida which required an unspecified number of county construction contracts to be awarded to minority-run businesses. The motive for this regressive move is questionable; the rationale is inadequate. According to William Bradford Reynolds, head of the Justice Department's civil rights division, such "racial selection devices" are consistent with the 14th Amendment's guarantee of "equal protection under the laws." He said the law's only constitutional application would be for "identifiable victims of unlawful racial discrimination." Not mentioned is the irrefutable fact that if their goal of an abolished ordinance is met, these "identifiable victims" and everyone else will be robbed of an ordinance that was meant to help fight discrimination.

The Reaganized Justice Department's regression was displayed as well in their decision to fight an affirmative action program in Birmingham, Alabama which is in fact supposed to be under their protection. The Justice Department has chosen to support a group of white male officers and firemen who, charging "reverse discrimination," oppose the program and actively work against the appointment of the city's first black fire chief. These critics fail to mention that only 19 percent of the police officers are black, in a city where blacks comprise 54 percent of the population. Since the program's inception in 1981, 14 whites were promoted to fire lieutenant, and 8 blacks; to police lieutenant: 3 blacks, 7 whites; to police captain: 2 whites, 0 blacks. Police Sargeant Simms says, "We just want to make it fair and return things to the middle where they belong." (New York Times; March 20) But things have never been at the middle, and the Justice Department-supported crusade will only push things further from a situation of equality.

On Oct. 25, 1983, Reagan fired three members of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights; they were the most outspoken against his policies. The Commission had produced a report that month which claimed civil rights enforcement had been severely hampered by the President's cuts in personnel and funding. But Ed Meese, with his own "unbending" dedication to equal justice, had warned of "drastic" results if the compromise bill that was in the making did not please the President. Republican Senator Charles Mathias was quoted as saying he was "shocked" by the action's "callous insensitivity" to the Congressional efforts at a bipartisan agreement on the agency's composition. One of those dismissed, Mary Frances Berry, said Reagan sought to "shut the commission up before the 1984 election."

The Reagan Administration's commitment to "democratic values" is hard to find in the disgrace involving the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), the Justice Department, and the Executive Branch itself. With a truly "blind" Justice Department, serious questions of obstruction of justice and abuse of positions--from EPA Regional Administrators to the White House itself--have been suspiciously swept aside after only one case was followed through (Lavelle: perjury, obstruction of justice). For example, Justice's indictment review committee, according to spokesman Thomas DeClair, "unanimously rejected" a recommendation to prosecute Robert M. Perry, an EPA general counsel under the notorious Anne Burford. Although there was evidence he may have lied to Congress, a report claimed evidence was "not of sufficient materiality to warrant prosecution." The Department also neglected documented "hit lists" and admissions that there had been such corrupt practices as reviewing confidential reports implicating companies with those same corporations' representatives.

As the EPA case shows, integrity is questionable in the most exalted regions of the Executive Branch. Reagan moved to protect Burford by claiming "executive privilege" over subpoenaed documents he had never read; this is obstruction of justice. When Congress charged Burford with contempt, Justice was supposed to prosecute. But with Ed Meese's solid approval, the Department filed suit against Congress. This clearly obstructed justice and abused power and privilege. Reagan's commitment to "democratic values" isn't unshakeable, it's nonexistent.

This Desk Can Reach Mach 2.

Some desk jobs are more exciting than others.

As a Navy pilot or flight officer, your desk can be a sophisticated combination of supersonic jet aircraft and advanced electronic equipment. But you can handle it. Because Navy flight training gives you the navigation, aerodynamics and other technical know-how you need.

In return, Navy aviation demands something of you as an officer: Leadership.

Your path to leadership starts with officer training that's among the most demanding in the military. It's intensive leadership and professional schooling combined with rigorous Navy flight training. And it's all geared to prepare you and other college graduates for the unique challenge of Navy aviation. The program is tough but rewarding.

One important reward for Navy officers is decision-making authority. In the air, and on the ground, you have management responsibility from the beginning. And your responsibility grows as you gain experience. No company can give you this kind of leadership responsibility this fast. And nothing beats the sheer excitement of Navy flying.

The salary is exciting, too. Right away, you'll earn about $18,300 a year. That's better than the average corporation will pay you just out of college. And with regular Navy promotions and other pay increases, your annual salary will soar to $31,100 after four years. That's on top of a full package of benefits and privileges.

Before you settle down to an earth-bound desk job, reach for the sky. Reach for the coupon. Find out what it takes to be part of the Naval Aviation Team. You could have a desk that flies at twice the speed of sound.

A spiffy Dresser

THE DRESSER
starring Albert Finney and Tom Courtenay
a Columbia Pictures release
By ED BEEN
Collegian Staff

Using World War II as a backrop, "The Dresser" is a captivating film about a Shakespearian acting company that tries to carry on despite the increasing number of bombed out theaters, and the tyrannical rule of company leader, Sir.

Albert Finney is the iron fisted egomaniac Sir, who after over 40 years of devoting his life to the stage, finds himself unable, both physically and mentally, to proceed. He is coaxed and nursed back to reality by his make-up man and dresser Norman (Tom Courtenay), who must suffer Sir's inane ramblings and constant query of "What play is it tonight."

The play is "King Lear," and when it finally gets off the ground, it is turned into a soulful and moving performance although not without its flaws and Sir's occasionally obnoxious stage presence, one that sets up the wrenching finale of the film and the viewer must witness Norman's painful soul bearing.

Finney is nothing short of fascinating in the actor within an actor role, one in which the character can, on stage, convey passionate emotion to thousands, but who ironically cannot communicate true feelings to those whom he loves, and who love him. Courtenay expertly portrays the dresser whose labor exudes purely from his love for Sir, but must forever go without thanks, or return of that love.

Nominated for best picture in the upcoming Academy Awards, "The Dresser" is blessed with Ronald Haywood's strong script, and Peter Yates' artful direction, who sucessfully give the viewer a clear picture of these people's lifestyles. They traverse from one drab yellow room to another, a misfit cast of old men and women, and limping draft rejects. During the dressing room scenes, the audience becomes increasingly aware of a boxed-in feeling, and the stage sequences come as a welcome relief.

The entire look of the movie is laced with the lack of permanence. Corn flour that is used for face make-up, very collapsible sets, and air raid sirens, all add to the frailty of the times and the people involved. What is also striking is the concept of combining Shakespeare and World War II.

Seeing King Lear carrying the body of Cordelia on stage, with the sound of bombs exploding just outside the theater, drives home the fact that the two are not that far removed from each other, that death and pain are unfortunately eternal.

One question that bothered my friend and I as we watched this most worthwhile effort was what place did the music of Gilbert and Sullivan, played by the orchestra between acts of "Lear", have to do with either Shakespeare or World War II England? A small point, but an apparent inconsistency with the rest of this evenly textured flowing picture.

Albert Finney prepares for a performance as King Lear with the assistance of his dresser, Tom Courtenay, in Columbia Pictures' The Dresser, produced and directed by Peter Yates.

Men's crew are off to Boston's Charles

By ED ROBINSON
Collegian Correspondent

"How in the name of all that was sane could there be people who thought it amusing to row a boat. It was not an amusement. It was a diabolical punishment, and even a genius of mental aberrations could never conlude that it was anything but a horror to the muscles and a crime against the back."

So wrote Stephen Crane, author of The Red Badge of Courage in a later short-story called "The Open Boat." If what he wrote were true then the oarsmen of the University of Massachusetts men's crew team, who open their season tomorrow on the Charles River in a race against Boston University and New Hampshire, have been horrifying their muscles practically daily since their season started in September. And all will serve multiple life sentences for the crimes they've committed against their backs.

"You can pretty much tell within the few days, who are the hard workers who'll eat this kind of stuff up."

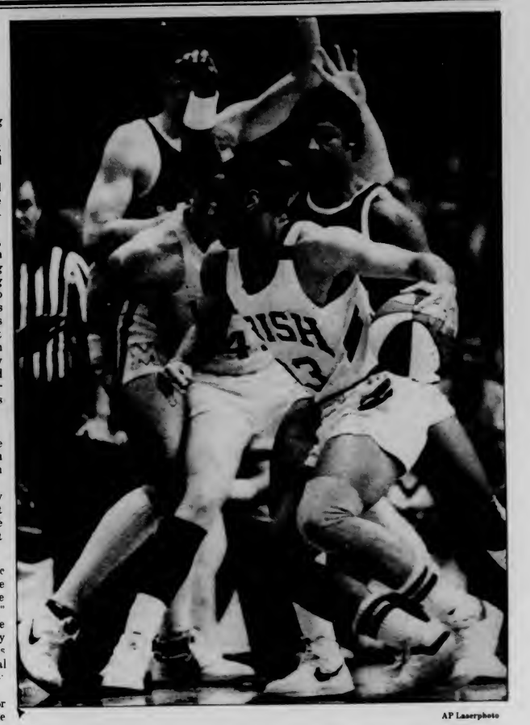
—UMass men's crew coach Dave Kumlin

But the Minuteman crew team knows from experience that what Stephen Crane wrote is not true. Rowing, for them, is neither an amusement nor a punishment-it's hard work. The goal is to improve and to win.

To accomplish these goals the team has a nine month, non-stop season consisting of three phases. Starting in September and through the fall there are longer races and the emphasis is on rowing technique and teaching people to row.

When it's too cold to row, and the river freezes, the second phase begins. The team concentrates on gaining strength by lifting weights and calisthenics, and increasing endurances through running.

When spring comes, the rowers are back out on the water, and the third and final phase of the rowing season begins - racing. The racing season culminates with the Dad Vail Regatta, (May 12-13) which is the Division II Collegiate National Championship.



All of this work is necessary because, while rowing looks easy from the shore, in actuality it is a very difficult task requiring coordination and timing. Proper rowing technique takes around two years to acquire. And what complicates matters further is that even after an oarsman has perfectd his stroke he must learn to adapt and synchronize his stroke to the seven others in his boat. Since practically everyone on the team has never rowed before coming to college, to be a rower requires a persistence and dedication that is uncommon.

Dave "Cook" Kumlin, who has coached the UMass crew team for six years has grown adept at spotting the potential oarsman among the freshman.

"You can pretty much tell within the few days, who are the hard workers who'll eat this kind of stuff up," Kumlin sid. "Some people you can tell aren't going to last that long."

Kumlin like all coaches, is optimistic about his team's chances. "I think all the boats, varsity, junior varsity, and novice boats have the potential to take a medal," he said. "The varsity looks very good. We lost a lot of people but the team looks very good." Perhaps the fact that many of this year's varsity were on the silver medal winning J.V. team last year accounts fo[illegible]

The UMass men's varsity crew team for 1984 consists of (in order, starting from the stern) coxswain Gerry Keaveny, and at stroke, Tom Martin, Larry Floyd, Charley Lawrence, Jim Santo, Nick Didomenico, John Tunnicliffe, Jim Holman, and Steve Arthur.

Gazelles take it One Game at a Time

UMass fields veteran attack

By ED CUNNINGHAM
Collegian Staff

At the outset of every sports season it is nice to reflect on the last year and past performances. In the realm of Division 1 college sports, however, the past is just that and it is tommorrow that counts.

For the University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team these facts are harsh reality. The UMass women have finished first and fourth in the nation respectively for the past two seasons. This year could be different. For head coach Pam Hixon and her corp, this season could be a long fruitful one, or just a long one.

UMass has lost their entire midfield and All-American netminder Rita Hubner to graduation. Hixons had the unenvialbe task of teaching every facet of the game to her relatively young team.

For the freshman contingents, she must teach them all they can learn before their first game against Northeastern next Thursday April 5 in Boston. Saturday's home opener against Boston University was cancelled due to the snow and the condition of the field.

Concerning the very talented veterans of the team, Hixon must show them how to play each of their games with a little more flexibility to compensate for the inexperience in the midfield. Hixon hopes this situation won't last very long.

"Right now, we're looking at his year as a rebuilding year. We're going to take it one game at a time and wait and see." Hixon continued to state that the freshman will have to learn the 'whats' and 'hows' of the game and will look to the veterans to be a little more flexible in their game until the freshman learn.

Hixon's unworried attitude is due in part to her knowledge of the capabilities of her returning players which include two All-Americans. Hixon's remark concerning the veterans is that they are simply 'great'.

Offensively, UMass is very strong. Hixon will look to sophmores Mary Scott and Bunny Forbes to provide some of the leadership at attack. Also returning are Linda Haytayan and All-American Pam Moryl, UMass' leading scorer the past two years. "We'll be able to score," said Hixon, "Pam and Linda combine very well together up front."

Defensively, UMass will be supported by Allmerican second team member in Carol Progulske. Progulske will prowl the defensive zone from her cover point position. Plugging up the nets for UMass will be Debbie DeJesus. DeJesus, a Junior, has been a back up to the now departed Hubner for the past two years and should be a bright spot for UMass.

"Debbie is an outstanding player and boy is she ready to go," exclaimed Hixon.

The official forecast for the 84 womens lacrosse team, then, is still up in the air. Barring injuries, the only immediate cause for concern lies in the inexperience of the midfield. The yet untested middies will have their first exam against Northeastern next Thursday.

The Minutewomen, who face the likes of Harvard and Temple this season, were ranked second in the first New England poll this week behind New Hampshire.

Rookie coach inherits experienced team

By MIKE LEVINE

With the selection of a new football coach and the impending departure of John Hempel dominating the sports headlines lately, another piece of sports news has gone by almost unnoticed--the naming of a new men's tennis coach for the University of Massachusetts.

He's Manny Roberts, the former JV and varsity tennis coach at Amherst College and head tennis pro at the Amherst Swim and Tennis Club. Roberts was named just before spring break to replace Bob Sloszek, who resigned after the fall season.

Because of the delay in naming a new coach, the team had to wait until this past Monday to start practice, with the first meet coming up on April 7 at Boston College. However, according to Roberts, "With so many experienced players back, it makes my job a whole lot easier."

"With so many experienced players back, it makes my job a whole lot easier."

—New tennis coach Manny Roberts

Returnees from last fall's 4-8 squad include team captain Steve Jordan, Wayne Peterson, Marc Weinstein, Earl Small, Andy Pazmany, and John DeKlerk. Also, Paul Holt will be returning to action after sitting out the fall season. Also hoping for action are Barry Katz, John Somerstein, Frank Rodman, and Mike Chajes.

Thus far, players' reactions to Roberts have been very positive.

According to Weinstein, "He seems like a pretty good coach. He sure has a tough job to do in whipping us into shape in a week and a half."

Small added, "He's really helping us by having us compete against one another in practice."

As for the outlook for this season, Small said, "With most of our players back and Steve Jordan healthy again, our doubles play should be a lot better."

After the B.C. match, the netmen will have an April 9 match at Rhode Island before opening their home season the next day against Holy Cross. Other home matches include Springfield College and American International, while the Minutemen will be traveling to Clark, Central Connecticut, and Tufts, as well as a return trip to Rhode Island on April 27 for the Atlantic 10 Championships.

Softball team snowed out

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Today, with snow spread out over the ground everywhere, UMass softball coach is glad she had some foresight down in South Carolina during their spring trip a week ago.

Sortino and her squad were supposed to leave on Friday but they snuck in another game with Eastern Michigan on Saturday. The coach is glad they got that extra game because now the Minutewomen, 9-4 on the year thus far, now have to wait until Tuesday to face Providence in their home and Northern opener.

Today's scheduled game with Boston College was 'snowed out' and the Massachusetts softball team has to wait another day to play ball.

"After playing hard down in South Carolina (13 games in seven days), to come back here and go inside and practice like it's February is hard," catcher Beth Talbott said.

Sortino agreed saying, "This team is really ready to play. We have things we can work on and polish up in practice but you still really need to play."

Boston College was a first year team and they were having a rough time, losing some games by big numbers. Massachusetts could have easily handled them and the team wanted the chance to.

"They were very disappointed," Sortino said. "But they weren't surprised with the snow falling outside." There will be no make-up game since the two schools cannot agree on a date. That's why Sortino was glad she added the Eastern Michigan game in South Carolina.

So now Tuesday's doubleheader with Providence will be the season opener for UMass at 2 p.m. to give UMass a chance to tune up next Thursday's crucial game with Rhode Island.

In the Atlantic 10 this year, there are two divisions of three teams each. The top two go to the Atlantic 10 title tourney to get a shot at the automatic NCAA berth.

UMass must beat out either URI or Rutgers to go and that makes every game with those two teams very crucial. UMass topped Rutgers 4-1 in South Carolina.

But at the moment, the practices go on at the Cage.

Golf:

Experienced men's team returns
Only three back for women

By JOSEPH PETRIN
Collegian Correspondent

With yesterday's snowstorm people probably aren't thinking too much about golf right now. Well, the golfers might have to use optic orange balls, so they can be spotted in the snow, but golf will be played this spring at the University of Massachusetts.

This year, as in the past, the men's team will be coached by Ed Vlach. Vlach will try to fight the weather and prepare his team for their short but demanding seven-tournament-spring season.

The Minutemen are scheduled to open their season on April 5 with a home match at Hickory Ridge C.C., here in Amherst. It is doubtfull that they will play though due to the recent weather.

Junior captain Tyler Shear should be the main man when the Minutemen assault the golf course. Shear was a standout while golfing for Amherst High and has proven that he can play on the college level. Junior Jim Ryan and sophomore Brian Fitzgerald are coming off of fine fall performances and will be a key to a successful season. Sophomore Bill Mead ended the fall as low man for UMass in the Atlantic 10 championships, and is expected to continue playing good golf.

The coach of the UMass women's golf team is Jack Leaman and he talked positively about his team.

"I think that we'll have a strong team and we're looking forward to a good season. We have our three returning players but our problem will be depth. If we can get some more girls we'll be in good shape," said Leaman.

The three returning players that Leaman talked about will be the nucleus of this year's team. Seniors Jane Egan and Teresa Collins along with junior Judy Cuzy make up that nucleus and should be strong performers. There are two badly needed additions to the spring squad. Sandy Kupica is a junior college transfer and Leaman said she should have a fine season. Also newcomer freshman Linda Foley should strengthen the lineup.

The depth of the Minutewomen is the only thing that could prevent them from having a successful season. Leaman is still looking for more golfers for his team.

Anyone with any experience, who can shoot between 85-95 and is interested in playing should contact Leaman.

The Minutewomen have a scheduled tri-match April 2 at Oak Ridge C.C. for their season opener. Their opponents are supposed to be Springfield and Dartmouth, but most likely the match will be postponed until a later date.

Both the men's and women's UMass golf teams should sport a winning record this spring as long as they stay away from optic orange golf balls and don't have to play in the snow.

★ Men's Lacrosse

"I can't look at the schedule and say we should win these three, or something like that. Each one is going to be a toss-up. I don't think we'll blow anybody out and I don't think anybody will blow us out." He adds, "I look at it and think that we can go 13-0. Then theretically we could be 0-13. I think we'll be somewhere floating around in there."

Garber says the rough schedule, which includes Lacrosse powers Army, Rutgers, Hofstra, and Rrown, as well as the games against Cornell, Syracuse, and Hobart, is the way he and his team want it.

"This is certainly no ego trip on my part," says Garber. "The players want it this way. I tell them that we're in the same league as these teams we're playing, but the only way to prove it is by playing them head to head."

The only thing Garber insists upon in playing the powerhouses each year is switching home sites each year. "We've earned that respect," he said firmly.

This is true, and when the third ranked team in New England, the Gorillas, do get into Garber's 30th campaign, that respect is being planned to be spread.

Colts on the move to the Hoosier Dome

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) - The Baltimore Colts of the National Football League will move to Indianapolis and play in the new Hoosier Dome, Mayor William Hudnut said Thursday.

The mayor announced the move of the team shortly after Colts Coach Frank Kush and another team official arrived in Indianapolis.

"It's great coming to Indianapolis. It's something we're doing with a lot of anticipation. It's a new experience," said Kush.

Kush arrived here with Michael Chernoff, the Colts' general counsel, on a flight from Baltimore in the private jet of team owner Robert Irsay. The owner was not aboard.

Indianapolis officials scheduled a Saturday meeting of the Capital Improvement Board, which must approve any agreement involving use of the 60,000 seat Hoosier Dome.

Barbara Neilan, a board spokesman, said she had been authorized by board president P.E. MacAllister to announce that "an agreement has been negotiated with the Baltimore Football Club subject to approval of the board at its meeting in special session on Saturday."

MacAllister said the meeting would have been Thursday, but announcement of the meeting must be posted 48 hours ahead of time.

The Indianapolis News reported Thursday that MacAlister followed his remarks by saying, "We're going to make some money. We didn't give away the family jewels."

Also, a meeting of the Washington Township School Board was set Friday to discuss a reported agreement for it to provide a closed school and its property as a temporary training site for the Colts.

Meanwhile, Maryland officials made last-minute attempts to try to keep the team there. The Maryland House voted 103-19 to empower Baltimore to take over the team through the right of eminent domain. The bill was sent to Gov. Harry Hughes, who said he would sign it.

Officially, Hempel's out

It has been made official. John Hempel will be launching long range jumpers from somewhere else in the future, as his Minuteman basketball career has come to an end.

Hempel will indeed leave the University as well as the hoop team, and although no plans have been announced. A transfer, possibly to Seton Hall, St. John's, or Villanova probably is in the works.

The 6-7 225 pound foward, known for his outside shooting and the Minuteman's leading scorer the past two seasons, said last night that no plans were set for his basketball future and things would take about a week to work out.

Head coach Ron Gerlufsen, reached in his office, said Hempel's reasons were personal and he had no knowledge of the sophomore's future plans.

Gerlufsen also stated that the decision came as a surprise to him, and that he had seen nothing earlier that would have indicated the possibility of Hempel leaving.

Gerlufsen added that this would change recruiting plans some, as the Minutemen will now also be looking for a player of Hempel's style, that being a strong swingman forward with an outside shooting touch.

Winter Strikes Back

In New England, no one can take anything for granted. Nothing goes by the book especially the weather. One day it's 60 degrees out and the next day.....

Well, yesterday's late winter/early spring snowstorm has put a damper on three University of Massachusetts athletic teams who were hoping to open up their northern schedules this weekend.

The first victim was the softball team's home opener scheduled against Boston College for this afternoon at NOPE.

The women's lacrosse team got its home and season opener against Boston University cancelled due to the snow and the wet grounds. Coach Pam Hixon said that the administration doesn't want to see the NOPE field chewed up.

The men's lacrosse team had its season opener against Division III national champion Hobart cancelled, too. The game was set for Saturday in Geneva, New York, but the Hobart field is under snow.

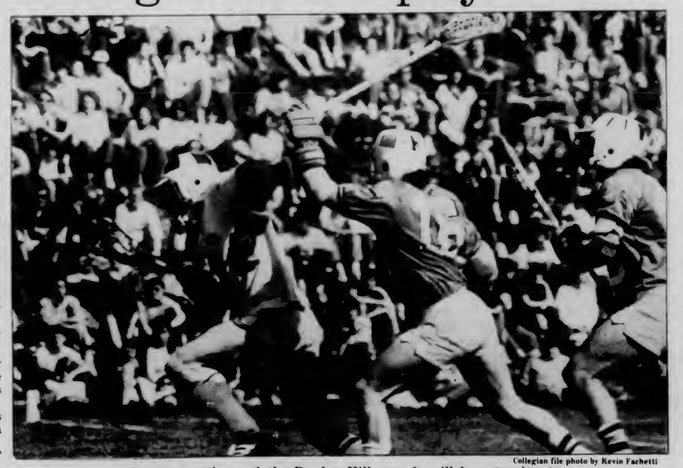
The only games that are still on at the moment are the baseball team's tripleheader with Temple on Saturday and Sunday.

Gorillas ready to forget '83 and play

By RUSS WHINNEM
Collegian Staff

It is his 30th year at the job and for only the third time in those three decades, his team, nationally ranked 11 of the last 12 years, is coming off a losing season. But this is a new campaign and the frustration from what head coach Dick Garber calls the "craziest season I ever lived through," was put aside when last year's equipment was turned in.

Now as Garber, the winningest active Division I coach at 235-111-4, sits behind his desk among a trophy laden wall, various paperwork, and VCR recorder playing back last season's Hobart game, a smile comes across his tanned face while he reflects on the season in front of him.



As fate and Mother Nature will have it, the scheduled opener will be delayed anyway thanks to the 1½feet of snow dumped in Geneva, New York. The game, guaranteed to be a beauty, against Hobart College, the defending Division III National Champions, may be rescheduled for May 7th. That is the same weekend Massachusetts will be facing Syracuse ironically, the Division I National Champions. The game may be scratched, depending upon Hobart's anticipated playoff action.

Whatever the outcome of that decision, the Gorillas' season opener now looks to be next Wednesday, April 4th, over at Cornell. It is perhaps a blessing in disguise for Garber's troops, as he has no less than 14 players on the shelf battling illness from a bug picked up on the team's recent trip to Florida.

When the season finally does get under way, it promises to be quite a bit better than last year's 5-10 finish. It is a finish that Garber maintains wasn't as bad as it seems.

"It was a strange one because it was a good team we had," he begins. "It was also a good team that played well. We lost five one-goal games, many that we thought we should have won. Then we went out and beat Hobart 11-4, and Dartmouth, the ranked number 1 team in New England, 16-5."

In explanation, Garber says the team's downfall was missing too many shots on goal. He cites the Brown game, a 7-2 loss, in which the Gorillas outshot the Bruins an astounding 29-9 in the first half and trailed 3-0. Then in the third period, the assault continued with an 11-1 shot advantage, but Brown came away with the only goal of the stanza. The opportunities were more than there but the capitalizations were not. "That was the thing," says Garber.

Lacrosse action and the Boyden Hill crowds will be returning to UMass as the Gorilla's host their first home game April 11 against Brown.

This year the opponents are the same, which add up to what was rated as the nation's toughest schedule last year. The Gorillas are better says Garber and he feels his squad can measure up with anybody.

"The team is much improved offensively," he says. "And overall we're a couple of degrees better. I guess what I'm saying is that we've got a pretty good lacrosse team here."

Garber, of course, is not ready to start signaling for a National Championship though. Not with the opponents Massachusetts once again has to face. continued on page 15

Regents approve tuition increase

By BOB BURGERS
Collegian Correspondent

The Board of Regents Saturday approved a new tuition policy despite pleas by students and state legislators to delay a vote until further studies could be made.

The tuition hike for the state's 29 colleges and universities was denounced by students who complained they had been left out of the decision-making process.

The new plan calls for a one year tuition increase of 56 percent,, approximately $1,000, replacing the regents March 13 approval of a 15 percent increase. According to State Chancellor of Higher Education John Duff, "Our previous decision was a mistake. We failed to take the students into consideration, but with this new proposal, we feel we have."

Duff said the increase "was a long time in coming," and that he was pleased the new proposal will make Massachusetts "the most expensive place in the country to attend a public school."

State senator John Olver and representative Jim Collin,, both of Amherst, complimented the segments on their decision.

"It was an informed, rational decision by them (the regents) which reflects the reality that students too often want everything handed to them. Serves them right!" Collins said. "The average income of parents of UMass students has increased 26 percent in recent years. This reflects that fact; it shows we are keeping the lower class, the great unwashed as it were, from desecrating our fine institution," chimed in Olver.

Despite Duff's satisfaction with the plan, students present at the regents press conference Sunday were dismayed. A student from the University of Massachusetts, who wished to remain anonymous out of fear that criticism may provoke the regents into passing a special increase soley for him, said "Look, I've given up on the regents. I mean, we've been protesting the 15 percent increase for a month, and they turn around and do this to us. I can't believe it. It seems they get off on meeting secretly to decide how much students at public schools can take."

UMass chancellor Joseph D. Duffey said the increase shouldn't be much concern to students. "This will still keep the state schools well under the tuition costs of the state's private schools. Besides, the total cost of an education is nothing compared to how much students spend on cocaine."

One regent said, "I personally had a good time passing this new policy We worked hard for about 35 minutes pounding out an agreement which will benefit everyone, and then took about six hours writing the draft. And the secret meeting was fun too, We kind of enjoy meeting secretly to decide how much state college and university students can take."

The increase will mean that about three-quarters of the total cost of an education for one year will come out of students' pockets

Speaker of the Massachusetts House Thomas McGee (D-Lynn) said "Although none of my kids attended public schools, this increase is absurd From my dealings with the regents, I get the distinct impression that they enjoy meeting secretly to decide how much students at public higher educational institutions can take"

Records erased from data bank

By STEVEN B. COOKE
Collegian Staff

All undergraduate academic records for Fall 1983 at the University of Massachusetts may have been lost over the weekend, officials say, when an unidentified suspect infiltrated and erased computer memory data banks.

While no suspects have been identified, University Registrar Ralph Jones said yesterday that those with extensive knowledge of the schematics and operative procedures of the University's Cyber 650 computer system would be able to rack the access code and tamper with the records.

"The computer system has several independent extensive back-up systems to prevent unauthorized access and erasure of records, but it seems that all of them have been infiltrated," Jones said.

While Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey was unavailable for comment, Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs Dennis Madson said that the University would soon be holding discussions to determine retrieval and re-organization possibilities, and would not rule out the option of nullifying the semester transcripts.

"Although we realize that this would cause many logistical problems for students, we might have no alternative," Madson said. "If we have no academic records except the departmental transcript files, we would never be able to coordinate the complex data-interactive procedures necessary in grading 25,000 students and identifying those graduating. Madson said, "As such, we may have no choice but to refund Fall semester's tuition, and allow students to start again."

University and Amherst police have already begun an investigation much the same as that of last year, when a computer "hacker" infiltrated the data banks of an electrical engineering course and erased the files of all those using the computer at the time. The total memory loss was limited to 1000 students, although retrieval of back-up systems was unsuccessful.

"Like last year, we're going to investigate the engineering students first, but due to the magnitude of the infiltration, we think a disgruntled professor might have done it," said Jerry Oatmeal, Director of Public Safety.

Hatch asbestos blamed in new cancer cases

By FRED FRIABLE
Collegian Staff

New evidence concerning the intersession asbestos contamination in the Campus Center has proven that the danger level was much greater than previous official estimates.

Air samples taken inside the Hatch Cafeteria and at five other locations during the first week of Spring semester indicated levels of the carcinogenic substance to be .32 fibers per cubin centimeter, a level hundreds of times the safety level agreed upon by university and independent contractors.

"No one knows the scope and intensity of the asbestos contamination problem, because it just hasn't been publicized," said Amy Duval, a SGA representative who requested the tests. "This seems to be a catastrophe of much greater proportion than anyone will admit," Duval said, citing the forty-seven cases of lung cancer reported in recent weeks by University Health Services.

"We asked the University to take tests outside the removal area just to be safe, and they said they appreciated our concern. But they never did anything about it."

A spokesperson for the Campus Center management today denied the concourse ever had asbestos in it. "Prove it," he said, "you can't see cancerous dust, so ha ha."

One Hatch patron last Thursday came down with a case of cancer immediately following a doulbe bacon special. "I was eating a burger," the victim recalls, "and all of a sudden I had cancer." The tragedies continue.

Evidence of the asbestos dust levels were obtained partially through use of an asbestos test baby. The three year old toddler was allowed to romp and play through the contaminated areas for several hours in late January. The child's lungs were subsequently sheared open and checked for cancer levels. "That was one cancerous baby," a lab technician later laughed.

Hatch management joked that the additional fiber was on the house.

Senate resigns, cites student apathy

By BARNEY BLARNEY
Collegian Staff

In response to the internal bickering which has plagued the Student Government Association (SGA) and Student Senate the entire year, and the poor voter turnout in the recent elections, all of the senators resigned yesterday.

It was the first unified action the SGA has displayed since its establishment.

Former re-elect Speaker Chris Sullivan, said the internal politicking tidal-waved last week, causing several nervous breakdowns and judicial suits. "The idea to resign just seemed to snowball," Sullivan said.

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey said he is "pleased" with the move. "I have been humoring these kids for a long time," he said. Duffey said he and other administrators have often waited and waited and waited some more" for guidance and output from the SGA on the Constitution revision and a stand on the invasion of Grenada, for example.

Recently elected, recently resigned, SGA co-presidents Rick Patrick and Jim Keller said they thought about it over a beer at the Blue Wall and figured "what the hell, the students don't care and our resumes are set." According to Patrick, he and Keller will still use the president's office as the site of a video recording/cable television operation with "good friends and comrades" Bill Collins, Dave McCarthy and Timmi Rudolph.

Long considered a hangout of deluded radicals and burnt out STPEC majors, the fourth floor of the Student Union is slated for renovation as another shopping mall replete with beauty parlors, video games, bowling alleys and a Republican Club office. The floor was deserted yesterday althouh a few teary-eyed rads exchanged hackey-sacks and handshakes, lamenting their loss of a sinecure away from the real world.

Ex-Senator Ray Flynn attempted to sum up the situation but could not make up his mind where he stood or what was the most correct thing to say, except "th, th, th, that's all folks!"

Students passing by did not seem to notice or care.

World and National News

President Ronald Reagan skipped church services Sunday to attend the annual White Knight Lynch Pin Bowling competition, or so he says.

Reagan scorns student voters

WASHINGTON (API) — President Reagan, citing more than a decade of student voters consistently earning recognition as the age group with the lowest election turnout record, yesterday announced his plans to "totally blow off" any efforts at seeking out or in any way accomodating student interests.

"Well, I just can't understand what all this hullabaloo is about," grinned the President at an afternoon press conference. "It's not like nobody knew about that 'low-turnout' business."

Reagan reckoned his decision would, however, have little effect on normal fundraising and other campaign policies he has used throughout his career.

"I guess what it means," shrugged the president, "is that me and Nancy won't be getting to see old Bob Jones' kids this year."

After the President left for a nap, speeksman Larry Spokes explained the true intention of the plan would be to follow two of the basic Republican philosophies: first, to keep younger voters less intelligent and thus having less potential as a future source of antagonism for the "true Americans;" and secondly, as part of the more central belief in and love for the military, by getting students out of school, keeping them poor, enticing them into the military with schooling package deals, and then "educating them the right way" in the military.

The Reagan administration is currently discussing the possibility of eliminating the Pell Grant program, which provides money for economically needy students, White House officials said only hours after the President's news conference.

"I suppose our best reason for cutting student financial aid is the fact that the money is being misused," the source said. "We have evidence that many recipients of Pell Grants are English majors, journalism majors, philosophy majors and comparative literature majors. What are these students going to do to help this country's future? We think not much."

The spokesman also said many of the current recipients of financial aid are not registered Republicans, and in a system of favors and party affiliations, "this is just not right."

The Reagan administration is still supporting student loans and work study programs, however. Reagan will reportedly continue to fund work-study and student loan programs, but to qualify for work study a student will now have to produce evidence that he or she has earned at least $40,000 since his or her 16th birthday.

To qualify for a loan, students will have to produce evidence that one-third of the loan will be payed back the day after their graduation, and that there will be "no problem" paying an annual interest rate of 18 percent of the loan.

Wexler picked for VP slot

By CLAUDIA SMELLMAN Collegian Staff

Only days before the delegate-rich primary in the state of New York, Walter Mondale announced that he has chosen "famous female Anne Wexler as a vice-presidential running mate."

Anne Wexler, wife of University of Massachusetts Chancellor Joseph Duffey, and a political consultant in Washington D.C. "has been working on my campaign for a long time," Mondale said.

"She may have to remain behind the scenes, since she's a political consultant, but she knows more people than anyone else in Washington. And besides, she's a woman, and my campaign manager told me that I'd better do something brash, innovative, and exciting, soon," Mondale said.

Mondale said that he seeks to wrestle the Democratic women's vote from Gary Hart, whom Mondale called "cuter that I am."

Ms. Wexler was in Colorado when the announcement was made and could not be reached for comment.

Proud husband Joseph Duffey was ecstatic about the announcement, stating "Geez, last year a picture in U.S. News and World Report- and now this! I couldn't be happier."

Both Wexler and Duffey are already very familiar with the White House and the confines of the Oval Office.

During the late seventies, Wexler was middle-level administrator for the Carter administration. Duffey, then Chair of the National Endowment for the Humanities, often ate lunch at the White House cafeteria, where he and wife Anne could be observed holding hands between their plastic trays and whispering sweet nothings into each other's ears.

Duffey is reportedly packed and on his way to Washington.

King to attend graduation

By JOE EAGER
Collegian Staff

Vowing to attend "in a suit of armor with an M16 machinegun, if necessary" ex-governor Edward J. King announced that this year he would deliver the UMass Commencement address.

"Last year I was supposed to receive awards, medals, an honorary degree, and the key to campus, but those commie sympathizers made a big fuss with death threats, so I had to cancel," King said, "But things are gonna be a little different this time around while I'm on the attack."

Speaking at a press conference Saturday, Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey confirmed reports that King would be allowed to conduct a campus-wide "security sweep, to detain any campus radicals until the Commencement is over. The date and place of the Commencement ceremony will not be released for security reasons."

King and Duffey discussed details of the Commencement Address at a lobster dinner on campus Saturday night. The dinner was catered by Anthony's Pier 4 in Boston after the Chancellor had the entire staff flown in for an evening of receptions and public announcements concerning Commencement. The affair was paid for by new student tuition increases according to Duffey.

The chancellor introduced King "as a great guy, an almost great football player, and a pushover. He's always been there, in Boston, whenever the University needed him, or when I need him."

Duffey then proceeded to give humorous examples "like the time our budget was finding hard passage through the state legislature, and Eddie called Senate Speaker Thomas McGee and said 'Gee Tom, don't be such a hard-ass, you're making me look bad.'"

"And even though he never visited UMass while he was governor, he told me today that he really, really cared about us, a lot," Duffey said.

King replied "I did feel a bit snubbed because no UMass students attended any of my NFL games in the '60s, but that's all behind me now."

Administration gets tough with fraternities

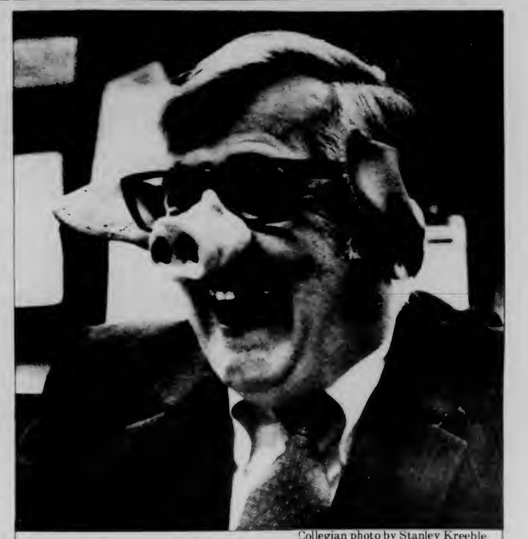
By CHIP PIERCE, JR.
Collegian Correspondent

The recent closing of the Amherst College fraternities has spurred Greek area officials at the University of Massachusetts to place stricter regulations on their frats, according to a report distributed Friday.

One change concerns an increase in the grade point average that brothers and sisters must maintain. Greek area officials have proposed raising the present 2.5 gpa requirement to 3.1, to go into effect next semester. The anticipated outcome, according to one Greek area official, will be the shutting down of all existing houses except the Christian House.

Joey Calhoun, a representative from BKO, said "From the way it looks now, all houses will be turned into retail outlets for Pioneer Valley businesses. Our frat, for example, has been optioned by Frankie's The Hot Dog King, whose booming business has created the need for expansion." Pi Kappa Alpha, one of the more popular frats on campus, will become a shoe store, specializing in the ever-popular woman's CFM boots and the stylish turf shoe for men, brand-named "Pub," or "Dig Me I'm Hip" shoes.

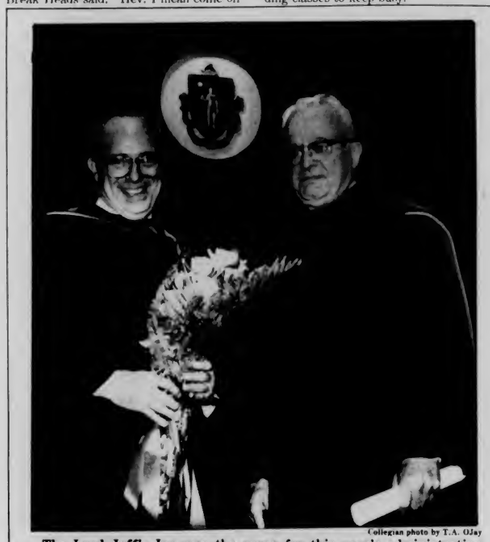
Contending that fraternities and sororities make this country great and super bitchin, sorta like napalm and Three's Company, Joey Blauserine of We Break Heads said, "Hey, I mean come on here. Why did we come to ZooMasspartyschool anyway? Being a blank business major and a wild party-type animal is just a drag, you know what I mean? Next thing you know, we're gonna have to be nice to girls and stuff, sorta like feminism, ya know. Socially consciuus to me means knowing happy hour prices in town. We are guys, doin' guy things."



Phi Slamma Jamma could not be reached for comment, something about blowing off classes for some serious hoop out west.

"If we can't get totally obliterated with no concept of like reality, why are we here? Hey, saw you at Lauderdale, you sly dog you. Never knew you were so flexible with a banana," said Charley Smallminded of B.O.

This reporter denies being anywhere near the Button in the recent past.



Another change, according to the report, is the reduction of social events each Greek house may have. Scoobs Johnson, a representative of Delta Tappa Kegg, said "In order to enhance a more academic environment, Greek officials now say we can't party. This includes our Monday Night Football Drinking Bash and Greek night at Justin Ryan's. My question is 'Why?'"

Johnson also said that as a result of these "heavy" restrictions, the brothers and sisters would possibly turn to God or attending classes to keep busy.

Several hundred college students rallied at the office of Massachusetts Representative Silvio Conte with cries of "Conte is a pig." The Republican was unavailable for comment, as he squealed and grunted and rolled around in a trough of mud aides had built for him.

Supreme Court says: "Umies will pray"

By JERRY FEELWELL
Collegian Staff

Beginning in 1985, the Uncersity of Massachusetts will become one of two-hundred universities and colleges chosen by the Supreme Court to begin mandatory prayer in school.

The new amendment, which passed through the Senate with an overwhelming majority, rules that elementary and secondary educational facilities should not hold school paryer because the real problems are found among college students.

President Reagan and several leaders of the new amendment said the bill was designed and introduced to "put more of the fear of God into each student's heart and soul in order to teach them to live as good, God-fearing Americans."

Senator Boring Hatch (R-Utah), one of the Senate majority leaders who requested an emergency voting session after minority leaders called the first vote incomplete because several of the senators were sleeping, said the college students are the ones to blame for the erosion of the family and the American way.

"Those college kids are having sex like bunnies. They're drinking beer like there was no tommorrow and they're even doing drugs like nicotine and caffeine," Hatch said. "They've lost sight of God and His teachings and it is our duty to put Him back in their lives."

On campus students will be required to pray at Hasbrouk at 8 a.m. for mass every day and recite the Lord's Prayer before each D.C. meal.

Off campus students will be mandated to congregate at one of the three grmnasiums on campus for services at 7. a.m. each morning.

Concert lineup announced

The Union Program Council today announced the lineup for this year's alumni stadium spring concert, the first in three years. Rock/Pop superartist Michael Sembello will headline the event, playing a solo acoustic set to include his recent superhit, "Maniac." The event will be held on May 18.

Opening for Sembello will be an equally impressive lineup of performing artists. The Bimtones, an all woman acapella group from Winnipeg, will bring their unique talent to the University community and local favorites Bratt, Fat and Bonnie Raitt will also be on the roster.

Due to highproduction costs, to ticket prices will be nine dollars for students and twelve dollars for the general public. All students will be expected to purchase tickets, whether they plan on attending the event or not, a measure intended to keep the overall ticket cost down. "If we had to guess how many tickets would be sold," a U.P.C. spokesman said Friday, "it would be a real hassle. It's easier to figure on selling out the whole stadium, however many people that is."

Continuing the safety precautions instigated three years of age, no food or liquid will be allowed in the stadium and students may not enter or leave during the concert.

Love bug hits UMass

In the last week, more than one-hundred cases of genital herpes have been reported by University of Massachusetts Health Services officials, who say that several carriers brought the disease back with them from Ft. Lauderdale Florida after Spring Break.

The easily transferable viral infection was further spread into epidemic proportions back at UMass, and University Sexual Health marshalls have begun investigating area bars, particularly those who held "Show Off Your Tan" Nights. Off-campus students who placed orders for three or more kegs during the past week are being investigated as well.

"I don't know how we're going to track this down," it is the kind of thing people don't like to talk about, Marshall Jack Meoff said.

"But we'd better do something fast, or this whole schools in trouble," said Meoff. "Public bathrooms would have to be closed, and a close watch kept on students who appear to have prurient interests."

Most students don't seem too concerned about this venereal disease.

Justin Westview, a sophomore who came back from Florida last Wednesday said, "Sure it's scary, but it beats, like, cancer or some other bummer diseases."

Westview said that he expects them to "find a cure for it soon," but until then, he's more concerned about "making it with enough chicks to get accepted into my fraternity."

At a recent political gathering the question "who dresses the silliest?" was posed. Former president Jimmy Carter and first lady Walter Mondale were quick to claim the title.

If you're a senior and have the promise of a $10,000 career-oriented job, do you think it's difficult to get the American Express® Card?

Guess again.

It's rather easy.

In fact, all you need is a $10,000 job. That's it. No strings. No gimmicks. And this offer is even good for 12 months after you graduate.

Because American Express wants to show that we not only believe in your future, but we also believe in you now.

But why do you need the American Express Card now?

First of all, it's a good way to help you to establish your credit history. And you know how important that is.

Of course, you can also use the Card for vacation trips, as well as for restaurants and shopping. And because the Card is recognized and welcomed worldwide, so are you.

So call 800-528-8000 for a Special Student Application or look for one at your college bookstore or on your campus bulletin boards.

Great new things to do at UMass

Tel-Med, the organization that has been bringing you a multitude of free taped information on health issues for more than ten years, is happy to announce the creation of a joint venture with the Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

The service, which is being called UM-ED, will offer 24-hour taped information via the UMass campus telephone system on issues of concern to UMass students. While UM-ED will continue to provide health information in the proud tradition of TEL-MED, we will provide additional information, including the following tapes:

Alcohol and Drugs: Where to get them — This tape offers information on area bars and package stores that do not card minors as well as up-to-date forecasts on where drugs are available on the East and West side of campus, Brittany Manor and Pufton Village.

Party, Party, Party — this series of 18 tapes offers information about the UMass Party Scene. Highlights of this award winning series include Late Night Parties (Tape 4), a tape that lists all late night parties where people go to do stupid things and have fun until the wee hours,

Keg Parties (12), which lists who had how many kegs at their apartment and how many hundreds of kids were there when the cops busted it up. Ask for Tape number 1 to get a list of all tapes in the series.

Coming Out, or What it Means to be a Republican at UMass — This tape, narrated sensitively by Republican Club campus leader Jack Meoff discusses campus support groups for students who think they may be Republican.

Pathways: A Guide to the more than 200,000 solutions to the Maze — this tape offers hints on how to negotiate the Maze by the stadium in less than 60 seconds.

The Zannini Method — this tape offers suggestions on how to harrass students living in the residence halls without facing any charges of violating the University Code of Student Conduct.

I'm O.K. and You Are Not — This tape is designed to reverse the brainwashing of Chairman Koffler's Year Toward Civility. Senator Jesse Helms eloquently reminds us that it's not O.K. to be nice to people who are different from you.

The Constitution — This moving historical reading of the Collegian Constitution by a legendary Collegian editor will bring you to tears. The oratory is reminiscent of the speeches of the late Franklin Delano Roosevelt and/or John F. Kennedy.

The S.G.A. hotline — This ten-second tape tells you about all the current efforts done for students by our elected student representatives.

Fifteen foolproof ways to harass and betray your friends. Updated every week to allow everyone to experiment as much as possible.

Where's Joe Duffey? A tape designed to give you up-to-the minute information on the Chancellor, how much he's travelled, and what famous people have been over for drinks lately.

Brought to you by the folks at UM-ED.

Why can't we all be friends?

It is time for my weekly column, and again I must delve into the depths of my soul, and see what wrenches my inner being that the most. I think I'll write about human beings, and why I just can't understand them.

Humans are just so nasty these days it really upsets me. When I heard about all those Marines getting killed in Lebanon it really upset me. Why don't they all just stop fighting and get together for lunch. They really might get something accomplished.

Or how about all those starving people in developing nations? Why don't they jsut get high paying jobs, move into a nice part of town, quit feeling sorry for themselves?

I don't know what it is, but whenever I read a newspaper, all the news just seems to be depressing. All the crime and violence — it's really starting to get to me. People don't have to steal. Don't they know they're breaking the law? And don't they think of how much they're bumming out their victims, especially if they shoot them?

It just seems to me that people aren't happy in the world. They should relax, have more fun, and not worry about everything so much. My dad says that the job market is really very good right now, and that I don't have to worry. And that means everyone else should be okay too. because they must do more work than I do. All I do is take a few classes and hang around a newsroom rewriting editorials I read in the Boston Globe.

I'm taking a course right now on Marxism and class struggle, learning about social coflict and rebellion. Why do people struggle like that — it's counterproductive and against their better interests. They should all cooperate just because capitalism means competition doesn't mean people can't help each other and all be successful. If the world were just like a giant volleyball game it would be a better place.

You know, I'm glad to be able to share all of my insightful ideas with all of you here at UMass. I'll really glad to be able to graduate knowing that in someway, somehow, I've helped make this world a better place.

Verbal Abuse

Some people are fucked up

To the Editor:

If I read one more letter to the editor about the stupid problems people have at UMass, I think I'll puke. I can't understand why all these grainbags whine and complain and wear nasty buttons about all the horrible things that we do. Why don't they just stop their snivelling and start thinking about real problems. Nuclear war? Stupid and ridiculous. Why not think about all those chickens that have to stay clustered up in little cages in those white shacks near Grad Research? Or all the ducks on the pond who must freeze to death .

And why do people complain about Reagan and how he's trashing everything he can get his stupid little hands on, when students can't even buy beer on campus? I mean let's reexamine our priorities.

Another abused group

To the Editors,

We are amazed and ashamed that in such a supposedly liberated technical school, magazines like Computer Digest are permitted to be displayed and sold at the University Store.

While the effects of magazines like these have yet to be proven, it should b obvious that they present computers and computer hardware in a derogatory manner. In advertisement after advertisement, layout after layout, the computers are lit, photographed and airbrushed to make them appear more attractive. Ad slogans say things like "You can own one" and "always ready to be programmed." They are constantly treated as "objects" to be "used" and then put away.

While we of course are not in favor of any form of censorship, we are demanding that the magazine be removed from the Northern Hemisphere and sale to students expressly forbidden.

Editor's Note: This letter was signed by 82 student organizations, including Violence Against Computers Unlawful Unless Mandated (VACUUM), the Banal Liberties of Juniors Opposed to Belittling Science (BLOJOBS), and Compufyre Books.

Who is really in the dark ?

To the editor,

I have to voice my strong objection to the UMass Student Senate's concern with issues that do not pertain to students and this campus. It's bad enough that the Senate votes to criticize the great United States government for sending troops to Granada when the Spanish government and Ricardo Montalban ask for those troops, but they added insult to injury this weekend at a debate in the Student Union Ballroom on Saturday.

The entire two hour debate consisted of questions and talk over such issues as acid rain, toxic waist and CUB Scout troops. Not one single issue discussed during the debate had anything to do with student issues. I also have to object to the fact that the only students who were allowed to speak at the debate were older commuter students. How many semesters have they spent at UMass anyway? I bet some of them have been here longer than Jim Murphy.

I don't know if you will print this letter if I say this, but I bet it was the Collegian who organized this phony radical debate in the first place. Why wasn't Bill Collins allowed to participate? The simple answer is that the Collegian is conducting a smear campaign to injur his name. I bet that KGB agent Josh Meyer had something to do with it.

I urge all thinking UMass students not to vote for any of the candidates who spoke at the debate. Write in Bill Collins. He's the only person who will make sure that we deal with campus and residential issues.

U.S. Senate hopefuls declare opinions in SUB

By LISA MARIE CANTWELL
Collegian Staff

A field of five of the seven Democratic candidates seeking the U.S. Senate seat being vacated by Sen. Paul Tsongas Saturday participated in a panel discussion at the University of Massachusetts, using it as an opportunity of unanimously criticize the Reagan administration's economic and military policies in Central America.

The Democratic frontrunners -U.S. Rep. Edward J. Markey, Lt. Gov. John Kerry, and U.S. Rep. James Shannon -were joined by party members William Hebert, former executive director of the Massachusetts Teachers Association, and John Pierce Lynch, former Springfield probate, and Republican Dr. Mildred Jefferson, at the two-hour forum.

While displaying party unity early in the campaign, the event lacked only in solid debate, with each of the Democratic candidates and their one attending Republican challenger responding to a short series of prepared questions before an afternoon audience of 350 at the Student Union Ballroom.

The discussion was the highlight of the annual conference of the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group, which met for three days over the weekend at the University.

Shannon spoke strongly against the current role the United States is playing in Central America, particularly in Nicaragua, which he visited last year.

John Kerry

Edward Markey

"I feel ashamed," he said, "that the United States is becoming a leader for anarchy, in a war we have no business in."

Markey also criticized the U.S. military and economic assistance poured into that area of the world. The United States, he said, is supporting "thugs and gangsters in El Salvador," and is "substituting the Marine Corps for the Peace Corps."

Kerry called the government of El Salvador oppressive, and "in contradiction to everything we stand for in the United States. There is no free press, no agrarian reforms; education and poverty are the central problems there, not communism."

The three leading candidates said the presence of U.S. troops in Central America could lead to direct involvement, reflective of Vietnam. All three favored immediate withdrawal of troops and cuts in military funding.

Hebert and Lynch shared similar sentiment, but Jefferson, a Boston area physican, came out in support of the current policy in Central America.

"The United States must stand very firm with aid," she said, in order to provide "free elections and government stability."Jefferson also said the U.S. should provide military assistance "when neighboring countries ask."

Markey, Kerry and Shannon criticized the current defense spending and the nuclear arms build-up, and all three said they would work toward a freeze through legislation once elected to office. The three also shared as a political priority the ratification of the Equal Right Amendment.

Hebert, Lynch and Jefferson focused less on these issues. Hebert and Jefferson said if elected to office, education would be a priority. Jefferson also said she would work toward revising a charter for the CIA for more effective defense planning. Lynch said he favored a four-day work week, which he claimed would provide more jobs for young people, and said he plans to introduce a bill to achieve this. Lynch also said he is opposed to "secret government meetings" between world leaders and would develop a resolution which would prevent them.

All of the candidates agreed that hazardous waste and acid rain were environmental problems in Massachusetts which need to be confronted. Jay Holland, moderator of the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group sponsored event, said there are 68 confirmed and another 300 unconfirmed hazardous waste sites in the state.

Markey, Kerry and Shannon said they supported strengthening a federal law which mandates clean-up of hazardous waste. They also criticized the Reagan administration and the Environmental Protection Agency for their lack of response to the problems, and said stronger laws and corporate fines must be established.

Mt. Holyoke women camp out in protest

By JULIA MAYCOCK
Collegian Staff

Last Friday a group of approximately 20 Mount Holyoke students pitched their tents and hung banners at the observatory field on campus, creating a women's peace encampment to protest the arms race.

The encampment is the culmination of three months of planning by a group of women in Professor Jean Grossholt's Women Organizing Against Nuclear War class, who wanted to participate in the international women's peace movement.

"One of our main goals is to educate the community and ourselves. We are also supporting people who have been camping in Seneca (N.Y.) and Greenham Common (England)," said Kathy Brandt, one of the participants.

The women who come together at the peace encampment provided an opportunity for individuals concerned about the possibility of a nuclear holocaust to express their views and to "empower one another," Brandt said.

"This one action in and of itself won't make any change in what Reagan is going to do but the impact is spreading and growing. We want to make the statement that women can organize," participant Julie Baker said.

The organizers of the encampment at Mt. Holyoke made decisions by group consensus and said they refused to fall into a hierarchal structure.

The most difficult question the Mt. Holyoke students said they faced was whether to include men in the encampment or to declare the grounds "women's space only."

"It's important for this to be a women's movement because we're reacting against policies which are made and implemented by men. We're reacting to all violence against women and it is the same mentality of dominance that has made this (the arms race) possible," Baker said.

"We have to make women aware before we can reach out to the larger community, said Jodie Infantine, a Mt. Holyoke student.

Women at the encampment said there is still a "fear of feminism" so that when women unite as a group without men they are open to harassment.

"If you are doing something that is feminist oriented people automatically assume you're a lesbian," Infantine said.

There were some incidents over the weekend of men attempted to pull down banners and some men drove by yelling obscenities, but the women said the general community has been supportive.

The women said they were camping not only to protest but to empower themselves. "This is an example of our resources, strength, and our fear," Brandt said.

"There may be 20 of us here in body but there are hundreds in spirit," she said.

During the weekend event the group sponsored candlelight vigils, children's activities, a letterwriting workshop, and workshops on nonviolent action for social change, women's role in Nicaragua, and empowerment in the nuclear age.

Soviet sister city similar to Amherst

By CARL DEMROW
Collgeian correspondent

The Soviet City Tartu has replaced Tuymazy as Amherst's Sister City, after local residents' research found it to be a city more similar to Amherst.

Originally, Amherst was paired with Tuymazy, an industrial city with an oil pipeline, by Ground Zero, a disarmament group based in Oregon. A recently formed local group of residents asked to be rematched with Tartu, a university city with an agricultural school. Ground Zero approved the request last month.

Larry Morse, a University of Massachusetts visiting professor of economics, and the group's Tartu researcher, said the local project involves "a body of people concerned about world peace" who are looking for similar people in the Soviet Union.

Amherst resident Richard Hooke says the project s goal is to establish a "person-to-person" connection in the search for world peace, which is "too important to leave up to governments."

The group's philosophy is to look upon the Soviet Union as a system rather than an enemy. An Amherst portrait with cultural and historical profiles has been sent to Tartu in hopes that they will respond to the pairing. Hooke said the group is hopeful that Tartu will respond if the Soviet government will let them.

Morse said the project is also a political statement to show the Amherst area is concerned with the possibilities of nuclear war. The project is currently composed of Amherst Residents and Students are encouraged to participate. Both Hooke and Morse feel more student involvement and input would make the project more representative of the community.

FIGHTING TUITION HIKES — Public policy members assist students in writing their state representatives last week outside the Hatch.

Letter drive organized to protest tuition policy

By JOHN KENNEY
Collegian Staff

In an effort to protest the recent tuition policy set by the Board of Regents of Higher Education, the Public Policy Committee of the University of Massachusetts has formed a letter drive directed at the state legislature.

The drive will continue next week, Monday through Thursday, each afternoon. The desk will be set up outside the Hatch.

The Committee is asking students to sign a form letter which contends that the new policy is unfair. The letter has space for individual comments.

The policy in question was passed by the regents at their March 13 meeting in Boston. It calls for students to bear up to 33 percent of the overall cost of their education. To achieve this regents are proposing a 15 percent tuition increase for UMass next year.

Stacey Roth, a member of the Public Policy Committee, said that "students have a definitive say in the policy and our voice must be heard. We're not arguing the need for a policy, we're arguing this specific policy. Basically this (policy) is a threat to lower income students who might not have the chance to continue school if this goes through."

Roth said that "response so far has been phenomenal in the last two days."

Roth said, "we just want to encourage people to come down. This really effects us all. The more of a voice we have, the stronger our voice."

Gay awareness is the goal

Panel addresses factors faced by homosexuals

By SANDRA KONOPKA
Collegian Correspondent

Looking at homosexuality through religion, law, and psychiatry was the topic of a panel discussion titled, "Sin, Sickness, or Crime?," held at the University of Massachusetts yesterday as part of Gay and Lesbian Awareness Week.

The panel consisted of three speakers, Jan Bodin, a self employed Peace Educator, Dr. Richard Pillard, professor of psychiatry at the Boston University School of Medicine, and Donna Mages, a Springfield lawyer.

Bodin spoke about her experience with the Lutheran Church which she considered "horrifying and hurtful" because of its refusal to ordain her since she is a lesbian.

"The Christian Church is not open to us, and many of us are trying to remain faithful, but the church won't allow us the support or recognition," she said.

Bodin said the Methodist, Moslem, and Buddhist religions do not recognize the homosexual community.

Pillard, a gay psychiatrist who counsels homosexuals, said homosexuality was once considered a psychiatric disorder, but not anymore.

"I am very proud that my profession has discarded homosexuality as a disorder, but I am still wary because a lot of hostility is present among my colleagues," he said.

Pillard said "a diagnosis on anything is a valued judgement, and there has to be distress and disability present, and homosexuality doesn't fit this."

Attorney Mages discussed the legal means and questions that homosexuals are concerned with.

Mages said homosexuality is a crime according to a Massachusetts General Law which states, "a person who commits the abominable crime against nature in mankind or with beast is punishable of not more than 20 years in prison."

Mages said there have been challenges to the law because it is too vague, but that the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court said it was perfectly clear.

"The law has not been strictly enforced, but that's not saying it never will be," she said.

Mages also addressed the issue of homosexual discrimination regarding property, inheritance, and adoption rights for homosexual couples.

Fear of AIDS can encourage political abuse

By LISA STRATOULY
Collegian Correspondent

The fear of Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) can be a powerful political weapon and consequently a major cause of oppression according to the editor of the Gay Community News.

Cindy Patton, who is also an active member of the AIDS Action Committee in Boston, spoke to an audience of 20 people last Saturday as part of Gay Awareness Week.

Patton discussed the views certain political groups, including the New Right, hold in regard to AIDS.

"The New Right is obsessed with AIDS and has what can be called AIDS phobis, which is related to germ phobia, an irrational fear that germs are everywhere."

According to Patton, the rightists have political power through massive computerised mailing lists readily accessible at any time. The Right has petitioned The Surgeon General with ideas such as the forced quarantine of all Homosexuals with AIDS, and a $1,000 fine for engaging in "unsafe" homosexual activity.

Literature distributed at the lecture said that AIDS is not transmitted by routine casual but only through intimate (usually sexual) contact and perhaps the mixing of blood.

Sexual activity, during which bodily secretions, carrying germs, are exchanged (semen, blood, urine, stool) should be avoided.

Bob Suteliffe, another guest speaker at the lecture, said "medical advice inhibits gay sexuality and style of sexual expression. Many people attending the lecture said they agreed that the fear of AIDS hinders open sexuality between gay men.

Patton, who also spoke about sexism and racism in the gay community, said women as well as blacks with AIDS are only just beginning to be properly acknowledged.

"Of the several hundred women who have contracted AIDS, many of them are prostitutes, and this is a difficult issue for the feminist movement to address, Patton said.

"Dealing with oppression, harassment, physical attacks, and death is nothing new to the Gay community," she said.

Patton said the Gay community has pushed aside the initial panic of AIDS and is beginning a productive and positive response to the disease.

Today is our April Fools!

The Daily Collegian publishes an April Fools humor issue every year around this time. Everything printed is intended to be perceived soley in a light vein, with malice toward none. The Board of Editors of course takes responsibility for the enclosed nonsense, and if any of it offends you, well, let us take this time and this space to apologize now. We're sorry. We really are. People often tell us how sorry we are.

In any case, read, enjoy, reread, enjoy some more. With the current asbestos rate in the Concourse lobby we really can't afford to take things too seriously, now can we?

Women's Forum

Women's Forum is a weekly listing of events relating to Women's issues. Notices should be sent to the Women's Issues editor, care of the Collegian, the Friday before the event.

A group for Women Going Through a Separation or Divorce will be held on Wednesday evenings at 7:30 p.m. for six weeks beginning April 4. Meetings will be held in Wilder Hall.

A support group for Incest Survivors will meet for eight weeks starting April 3 from 6-8 p.m. in the Campus Center.

The Working Women's Program at the Everywoman's Center will sponsor an eight-week long group titled "Moving Forward: Assertiveness and Leadership Skills for Working Women." The group will meet at the Jones Library, 43 Amity Street Amherst, beginning Thursday, April 5, from 5-9 p.m.

For more information concerning any of these events contact the Everwoman's Center at 545-0883.

Monday — The Women's Issues Team will meet at 4:30 in Room CC 162.

An open discussion, titled "Women's Relationships with Women" will be held at 7:30 p.m. in Room 108 in Franklin Patterson Hall at Hampshire College. Refreshments will be served.

Tuesday — Mary Berry, U.S. Commissioner on Civil Rights, will address black political power in the 1980s at 8 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Wednesday — Committee for Equal Rights and Reproductive Freedoms will meet at 4 p.m. in Room CC 805.

Thursday— A panel discussion connecting "Oppression and the Isms" will be held at 7:30 p.m. in the Red Room, in Converse Hall at Amherst College.

Sunday — The popular film "Not A Love Story," which portrays the affects pornography has on our culture, will be shown at 7 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom

$200 in raffle prizes stolen

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

A combination television/radio valued at $180 and $36 in raffle proceeds were stolen from the United Christian Foundation offices at the University of Massachusetts sometime between 4:10 p.m. last Thursday and 9:10 a.m. Friday.

The tv/radio unit was in a locked cabinet and was to be used as first place in a raffle the UCF was conducting for fundraising purposes. Thursday was the raffle's first day and UCF administrative assistant Nancy Arnold says the theft is a blow to their campaign.

"The value of the unit and the money was over $200, an amount that is very hard for us to replace, but we have to. If the persons or person that stole it would return it no questions would be asked."

The television was in a cabinet in the fourth floor office of the Student Union Building. Campus chaplain Rev. Robin Harden locked the office Thursday afternoon and sometime that night the prize and money disappeared.

Arnold, Harden, and four students that work in the office have keys to the office. The key to the cabinet, which was locked for the first time in many years, was in Arnold's unlocked desk. The UMass Peacemakers and the Hunger Task Force use the office.

Janitors clean the room at night and Arnold theorized that an unlocked door to the office may have presented an opportunity for the thief to make off with the money and prize.

Campus police are investigating the theft.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Just some things you need to know

There's quite a bit of information that the Collegian gives to the student body regarding the University of Massachusetts, but here are some things you'll probably never read in a story —

Peter Abraham

For instance, there are 23 miles of sidewalks on campus. And 25 miles of steampipes.

The operating cost per passenger per trip on the bus system is 16.8 cents.

There are 600 parking meters on campus.

In 1983 the school used 59,433 tons of coal, 1,358,900 gallons of oil and 561 million gallons of water. That's a lot of hot showers.

Everybody knows there's a UMass Medical School in Worcester, but did you know UMass has buildings in East Wareham, Shutesbury and New Salem?

4,100,000 people take a bus ride yearly.

But 14,000 bring cars here.

12,302 square feet of space is unclassified for use at UMass. (I could use a bigger room.)

Hampshire College sends approximately 500 students here to class, but we only send 353 back.

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey went to Hartford Seminary Foundation and Andover Newton Theological School. He wasn't kidding when he said last semester "I'm praying for an end of the Crampton fires."

There were, as of Fall 1982, only four American Indian/Alaskan native students at UMass.

The average tenured professor makes $38,898 a year if he's male and $35,976 if she's female. Even a part-time professor makes $19,088, that's better than the National Guard.

UMass has had one alumnus each from American Samoa, Guam, the Marshall Islands and the Caroline Islands.

Only 60 residents of Idaho have gone to school here, 19 South Dakotans and 229 Canadians.

For 1982 women's Sports team at UMass enjoyed a winning percentage of 64 percent, the men only were the victors 43 percent of the time.

There are 450 acres of grass at UMass. (And that doesn't invlude the selected patches in the dorms.)

And, finally, I bet you didn't know there was a book that details these and many other useless facts. Thanks to the 82-83 Factbook for this story.

TOC service less than friendly

To the Editor,

I am writing to express concern over the lack of respect accorded customers at the Top of the Campus lounge. Some weeks back my girlfriend, due to meet a friend in the T.O.C., could not make that appointment on time as she needlessly had to wait for the bouncer to finish chatting with his lady friend. Although encouraged to look at my friend's I.D. by his lady friend, the bouncer remained obstinent, seeking to keep the prospective customer in limbo until he was damn well ready to do his appointed (and presumably paid for) task. We know this job can't be too stressful since the bouncer was lounging back in his chair, enjoying his chicken dinner while speaking to his lady friend. Is this what the T.O.C. pays its employees to do?

On another occasion, as recent as March 28 at 11:00 p.m., my girlfriend stepped up to the bar to order drinks. Before uttering a word, she was intimidated (driven close to tears as I soon found) by a sharp reprimand from the bartender: "Hey you, wait your turn!", demonstrating his "power" over customers (or is it just women?) After making the woman's subordinance clear, he continued to serve a group of male friends. This guy cannot be enrolled in public relations 101.

My girlfriend and I enjoy the T.O.C. lounge setting, yet as incidences like these mount, we are forced to re-evaluate the sense of frequenting a place where a hoped-for relaxing evening is turned into a stressful one.

Isn't a woman important?

To the Editor,

I would like to comment on Sean Casey's editorial (March 29) "The Hypocrisy of Pro-Choice". Yes, abortion is a vital issue for all human beings, but the fact remains that it affects the woman's body, and in cases of abandonment and rape, the pregnancy is left for her to deal with, alone, not the man's body. I can understand how Mr. Casey can criticize and be against abortion; he is a man, and never in his life will he have to deal with an unwanted pregnancy from being sexually attacked, nor will he ever have to make a most difficult and painful decision: whether to bear and raise a child by yourself, with no money and no support, or to go through the physical and mental pain of an abortion.

No woman wants an abortion, it is something she feels she has to do because she has no other choice. Mr. Casey quoted Albert Schweitzer, "if we lose our reverence for any part of life, we will lose our reverence for all life." I ask you Sean Casey, and all the Sean Caseys out there, what about the reverence for womans life and the right to choose?

The need to challenge beliefs

To the Editor,

It is important for us all to examine and challenge the dogma that is handed down to us. Some information we get is useful, enlightening, and correct. Some is not. I would like to respond to some dogma presented in Mr. Spears' letter printed in last Thursday's Collegian.

First, it didn't seem as though Mr. Spears was clear on what homophobia means. Homophobia is an irrational fear and/or hatred of gay men and lesbians. It has the same negative connotations that racism, sexism, and anti-Semitism have.

I don't believe that as a male it is my responsibility to marry or to father children. The statement that we have "gender roles and responsibilities" begs many more questions. Is this advocating traditional housewife/worker-husband roles? Must everyone who has the capacity to reproduce, do so? What of our minds? What of our emotions and feelings? Finally, whose lives are we living if we are not true to ourselves?

The statement that "homosexuals and lesbians have not concept of 'reproduction of the species'" is confusing, to say the least. Again, is this implying that because our bodies have the capacity to reproduce, we must? Or is this saying that gays and lesbians do not have children? Is it alright for straight couples to remain childless?

It is difficult to rebut religious arguments against homosexuality because the arguments are usually based on faith, and faith is the acceptance of something as true without proof. My point is you must examine beliefs and issues on their own merits using logic, common sense, and a sensitivity to humanity. Is it helpful when a society condemns some of its members for loving each other? Does condemnation help these people to be productive, contributing members? Does it aid their happiness, or the happiness of their families and friends? Should things change?

Confessions of an anti-smoker

How do you respond to the question, "Do you mind if I smoke?" A few years ago most nonsmokers would have grudgingly consented.

Today more and more people are answering this question with the gentle protest, "Yes, I mind." And as the ranks of those concerned with nonsmoker's rights have swollen, a more extreme group has emerged. This new group shares a common aggressive fanatical hatred of the cigarette. This bunch is more likely to meet a smoker's lit cigarette, not with gentle protests, but with hose water.

These extremists interest me because I am one of them. A woman sitting next to me in a study lounge simply placed her pack of cigarettes on the table and I seethed. There was no spark of match, no puff of smoke. My feeling of anger was admittedly irrational.

Andrew Long

But I am not the only irrational one. A friend of mine would have the fingers of all smokers removed. She reasons that then they wouldn't be able to balance their precious Marlboros, Salems, and Winstons. She is only half-kidding.

My friend and I are not alone. This extremism is both widespread and organized. G.A.S.P. (acronym for Group Against Smoker's Pollution), founded to lobby for nonsmoker's rights, boast a large membership.

Now, it is easy to see that anti-smoking fanaticism has reached epidemic proportions. However, explaining why it exists is harder.

There are, of course, many reasons for finding cigarette smoking offensive. The smoke for many, especially those with allergies, can be irritating to eyes, sinuses and throat. Others are troubled by the evidence that breathing second-hand smoke may affect nonsmoker's lungs. Still others dislike cigarettes because they claim clean air is an inalienable right.

For many these are the reasons for asking a smoker to extinguish his cigarette. But these medical and constitutional arguments can't explain the emotional fervor of the fanatical anti-smoker's reaction to cigarettes. While we, as I am one of them, may cite one of these reasons to explain our anger, there must be a deeper explanation.

One possibility is that the rage that an anti-smoker feels results from a concern for others. A smoker taking minutes off his life with each puff is harassed by the nonsmoker for his own good. This may, to an extent, explain my fanaticism. My mother smokes, and it frustrates me to think that she could be endangering her life. It's not the smoke in the air, but the condition of her lungs that makes me mad when she lights up a cigarette.

But while this may be valid for a few anti-smokers, it is probably not the answer for most. Referring back to my friend it is hard for me to believe that someone capable of even suggesting the forced removal of fingers could be such an altruist.

So there must be another reason, and I think it starts with the popular perception of smokers. A few years ago it was considered not only completely acceptable, but even glamorous, to smoke. But with the link between lung cancer and cigarettes solidified by the Surgeon General, smoking has lost its appeal. Smoking isn't smart because cigarettes kill.

So now, a clean, pure nonsmoker, watching a tobacco addict reach for that essential, though life-threatening, cigarette, finds it easy to feel self-righteous superiority to heart and turns, "Yes, I do mind if you smoke." into "Light that death stick and you lose you lips, pea brain." Ours is an irrational response but, with our superior attitude, it's a response we feel is completely justified. Thinking this way we zealots do not aim toward compromise with the inferior smoker but rather attempt to aggressively impose our wishes on him, and meeting with resistence we fanatics become self-righteously unreasonable. We explode.

So smokers, this should help to explain the obsessive resistence you've probably encountered. And, while it may be no concilation, a do have sympathy for your plight. I understand that most smokers feel a bit guilty about their habit and would just as soon quit, and now they are being forced to defend their smoking against these obsessed non-smokers. Their defense of smoking has not gone well, as smokers have been herded into nonsmoking sections of restaurants, airplanes, and even office buildings. These are tough times to be a smoker.

However, my sympathy is tenuous at best. Smokers, beware, the smell of cigarette smoke brings out the fanatic in me. It is the smell of burning tobacco that makes me reconsider the finger removal solution. But don't worry, I'm only half kidding.

Andrew Long is a UMass student.

Owls turn Hat Trick on Minutemen

By SCOTT HOOD
Collegian Staff

Temple University has long been lingering in the shadown of its Big Five brothers Villanova, St. Joseph's, and Penn. But no more. Not with a respectable football team, a Top 20 basketball team, and as the University of Massachusetts found out over the weekend, a top-flight baseball team. They are so good in fact that, like basketball, they are considered the favorite to win the Atlantic 10 title.

And you won't get UMass to argue with that selection. The Owls pulled the hat trick against the hometown heroes, sweeping a doubleheader on Saturday, 4-2, and 8-2, before exploding in the finale yesterday, 14-7, to drop UMass' record to 4-12 overall.

You only need to look at the first inning of the first game to understand how this series went. In that opening frame, Temple scored all four of their runs, utilizing three UMass errors, three hits, and a sacrifice fly against UM starter and ace Tony Presnal. The big blow was RBI double by Bob Niggebidigge (no, that's not a typo), while Steve Yates collegect the SF. By the end of the weekend the big inning would become commonplace for the Owls as they scored 26 runs in the 23 innings of baseball. However, 24 of those runs came in only six separate innings. Four times they scored at least four runs.

The Minutemen cut the first game defecit in half with a two-out, two run rally in the fifth. Andy Connors doubled home Jack Bloise, who had reached on an error by the shortstop, then strolled home himself on a triple by Angelo Salustri. However, Salustri died at third as Jeff Cimini grounded out to short.

In the second game, Temple raced out to a 5-0 lead after five innings, then coasted the rest of the way to hand Jim Knopf his first loss of the season. Following a single tally in the third, Temple plated three runs in the fourth as Stu Drossner and John Marzano contributed RBI hits.

UMass' two runs came in the sixth as Cimini followed a free pass to Salustri with a line drive home run to left. Temple scored three runs in the bottom of the inning to ice it. Jim Kobatiche earned the victory to raise his record to 3-0.

Yesterday, an avalanche of ten Temple runs in the first two innings doomed UM. Temple split the damage evenly, tallying five runs in each inning. In the first, a two-run double by George Clark, a RBI-double by Jeff Manto, and an RBI single by Pat Tronoski did the trick.

The Minutemen bats came alive in the second, scoring six runs, to take the only lead they would enjoy in the entire series. Two walks and two infield singles, succeeded by a pair of two-run doubles by Salustri and Cimini.

Temple rebounded quickly, scoring five times on only one hit. Two errors and three walks did aid the cause, though. A solo HR by UM's Tony Szklany cut the defecit to 10-7 in the fifth, but the Owls again responded, this time with four runs in the bottom of the inning, three coming on a homer by Peter Yates.

Go with the Hoyas thanks to a dumb GUY

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Houston coach Guy Lewis and the Georgetown defense, one's terrible and the other is awesome. You've got two guesses to pick which one's which and the first one doesn't count.

It's a definite blessing not to be a Cougar fan. Lewis is dumber than this scribe originally thought. He did his best to give the game to Virgina, a la N.C. State a year ago, but failed, winning 49-47.

It perplexes most college hoop observers why Houston, despite great quickness, a inspiring big man in Akeen Olajowon stays in a zone defense. Especially against a team like Virginia with a weakness at center.

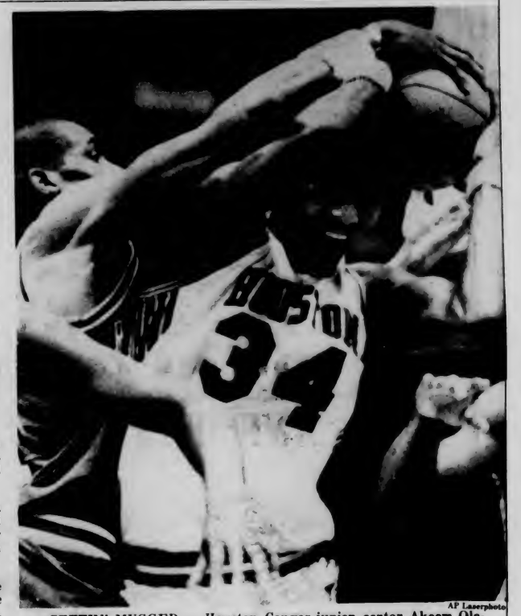
Houston is by far the best team at falling into their opponent's tempo..Virginia couldn't have asked for a better game to take, it's a real shame someone had to win this one.

The Hoyas were flat out dominant over Kentucky in notching a 53-40 victory, without a doubt the best show of defense the NCAA has seen in two years.

Georgetown, if you really think about it, won the game in the first half. With Pat Ewing on the pines with three fouls the Hoyas stayed within seven points of the Cats. If you follow the Big East champs you know they're a second half squad and with Ewing back in to start the final period it was but a matter of time.

Ewing, MVP Michael Graham, who's now holder of the "Sickest Hoya" title, and the gaggle of hot shooting guards who populate the Georgetown roster made the Kingdome a living hell for Joe B. Hall and crew.

Kentucky was held to two points in the first 17 minutes of the second half, shooting four percent from the floor. Mel Turpin, Jimmy Master, Dicky Beal and Kenny Walker should be charged with fixing the Kingdome rim, they clanged the ball against it that often. Anyway...



Georgetown 62, Houston 50. The Hoyas roll to this tourney championship with another strong second half. They'll probably trial at halftime but Ewing will wear Akeem down. Gene Smith will do his usual defensive job on Houston's guards and Hoya guard Reggie Williams is bound to shoot better than he did against Kentuckv.

Unless the refs put Ewing on the bench with another one of those, "now boys that isn't nice" double fouls, Georgetown will finish off a great season.

John Thompson, guaranteed, will coach a better game than Guy Lewis. After all Lewis once said, "It doesn't matter how you lose, as long as you do." OK Guy, I'm glad you don't care anyway.

Houston, has made it to the final game two years running and the Final Four three years straight. How is anybody's guess. Lewis, any real hoop fan has to hate this guy, survives on raw talent alone, but if the Twin Towers didn't topple Georgetown, one Akeem sure won't.

Track team faces New Hampshire this weekend

By M.E. Murrya
Collegian Staff

The recent wet weather hasn't dampened the spirits of the University of Massachusetts men's and women's track teams. The two squads continue to train in anticipation of this weekend's opening of the outdoor season.

The women will travel to Rhode Island to Compete at the URI Invitational while the men will host Dartmouth at a dual meet. Saturday's action will get started at 1:00 p.m. at Derby Track (behind the baseball field.)

The Minutemen finished tenth in New England last year and will have their hands full taking on the Green from New Hampshire. Dartmouth was third in New England last year outdoors and features a couple of all-American distance-runners in Frank Powers and Jim Sapienza.

Many of the UMass men's squad are coming off a strong finish at the close of the indoor season. The team's middle-distance strength powered them to a surprising fourth-place in New England.

Finishing that well outdoors will be difficult during a season that places much more scoring emphasis on field events, a weakness for the Minutemen.

"It will be difficult to break the top five in New England. We would like to finish as high as possible in the second five."
— UMass track coach Ken O'Brien

"It might be possible to match our (indoor) accomplishment at the conference level," says Coach Ken O'Brien. "But it will be difficult to break the top five in New England. We would like to finish as high as possible in the second five."

Look for John Keelan, Jan Novak, Paul Stanislawzyk, and Ted White to be running anything from the 8 to 10,000 meters. (We'll experiment in the early season to find the best spot for everyone." - O'Brien)

Tom Carleo will enter both the 800 and the mile while Brian Osborne will be the number one quarter-miler. Rawle Crishlow did well indoors in the short sprint hurdle events. Todd Johnson and Jerry Espinosa are both improving as hurdlers.

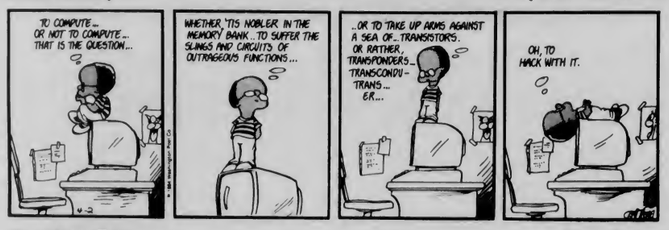
Moving to the field, Ferde Adaboe has the potential to be a good scorer at the New Englands. He finished second at the Easterns in the triple-jump last year as a freshman.

Senior Jamie Amico's personal-best pole vault of 13-9 is just under the school record - he should get a good shot at it this Spring along with scoring at the New Englands.

The leading thrower of the squad is Kyler Foster who last year took fourth in the Javelin at the Easterns. Shot Put specialist Neil Martin is expected to score some big points after a satisfying indoor season.

The UMass women's team is solid in the throwing events but is a bit inexperienced just about everywhere else. Liz Patterson will score well in the discus and shot put; she'll also hit the track as part of the 4 x 110 relay team.

Debbie Cousins will also compete in shot and discus - Cindy Kraupa is the number one javelin thrower.



In the distance running events, UMass is young but has shown their desire and competitiveness throughout the crosscountry and indoor seasons.

Junior Maureen Cassidy, plagued by nagging injuries all year, will lead the squad, Deidre Doyle and Chris Pratt have been consistent all year at the longer distances.

Eileen Kelly seems strong at the mile; freshmen Sue Goldstein and Barbara Cullinan will run the 200, 400, and some relays.

Deborah Smith is coming off a hamstring pull but is a good bet to score in the 400. Kayla Morrison has the qualities to be a strong scorer the 100 and 200.

It's been only seven months since the release of his last film, but director Lance Slaughter (Split Brain, I Think I'll Kill You [:III) is finishing up shooting on his newest film, Kill You; The Gore Trilogy part IV. Mr. Willie returns as Slaughter's irrepressible protagonist, a weapon-toting psyche with malice in his heart. Kill You promises to be a crowd pleaser, with more carnage before the opening credits than most gore films have in twenty minutes. Slaughter may possible outdo himself on this one, with clever sequences involving a blind priest and a cheese grater, and two young girls jogging into some barbed wire. Always eager to offend, he's even hired a production assistant from the UMass Music Theatre Guild to narrate. Definitely not for the squeemish.

Burt Reynolds and Clint Eastwood have been signed to star together in a new film, tentatively titled Dirty Smokey. The picture will feature unrelated footage of Reynolds driving fast and Eastwood shooting minorities and weak rich people. "It's already been proven," a Paramount spokesperson reported last week, "that plotting, narrative structure and dialogue have nothing to do with a movie's success." The picture's soundtrack will include songs by Irene Cara, Cheap Trick and Kenny Loggins.

Warner Brothers will produce Where's The Beef, a motion picture based on the popular recent television commercial. Not much is known about the film at presstime, but it will star an elderly senile woman and be set in a restaurant where the hamburgers have very large buns. The film's title song, "Where's the Beef," will be sung by Irene Cara.

For people who liked last year's Tarzan The Ape Man but didn't care much for Bo Derek scampering around naked, a bunch of stuffy old English guys have taken the other aspects of the story and produced Greystroke: Even More Stuff about Tarzan.

Hugh Hudson, the stuffy old director of Chariots of Fire, has filmed Greystroke in a similar vein. "We're stuffy old English people," the director said Friday, "and we like stuffy old English movies. We also like slow motion tracking shots and we're going to use them over and over until a court order tells us not to."

Local Best Bets: Plenty of good movies around. The Hampshire 4 theatres has Footloose, Hey Sailor, The Fez and You're One Dead Sonofabitch. The Mountain Farms is currently showing Butterville is Burning, The Fez, Bill the Coyote and is expecting Kill You; The Gore Trilogy Part IV on Friday. The Pleasant St. theatre is showing a retrospective of films by Hampshire College film students. The bill includes Intrinsic Symbiotics of the Riddle, Spatial Relative Consciences and Bantam Luna and Fallen Trees. This last film is of particular historic significance, as it marks the first time a Hampshire film student figured out what that focus ring in front of the camera is for.

Winnebagos Trivia: Who was the second unit gaffer on Alphonse Ludlow's 1937 film, The Balladeer of Diable? (Hint: It wasn't Victor Sternhagen). Answer to last week's question: The article the was spoken 13,475 times in Henderson Conroy's first six films.

A young lad finds office work no bonus when Mr. Willie shears his head off, in Lance Slaughter's new film, Kill You; the Gore Trilogy Part IV.

Girl Talk

Back to the good old days

A dangerous myth has been perpetuated in America for the last twenty years by the so-called "feminist movement."

Militant feminists, especially those anti-family, man-haters, have urged young girls all over America to leave their homes in order to advance pursue their own selfish careers. They have created a whole agenda of non-issues, such as sexual harassment, affirmative action, equal pay for equal work, and violence against women, in order to advance the ambitions of their own communist self-appointed leaders.

In the process, they have forsaken their god ordained role of loyal wife and loving mother, which in turn has served to undermine the family, the very backbone of American society.

This communist inspired movement has succeeded in distorting the 'real issues' for girls in the 1980s, which are: keeping up to date with the new and improved household products and shampoos and conditioners; decorating and color coordinating the interior decor of the home, including matching toilet paper and towelettes; having as many children as possible; getting involved in the PTA and other civic organizations; supporting our president and military as they valiantly protect us from Soviet aggression; and finally, but most importantly, standing behind our men and serving their every needs.

Unfortunately, the Collegian has played a role in perpetuating this "feminist" myth. For several years we have had a "woman's" editor whose job it was to write articles and cover events that the 'feminists' said were important to girls.

Now however, we are pleased to announce that all that has changed. Beginning today, the "woman's" news department will devote an entire page to covering real girls events. Things like new trends in baking, fashions and house cleaning methods. We'll do features on Phyliss Schlafly and Anita Bryant and other positive role models for today's college girls. We'll run the latest recipes. We'll announce engagements and births of alumni. We'll even run an advice column for girls who are having problems pleasing their men.

We hope all the men and girls at UMass enjoy our new ladies page. In our own humble way we think its a positive step in the right direction.

Today's recipe: glazed spam

Today's Recipe is: Glazed Spam

Hi girls. Today we're going to make the Galloping Gourmet's specialty — Glazed Spam.

You'll need a can of frozen orange juice concentrate, some orange brandy, and ten cans of fresh Spam. You'll also need a dash of curry, two tablespoons of vanilla, and two teaspoons from one of those green spice bottles.

Arrange your Spam neatly in a 2x3 inch Spam baking pan. No need to grease the pan. Pour the concentrate and one pint of orange brandy into the Spam pan and delicately sprinkle all the spices on top of the mixture.

Place the Spam in a pre-heated, 350 degree Spam oven until your Glazed Spam achieves that delightful mouth-watering golden brown color.

Don't forget to clean the house, take a fresh bubble bath, and curl your hair in time to meet him at the door with his daily paper, slippers, and a double martini with three black olives.

UMass forward to go NBA hardship

By B.A. SPORTSWRITER

AMHERST University of Massachusetts forward John Hampull will declare hardship and enter the NBA draft in May the Collegian learned yesterday from sources close to the team.

Hampull follows in the footsteps of former Minuteman great Julius Erving who left UMass in 1971 to join the fledgling ABA.

Philadelphia 76ers general manager Pat Williams said yesterday that the team will "try their best" to get Hampull in the draft.

"We're looking for a slow white guard," said Williams. "And Hampull fits the bill."

Celtic GM Red Aurback, never one to be outdone, said the team was willing to give up "anybody but Larry Bird" to obtain the rights the UMass scoring leader of two seasons. "Our last true slow white guard was Chris Ford, so we're really looking at John. He reminds me of Hank Findle," said Aurbach.

The NBA office said Hampull was eligible to declare hardship because he lives in New Jersey. "That's hardship for anyone," said an official who asked not to be identified.

Every college basketball on the East Coast expressed disappointment at the move since Hampull has been rumored to be transferring to any school with a basketball team.

"I'd love to have Hampull after all Pat Ewing graduates in a year," said Georgetown coach John Thompson.

"He's (Hampull) is another Jay Murphy, he even blows off class," said Boston College mentor Gary Williams.

UMass coach Ron Gerlufsen said he was "disappointed" that Hampull was going into the draft but said he was relieved that Horace Neysmith and Donald Russell will stay at UMass for their senior seasons.

"I know the Lakers want Donald and I'm sure Utah covets Horace. I just hope the rumors about Jack Sheehan going aren't true," said Gerlufsen.

Hampull was unavailable for comment on his decision but his agent Bob Wolf said that the 6-6 shooter will hold a press conference soon to discuss the issue.

"John's so happy to be getting out of Southwest he's out celebrating," said Wolf.

USFL Blitz and Gunslingers to merge and move

By CARL GOPHER
Collegian Outlaw

NEW YORK — United States Football League commissioner Chet Simmons announced yesterday that the financially troubled Chicago Blitz and San Antonio Gunslingers franchises will merge and move to a new location next season.

The new team, to be known as the Belch, will be located in Belchertown after USFL officials and town fathers pounded out an agreement to bring the team to Massachusetts.

Belchertown will construct a 35,000 seat domed stadium within the city limits, to be known as the Belchdome.

The team will play their home games in UMass' Alumni Stadium until the Belchdome is completed in 1987. UMass officials tried to land the Belch but negotiations fell through, UMass athletic director Frank MiEnery said, because UMass wasn't willing to dome Alumni Stadium.

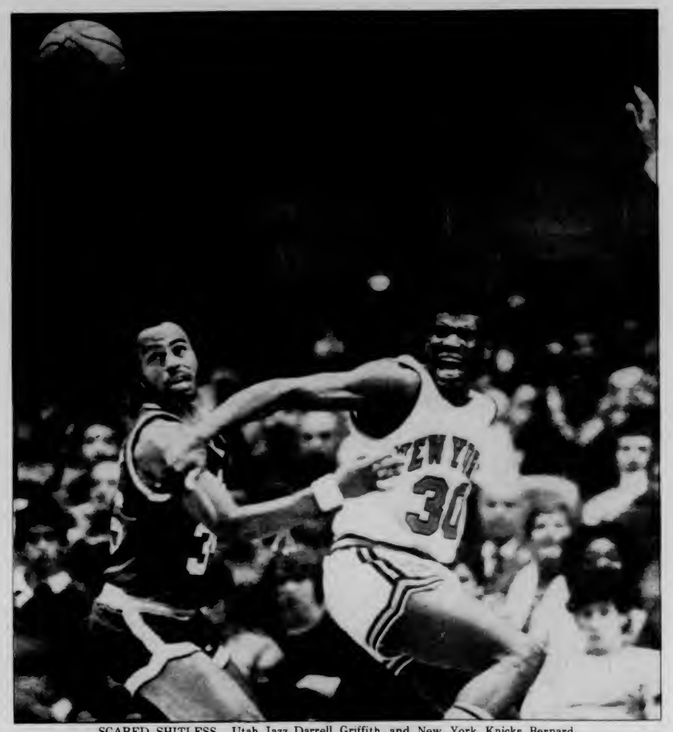
Simmons announced the move of the franchise after a vote of league owners revealed that they felt Western Mass. was a viable franchise area. USFL officials felt that a team here would attract fans from the metropolitan Worcester, Springfield and Hartford areas along with former fans of the Boston Breakers.

"We will be the biggest thing that ever hit that area," Marv Levy, the Belch's new coach said. "What do people in Belchertown do anyway except tend their farms and watch the grass grow."

However, some Blitz and Gunslingers players were not happy with the move.

"I'm not pleased at all," former NFL Buccaneer quarterback Doug Williams of the Gunslingers said. "I don't want to play in a cow field."

Vince Evans, Blitz quarterback said, "What kind of skyline and nightlife can this place have? Greg Landry (Arizona Wrangler QB and former UMass player) said the best place to go is some place called the Pub where you can pound a few brews on a Wednesday night."



UMass athletic director McInery welcomed the temporary stay of the Belch at Alumni Stadium. "We'll finally be able to pave P lot and lot 21 and 22 with the extra money."

UMass will receive $15,000 a game as rent for the Belch using Alumni Stadium after the Belch show a profit.

"We are confident in the Belch," said one UMass official who declined to be named. The Belch will play nine home games in Amherst.

One local group already opposes the Belch, though. The University Peacemakers are opposed to the introduction of spring football because it is too violent. They also think that the Belch nickname is derogatory and plan to propose that the Belchertown franchise change their nickname to the Flying Pansies.

"We want to get rid of fall football and spring football won't help us," one Peacemakers official said. "We're out to clean up all this violence."

SCARED SHITLESS - Utah Jazz Darrell Griffith and New York Knicks Bernard King became paralyzed with fear when the basketball stopped in mid-air and asked them what time it was during yesterday's game.

Minuteman nickname shot down

By FRED FARKLE
Collegian Staff

In a sudden and surprising move yesterday, the University ofMassachusetts administration announced that they will indeed heed to pressure from a campus group known as the Peacemakers, and change the University's Minutemen nickname. The new title - the Silly Old Gumper Bunnies.

The change signals a victory for the Peacemakers, who had lobbied against the utterly obvious evil implications of the Minutemen nameplate. The group protested long and hard claiming the Minutemen symbol was sexist, war promoting, and stood for various other bad things.

The new nickname, the Bunnypeople, came about after many hours of debate and deliberation. An administrative spokesperson, emerging from the meeting's end, drenched in sweat after the emotionally draining session, was elated with the selection. "I think we really got it this time. This is the one, and we're just tickled to death here," he said.

He added that he felt "pretty sure" that the Peacemakers would be pleased, and could only foresee one snag in its acceptance with the group. "I hoep they don't consider it demeaning to animals. We just felt the furry little guys, uh... creatures, would be a great solution."

One member was reached from the Peacemakers, and the elation was evident. "Hey, this is really great, you know. I mean, I can't speak for my whole group but just getting rid of that fascistic Minuteman is terrific. The Bunnypeople sounds pretty good to me. I even love carrots. It sounds kinda cute, and cuddly.

The new sympol is quickly being printed up on posters, programs, and sportswear for next seasons football and baseball campaigns, with the slogan, "BUNNY FEVER-CATCH IT!" The picture shows a spiffy looking bunny, dressed in Massachusetts red and white sweats, looking tough (but not too tough), and waving a bright orange carrot (where the rifle once was).

Reaction from many of the once Minutemen sports teams was not expected until tomorrow, but some word did manage to filter out.

"Well, I've never quite heard of something like this," said new football coach Bob Stull. "I guess we'll just have to convince this team that bunnies can play this game too." Added a more adament Basketball coach Ron Gerlufsen, "Basically, I want to protest. I don't care how tough Thumper was, I don't like it at all."

The University, itself, immediately announced that a large shipment of ripe carrots is enroute to the athletic department and will be passed out to al varsity athletes. "If we're going to do this thing," said one administration official, "We're going to do it right."

Meanwhile, NCAA opponents of UMass were heard to let out a collective laugh, as one lacrosse player said quietly, "Coach, does this mean we have to wear little white tails on our uniforms?"

"I certainly hope not," answered lacrosse mentor Dick Garber, shaking his head. "I certainly hope not."

Whalers get a steal

Awesome HARTFORD- In a blockbuster trade, the Hartford Whalers obtained goalie Pete peeters, defenseman Ray Borque and right wing Rick Middleton from the Boston Bruins for Goalie John Smith (who was retired), defenseman Marty Howe and Shooter Chris Kospopolis.

Kospopolis and Smith were immediately demoted to the Bruins farm club in Richmond. Bruins general manager Harry Siden defended the trade. "We wanted to establish a good rivalry with the Whalers and we are so deep, we can afford it."

Fans in Beantown stormed Bruin offices while Whalers fans made G.M. Emile Francis a saint in the insurance city.

Martin Luther King Week

by Oneida Fox
Nummo Correspondent

Martin Luther King was assassinated on April 4, 1968, and on the week of this anniversary, April 1-8, he will be remembered at the University of Massachusetts. Matin Luther King Week will serve to remind people not to allow his dream to die with him, but live on in the spirit of all. The theme of the week being, "Forward from the Past: Black Political Power in the 80's."

This week will depict the need to continue struggling for human rights. The speakers and programs are centered around updating and projecting the efforts of human right issues.

The Martin Luther King Week Planning Committee, with 15 student and faculty members, was established in 1979. This year's events are sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program, Afrik-Am and other student organizations.

The committee has dedicated themselves to preserving the week in King's memory. The goal is to bring alive his spirit, to remind people of his accomplishments, and to help people carry on in his tradition. "The tradition being, the struggle for acknowledgement of people of color as full citizens of this country," Dave Martin, sophomore and committee member said.

This week will celebrate the life, the works, and the ideas of Martin Luther King. And will provide information on what is being done today to promote the interest of "traditionally and politically disenfranchised people across the country," Martin said.

"This week is not just a celebration, but more so it is a reaffirmation of what King stood for," Sherwood Thompson, committee member and director of the Office of Third World Affairs. Martin Luther King's dream was that eventually no one would be judged solely on his color, or race.

"This week is to promote this dream, and to make it a reality because it is far from being one today," Martin said. This week will make people aware that even though we (society) would like to believe that King's dream is a reality, it is not and the committee is to remind people that inequality exist today. Black people are still being denied ccess to major institutions, he said.

"Martin Luther King Week is the time to re-define the role of Third World people in America and American universsities," Thompson said. "We (society) should in memory of Martin Luther King also celebrate Jesse Jackson because he is with us, he is still alive, and is carrying King's dream of human rights."

Thompson believes that there are little changes at UMass in relation to years past in reference to Third World students. Because of this, the week will try to reactivate student involvement in campus organizations.

Minority students should become more active in the progress of human rights; they are here because people like Martin Luther King struggled for them to be here. Third World students are here but they are not contributing. The activities during the week will be used to highlight this fact, said Thompson.

"Not until we re-define ourselves, the times we are living in and our profess purpose in life can we honestly and seriously deal with the world around us. This is what Martin Luther King Week is about," he said.

Editorial: A Dream's Value

by Oneida Fox
Nummo Correspondent

Martin Luther King was a noble, righteous man, very sensitive to the rights of his fellow person. Dr. King preached and practiced peaceful demonstration, not violence, to change the system. I strongly believe if any one American has done anything for this country, Dr. King has.

Born on January 15, 1920, he struggled throughout his life to free people from the bondage of discrimination. He fought against the Ku Klux Klan, but his fight was not just for his own race. Dr. King fought to uplift oppression as it exist-ed worldwide. Dr. King was not just a Black man per-se, he was a man who wanted to do service for all humanity.

When Jim Crow laws did not permit Black people to sit in the front of busses, Dr. King established a boycott until the rules were amended. When Black people were not allowed to eat or drink in dining establishments, Dr. King staged rallies in which Black people peacefully disobeyed these laws. When Black people were not allowed to attend universities, Dr. King helped to change the situation.

Martin Luther King, and followers staged sit-ins, walk-ins, boycotts, demonstrations, and walked miles for the cause of freedom. He showed the world that a minority well organized could peaceably make changes and be recognized.

While Dr. King lived, he attacked congress' lack of dealing with the issues of poverty and unemployment, while they spent money for a war in Vietnam. Dr. King was outraged at this country's sense of priorities.

Martin Luther King was a man passionately committed to non-violent social action. Through the rallies, boycotts, sit-ins, walk-ins, and his philosophy of change he will always be remembered. Though few of his goals were met in his lifetime, we can see many of the end results today.

True, we still have racial discrimination, and unfair treatment of the poor, and an established racist organization: the K.K.K., but we as a nation have come a long way in efforts to stamp out racism. We owe part of this achievement to Martin Luther King, for his early efforts.

Martin Luther King should be remembered for all of his efforts - a remembrance for peace. Dr. King did not live long enough to see his dream of equality come true, for on April 4, 1968 came the end of a great man - he was assassinated.

Dr. King lost his life, not only for the cause of bettering humankind, but to better this country. I can only hope that his dream can be a reality in my lifetime.

Martin Luther King tried to change this country for the better, and lost his life for trying. Martin Luther King's achievements should be known to all. His efforts should be used as an example of a human being with a vision for a better humanity: A humanitarian.

NUMMO NEWS is reprinting this article from the BLACK COLLEGIAN March/April 1984 to make the community aware of this vitally important issue; and with the hopes that students will write letters to their congressional representatives protesting a bill that would effectively exempt media corporations from complying with Federal Communications Commision standards.

A major piece of legislation is moving through Congress that will, insist James Dowdy, President of Magna Media Corporation, "Just about totally freeze minorities out of the mainstream broadcast industry. The process, known as the "comparative renewal procedure," is threatened with extinction by those interests which want to keep ownership of the broadcast industry in the same hands."

The "comparative renewal procedure" is the process which requires that the license of each broadcaster automatically comes up for renewal every five years. If he or she has not met the required Federal Communications Commission's standards with regard to programming and other considerations and are successfully challenged, then the broadcaster will have to divest himself of the challenged property. H.R. 2370 or 2382, which are currently under consideration in the House of Representatives (having already passed the Senate), would eliminate the renewal process. This, says Cecil C. Butler of East Lake Communications, Inc.,"would provide current owners with the security of no comparative renewals and licenses in perpetuity." Butler insists that "...the reason that this legislation would gravely limit substantial increases in minority ownership is that comparative renewal challenges to existing licenses is the only practical

Editorial : Blacks Be Proud

by Donette Wilson
Nummo Staff
Dedicated to Makeda Garvey:

"Negroes think and act Black, be proud of your black skin and Negroid features, learn your history and admire your Black heroes, and even worship a Black God and a Black Christ."

Marcus Mosiah Garvey was born in St. Ann's Bay, Jamaica on August 17, 1887. He received his education, from a variety of sources, from private tutors to public schools. Garvey's first realization of the difference in humanity occurred when he was very young. As time went on, Garvey became more aware of the racial separation, and felt within himself that something had to be done to make the races equal.

Before attempting to make the race independent, Garvey asked himself and the people, "Where is the Black man's government? Where is his king and kingdom? Where is his president, his country, and his ambassador, his army, his navy, his men of big affairs?" When there was no response, Garvey felt obligated to create these institutions.

Garvey studied in England for sometime and returned to his native country, Jamaica with theories on how to improve race's lot. Through these theories he founded on August 1, 1914, the Universal Negro Improvement Association (UNIA).

The purpose of the UNIA was to unite the Negro people all over the world into one body, to establish a country and government of their own. He thought that such a man would embace the ourpose of all Black humanity because improvement was what was needed at the time. All people of African descent were requested to join.

By June of 1919, there were thirty branches in different cities and an organization of 2,000,000 Blacks. Garvey made speeches which inspired many. He also had his own philosophies about life and the race.

He said that "The only protection against injustice is power - physical, financial, scientific....No white man can understand and feel what a Black man suffers daily....There is no law but strength, no justice, but power." He also said, "The main source of oppression is the ruling class."

Garvey constantly reminded his followers, Garveyites, that whatever their present troubles, they were descendents of a mighty race, whose past glories promised a future of greatness once the Negroes of the world united to achieve a common destiny. He felt that each race or ethnic group should derive strength from their uniqueness.

The idea of "Back to Africa" meant that Black people should go back to the only land they owned, into a strong, independent nation. But because of mail fraud, government infiltration and internal dishonesty, the organization created to realize this goal collapsed.

Garvey went to the heart of the race and ripped away unjustifiable aspects which were stunting the growth of the race, and "The race is growing."

Marcus Garvey has his place in history. To many he was a great leader, while others had and have no desire to perpetuate the memory of this great race leader.

The fact that Garvey was a race leader cannot be denied. When one looks at the situation of Black people at that particular time in history, one can only come to the conclusion that Garvey did play a major role in the history of the world, as well as the history of Black people. He saw the need for changes in the world, like Martin Luther King saw the need for changes in the sixties. It was fortunate that Garvey did make an attempt to change society for the better.

Kappas' Pretty Boys Come to UMass

by Donette Wilson
Nummo Staff

With hopes of becoming a part of the University of Massachusetts, Amherst Greek system, The fraternity Kappa Alpha Psi (Kappa) waits with optimism.

In general, Black fraternities came into being in the 1920's. At that time Blacks were not allowed to join the already established (white) fraternal organizations. Therefore, Black doctors, lawyers, and college students formed their own group.

In January of 1911, ten scholars at the University of Indiana founded Kappa Alph Psi. The fraternity's motto is "achievement."

When Gregory Roberts, dean of pledges, was asked about the feelings of the administration, he replied "there are still some things which have to be worked out, through Greek Affairs concerning the Kappas but there doesn't seem to be any complications envisioned. He also said that "guidelines were given, and there shouldn't be any problem in meeting them."

The idea of Black fraternities on campus was expressed to be positive. There are hopes of Umass being the "trendsetter" of this endeavor. In fact many Black leaders came out of these fraternities.

Few of the black men at Umass are pledging this fraternity at this moment, it is a very tough job. Pledgees are chosen on their academic standing, they have to be well-rounded students and strong enough to withstand the initiation process. Kappa Fraternity hopes that there will be an expanison of fraternities like these in the near future. Like many, this organization hopes to be an inspiration to many other endeavors not yet seen.

"GULLAH!"

Alice Childress will be directing an original production of her latest play, "Gullah!"

by Tracey Bryant
Nummo Staff

Acclaimed playwright, novelist and director, Alice Childress will be directing the UMass Third World Theater production of her latest work, "Gullah!," to be performed in the Southwest Hampden Theater on April 5,6,7,12,13, and 14.

This new musical explores the lives of African American descendants of West African slaves, who reside in the sea islands off the coast of South Carolina and Georgia.

It focuses on a young college graduate born on the island who returns to study his people. The encounter between the modern and traditional worlds is both touching and humorous as he finds his way back to his roots.

The music for "Gullah!" was composed by Nathan Woodard and the musical direction for the UMass performance will be assumed by Horace Clarence Boyer.

Woodard composed the score for "Young Martin Luther King" (with book by Alice Childress), and has worked with Melvin Van Peebles, Howard McGhee, and in the acclaimed musical - "Hair," on Broadway. He is also a trumpet player who has toured nationally and internationally with big bands like, Gene Ammons, Louis Bellson and Duke Ellington Orchestras.

Boyer, an acclaimed gospel composer is currently an Associate Professor of Music Theory and Afro-American Music here at the University of Massachusetts. He recently directed the music for the Third World Theater's production of "Do Lord Remember Me." He began his music career as a gospel singer with his brother James touring the country as "The Boyer Brothers".

Childress has been cited in many histories and critical studies and is a major force in the development of contemporary American theater. She was the first Black woman to have a play - "Gold Through the Trees," professionally produced on the American stage.

She received an Obie Award for her play "Trouble in Mind" and the first Paul Robeson Award for her "Outstanding Contribution to the Performing Arts," from the Black Filmakers' Hall of Fame.

Her other plays include "Wedding Band" and "Wine in the Wilderness," both stage and television successes; "A Hero Ain't Nothin' But a Sandwich" and the more recently published novels "A Short Walk" and "Rainbow Jordan" both having been widely praised.

Having received an artist-in-residence grant for the 1983-84 academic year from the Five-College Third World Theater Subcommittee, Childress, as "guest director in residence" has begun five weeks of rehearsals on "Gullah!."

This play will be the final presentation in the Third

Do you believe having Black fraternities on the UMass campus will be positive; why or why not?

photos by Marc-Elliot Giles

Michael Nauls:

I'm glad they're here. It's about time. I welcome them with open arms. I believe it will bring the Black community closer together.

Neil Grant:

No, I don't agree that Blacks should be represented by Greek letters.

Louis Alfred III:

In general, I think it's positive for the community as a whole. They have the capability to do many positive things for the community. But it's up to the people in it.
Coming from down south, most of the contact I've had with them have been positive. I've seen fraternities do benefits, raise money for sickle cell and do many fundraisers for other good causes.
An organization will only be as good as the people in it. If they do what they can for the community, it will be positive, but if they only party, then it won't be positive.

Editorial : The Real Problem with M-TV

by Tracey Bryant
Nummo Staff

In the March issue of Valley Women's Voice a woman wrote an article (or editorial) titled, "Jackson's M.T.V.: Any Redeeming Social Value?"

She began, "On Christmas day, I saw Michael Jackson's "Thriller" on M-TV for the first time." The whole article is a feminist critique of Jackson's "Thriller" video, while the title encompasses all of Jackson's video work.

More importantly, this woman ends the article with "All I can suggest is writing to Epic Records (a division of CBS records), which is the label Michael Jackson records under, or to M-TV, and tell them how you feel. Unified action ended the Rolling Stones' "Black and Blue" advertising campaign; we can succeed again."

I cannot see how anyone could possibly pick out the "Thriller" video, and condemn all Jackson's video work, while sidestepping all of the videos shown on M-TV that blatantly perpetuate woman-hating.

If she was going to suggest writing letters to get something taken off the air, you'd think she'd pick Duran, Duran's video - the number one video according to the M-TV polls, making it the one shown most often.

In this video a Black woman is painted like a tiger and is being chased by the band through the jungle. She and the leader symbolically struggle and she ends up prowling around a cage. He ends up watching her with satisfaction even though he has a large scar on his face.(It should have been called 'The Sexual Safari'.)

And there are many other videos just as bad or worse. Take the "Kiss" video for example. They tie a woman to a bed, rape her, and then bring in chains. Even Carly Simon's video glamourizes rape - or the 'chase and subdue scene'.

But Hasbrouck states: "Though this ("Thriller") is not the most misogynous video being shown these days on M-TV, (Musical Television, a cable station which shows video-taped music 24 hours a day) it's probably the most dangerous. It is subtle in its attack on women, and it perpetuates the "woman as victim" myth and reality." She continues later, "...after all, if Michael Jackson does it, it must be great!"

I don't think her statement "...after all, if Michael Jackson does it, it must be great!" is enough justification for singling him and his video out of all the video trash to boycott. People realize that Michael Jackson is performing in the video and would not necessarily assume that he goes around setting up these type of (dangerous to women) situations in real life.

The idea that "It's probably the most dangerous (video)...(because) it is subtle..." is inconsistent with the feminist perspective on pornography - which is also said to perpetuate the "woman as victim" myth and reality.

Organizations working against pornography express the opinion that increased exposure to (blatant-) hardcore pornography is worse than increased exposure to soft-core porn because increased exposure tends to increase acceptance, so the standards of "normal" become more dangerous. (Although neither is desirable.)

When feminists critique pornography they seldom go on a campaign against a particular person, magazine or place, unless the person, magazine or establishment does something excessively misogynous compared to the current market. Most groups say they do not want to censor what people read or see (but rather make the public aware of the detrimental effects such industries are having on society.)

Yet Ms. Hasbrouck singles out Michael Jackson and his "Thriller" video. Jackson's video is a "horror flick" video; it has all the elements of a horror movie, but in a reduced time-span: The woman is the victim; you never know who you can trust; at the most dangerous moments you're always alone; and you never know when, or if you're really safe.

Why didn't Ms. Hasbrouck attack the entire movie industry, the video industry or at least the horror film segment of the movie industry? Instead she makes Michael Jackson the scapegoat for the woman-hating elements in media forms that started long before he was born, let alone participated in them; and for the new media form whose misogynous currents would not even be remotely diminished by removing his video.

His video is a remake of a classic horror movie from the '50s - "I was a Teenage Werewolf." And at least in his video the woman gets up and leaves the theater, and her boyfried follows. In most horror movies and in real life "she" would have sat through the whole movie just to be near him. The video's movie scene clearly shows the problem with horror films: women are usually the victims.

Jackson's obvious enjoyment (as the date) of the horror scenes, all the frightening changes "she" goes through later on (which turns out to be a dream); and the audience finding out in the end that he really is a beast, can be interpreted as a message: Trust your own feelings, beware of men who so thoroughly enjoy horror movies, and an assailant isn't always a stranger and does not always appear dangerous or unusual until it's too late.

The video served to remind women of a few small but very important precautionary measures to be taken when going on dates: Leave when you feel uncomfortable in a situation; be prepared to get home on your own; and be prepared to protect yourself.

The point behind this counter-analyzation is that in "Thriller" there is room for double-entendre. The woman is never mutilated, raped or beaten - there is still hope that she will survive, wake up to the real truth, trust her intuition before it's too late.

Most videos that portray women as the victim are made with the express point - the theme of desecration of women; there is no room for double-meanings, the message is loud, clear and specific. The words to the song often bear out the point, or the video explains the words to the song; which does not say much for the music industry.

I do not want to dismiss her critique of the basic plot, because I do not see what healthy message a man or boy could get from the video. But as I said, this video is just a condensed version of a classic horror flick. Writing letter to remove the "Thriller" video will only prompt people to question the motives for singling out the Jackson video (as it has prompted me to do).

Preventing the viewing public from seeing the "Thriller" video would in no way alter the misogynous messages broadcast on M-TV. With this knowledge such action would indicate an unpleasant current running through Ms. Hasbrouck's thinking.

Ms. Hasbrouck's energies would better serve women if she would do balanced, comprehensive research before making sweeping condemnations and statements about unfamiliar areas, and simply going for the easiest target.

There should be a campaign to clean up the video material on M-TV, rather than one to injure Michael-Jackson's career.

avenue available to minority ownership in the major markets where minority populations are significant.

Dowdy, whose company is challenging RKO stations, WOR Radio AM and FM in New York City, observed that if the challenges to RKO are successful and Black ownership emerges in several of the major market areas, "then for the first time in history Blacks will have a significant voice in the broadcast industry. This presence would greatly and postively affect what news is covered and how; who will be talk show hosts and guests; what topics will be dealt with on talk shows and specials; behind-the-scene technical jobs; and all other aspects of the industry.

When John Russworm founded Freedom Journal, the first Black-owned newspaper in 1827, he was motivated by the unassailable fact that no group of people can expect another group of people to communicate its story to the world. That is why he set up his own newspaper. That is also why it is important that Blacks be represented on the ownership level in the mainstream broadcast industry. And that is why Blacks must join others, including those concerned with children's programming to see that H.R. 2370 or 2382 are defeated in Congress.

World Theater's Spring '84 season. In conjunction with "Gullah's" premiere, Childress will conduct a free public lecture Saturday, April 7 at 1:00 p.m. in the Smith College Green Room (the theater building.) On Sundays, April 8 and 15, there will be matinee performances of "Gullah!" in UMass's Hampden Theater at 2:00 p.m.

Aside from pleasure, there are several reasons to see this play. The play "Gullah!" and Childress's career both span a great deal of African American history. The play is opening during Martin Luther King Week at the University. This year's MLK Week theme is "Forward from the Past: Black Political Power in the 80's." Childress's play addresses the problem of how to move forward without losing the past. Aside from these critical reasons is Ms. Childress's formidable talent.

Amherst to form panels on life after fraternities

By DAVID LINTON
Collegian Staff

The acting President of Amherst College has announced plans to establish two committees to help reshape that institution's residential and social life in the wake of the school's closing of fraternities.

Acting President G. Armour Craig announced the formation of a 12-member President's Advisory Committee on residential names and a 20-member President's Advisory Committee on student residential and social life.

Two months ago, the Amherst Board of Trustees voted unanimously, despite student protests, to abolish the college's eight fraternities and seek improvements in student life.

Terry Allen, associate secretary for public affairs at Amherst College, said yeterday that appointments to the committees would be made "in a couple of days."

Members of the committee on residential names will include two Amherst trustees appointed by George B. Beitzel, chairman of the Board of Trustees, two alumni, one faculty member, three consultants, and four students who will be chosen by the college's Student Assembly.

New names will be selected for the former fraternity buildings. Allen said some names could include past residents of the buildings. The committee is expected to complete its work by the end of this semester.

The committee on student residential and social life will be a long-range committee that will work with President Peter R. Pouncey, who takes office in June. The committee will work to develop and implement a new residential system for the college.

The committee will include the 11 members of the College Council. Two trustees, two alumni, one faculty member, one member of the administration, and three students who will be appointed from a slate of 10 candidates recommended by the Student Assembly will also be on the panel, which plans to begin work in the fall.

University plans one-week shutdown for steam repairs

By DAVID LINTON
and PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts will close some of the buildings on campus for one week this summer to repair steam pipes which run under the campus providing heat and air conditioning, officials said yesterday.

Roger Cherewatti, director of the physical plant, said he would present a plan today to the Deans Council to repair the steam pipes, which has been plagued by leaks for several years.

The pipes are used to carry heat and air conditioning to all building on campus from the coal fuel plant. Six million dollars have been appropriated in this year's capital budget for temporary repairs to the underground system.

Cherewatti declined to comment on specifics of the plan but said all heat and air conditioning will be shut off at several buildings on campus, tentatively scheduled to begin May 27 following commencement.

"I have got to get various details before presenting the plan to the deans," Cherewatti said. "right now I'm doing preliminary studies on the problems a steam shutdown would cause."

Director of Housing Services Joseph Zannini said the shutoff would cause problems only for a few resident in Lincoln and University Apartments and for students remaining in Prince House in the Southwest Residential Area.

Dudley Bridges, manager of building operations for the Campus Center, said hotel operations would be closed because of the lack of hot water. He said rusting pipes have caused trouble in the building in the past.

"If they don't do it now there would probably be a 25-day shutdown next winter. If we don't do it we would run into some problems. We almost ran into some problems with the heating system last winter," he said.

A place where faculty learn

By LAURA YEE
Collegian Staff

The Institute for Advanced Studies in the Humanities seeks to provide scholarly activities for the faculty to achieve the best quality in higher public education at the University of Massachusetts.

Established in 1981, the Institute tries to "provide a focus for humanistic research" and "a place for many disciplinaries to show the vitality of human concerns" through lecture series, seminars, public programs and publications, Director Jules Chametzky said.

After a two year trial period, the Institute was evaluated by the Faculty Senate, which recently moved that the mandate for the Institute be renewed. The Senate concluded that "the extensive scholarly activities of the Insitute are of the highest order, the credentials and contributions of the scholars involved are impressive and the scope of intellectual activity and scholarship indicates a singular and significant function."

Chametzky said newsletters are sent to faculty members each semester to promote research and thought in humanistic disciplines by combining individual research and collective effort.

"The seminars that break down the isolation many faculty feel in a departmental structure prove to be a force for improved morale and pride," he said.

Chametzky said there is no other continuing activity that is run by and for the faculty that provides this kind of "all university-wide and intellectual resource for the faculty."

"The programs are organized under the direction of a fellow, and through interdisciplinary seminars the faculty meet with fellows and dignitaries. We pick our most distinguished faculty," he said. "We are enriched, we read and hear more and we change and broaden."

Even though the Institute is a faculty oriented service, Chametzky said, the information learned "obviously reaches the entire community because it reflects in their teaching."

"Julius Lester, our associate director, got the writer series (a speaker series on social consciousness) going...one of the most significant things we've done. We taped all of the proceedings, which have been accepted by 39 AM radio stations plus FM," he said.

Chametzky said that lecturers range from scholars and fellows from UMass and other universities to visiting dignitaries from Poland, West Germany and Hawaii. Topics covered vary from interdisciplinary studies such as "Women, War and Feminism" and "Art and Technology," to "Social Responsibility in Science."

"We've had poets, writers, and political figures engage in symposia," Chametzky said.

"The Institue has been granted $10,500 by the Massachusetts Foundation for the Humanities and Public Policy to conduct a series during this semester and next called 'Writers Speak: America and the Ethnic Experience,'" Chametzky said.

"It's hard to raise money in an era of business and science. We're not Harvard or Yale, so we depend on building our track record. Instead of hearing of fires and falling bricks, the Insitute is here to dramatize the seriousness and intellectual intelligence of the University," he said.

Smith group protests changes

By JEANETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

Although most Smith College students are pleased with the schedule modifications which will take place in 1985, some Ada Comstock Scholars (ACS) program members are dissatisfied.

The Board of Trustees at Smith recently voted to change their present class schedule to conform with those of the other four area colleges, which operate on a Monday-Wednesday-Friday and Tuesday-Thursday schedule. Smith is currently running on a Monday-Tuesday-Wednesday and Wednesday-Thursday-Friday schedule.

Because many Smith students are commuters who stay at school for three days a week to take classes, this policy "will effect 25 to 30 percent of students in some measure," said Eleanor Rothman, director of the ACS program at Smith. "We have a year and I don't know what type of decisions will be made."

The Ada Comstock Scholars is a group of students whose education must have been interrupted for a minimum of two years," Rothman said.

Terrorists strike in Jerusalem; dozens injured

JERUSALEM (AP) — Three terrorists fired guns and threw four hand grenades at passersby on a crowded street in Jerusalem yesterday, wounding at least 48 people, authorities and witnesses said.

Two passersby, one of them a former policeman, opened fire and killed one terrorist, police said. The other two assailants were captured—one at the scene and the other in a getaway car. The interior minister, Yosef Burg, identified the three as Lebanese Arabs.

The attack came one day after a column of Israeli tanks fired on Syrian-controlled positions in Lebanon's Bekaa Valley for the first time in a year.

The Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine—a faction of the Palestine Liberation Organization—claimed responsibility for yesterday's attack in Jerusalem, and said it was demanding release of Palestinian prisoners in Israel.

A statement issued by the front in Damascus, Syria, said the intended target of the attack was the Israeli Tourism Ministry and claimed some guerrillas had taken hostages in the building. There was no indication in Israel that this claim was true.

Police said two of the injured were seriously hurt. The others suffered minor injuries, police said.

Witnesses said one attacker crouched on his knee and pivoted, firing in all directions, while two others ran down King George Street throwing hand grenades.

Special prosecutor chosen to face Meese

WASHINGTON (AP) — Jacob A. Stein, a former Watergate defense lawyer, was named special prosecutor yesterday in the investigation of Attorney General-designate Edwin Meese III.

A special panel of three federal judges chose Stein, 59, of Washington, "to investigate this matter and to prosecute for any violations of federal criminal law disclosed by his investigation.

"It is ordered that the independent counsel shall have jurisdiction to investigate any allegation or evidence of violation of any federal criminal law by Mr. Meese," said Judges Roger Robb, J. Edward Lumbard and Lewis R. Morgan.

Stein, described by the presiding judge in the Watergate trials as "one of the finest attorneys in Washington," could not be reached immediately by telephone for comment.

Attorney General William French Smith last week had asked the special judicial panel to name a prosecutor to investigate all allegations against Meese, President Reagan's counselor and top policy advisor.

Reagan re-affirms 'Star Wars' desires

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, setting the stage for a fight with Congress over curbing arms in space, said Monday it would not be wise to open negotiations with the Soviet Union on a treaty banning satellite-killer weapons that the Kremlin possesses and the United States still is developing.

In a report to Congress, Reagan said "no arrangements or agreements beyond those already governing military activities in outer space have been found to date that are judged to be in the overall interest of the United States and its allies."

The administration argued it would be virtually impossible to verify Soviet compliance with any treaty, and that it even would be difficult to tell which Soviet systems in space could be used as weapons.

Fourth 'Green River' body discovered

SEATTLE (AP) — Explorer Scouts combing a wooded area where three skeletons were found over the weekend discovered a fourth skeleton yesterday, and all were being examined as possible victims of the Green River killer, officials said.

If the latest discoveries are officially identified as Green River victims, that would bring the death toll in the serial murders to 20. Twelve missing women fit the profile of Green River victims, most of whom have been young prostitutes.

No one has been charged in the slayings.

Explorer Scouts, called in after a mushroom hunter found a skull, discovered three skeletons Sunday in a wooded, litter-strewn area near Star Lake, in an unincorporated part of King County about 17 miles south of downtown Seattle. The skeleton found yesterday was about 400 yards away from the previous discoveries, according to King County police at the scene.

Another victim had been found last September less than a mile away. Guards were posted overnight to keep people from the site before the search resumed yesterday.

Capt. Frank Adamson, commander of the 40 member Green River Force, said the four skeletons are the most found in one site since October, when three victims were found near Seattle-Tacoma International Airport.

Newburyport rape case due before jury today

NEWBURYPORT — The defense in the rape trial of two policemen rested yesterday after a bar owner testified that a young woman enjoyed having sex with the officers, and it was "obviously what she wanted all night."

"She was enjoying it," said Stephen Harden, owner of Ye Olde Ox Bar in Lynn, describing the 21-year-old woman as a flirt who was "bouncing around to four or five different men."

After testimony from Harden and two prosecution rebuttal witnesses, jurors began hearing summations by defense attorneys and Assistant District Attorney Howard Whitehead. Essex Superior Court Judge Francis Lappin was expected to send the case to the jury last night or this morning.

Two Lynn police officers, 31-year-old Edward Jackson and Unree Poellnitz Jr., 34, are charged with aggravated rape and drugging a person for sexual intercourse. Harden is accused of aiding the two under the state's joint enterprise law.

The woman has testified she was handcuffed in the back of a police cruiser and taken to the bar by the officers Nov. 22. She said the men raped her after getting her so drunk she passed out. The victim said she has a learning disability and reads at the third-grade level.

Harden testified that the woman was "being flirtatious with not only the two officers but with others in the bar...she was definitely bouncing around from one guy to another to another."

Framingham residents vote on school prayer proposal

FRAMINGHAM — A proposal for a daily school prayer, based on the Declaration of Independence and acknowledging the "laws of nature and of nature's God," went before voters yesterday in a non-binding referendum.

Supporters predicted an overwhelming victory, but opponents vowed to fight the effort all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court if necessary.

Even if residents voted in favor of the prayer, a vote by the School Committee would still be needed before it could be implemented in this eastern Massachusetts town.

Framingham has 68,000 residents and 35,000 registered voters. Officials said they anticipated a large turnout for the widely debated referendum and other city elections.

The vote came the same day that the Supreme Court agreed to decide whether Alabama's public schools may have a "moment of silence" for meditation or prayer.

Gov. Dukakis' administration takes on courthouse rodents

BOSTON — Rats infest a district courthouse and the offices of the state's highest court leak, but the Dukakis administration said yesterday it has a plan to help: state takeover of selected courthouses.

Gov. Michael Dukakis has filed legislation to take over what his office called the most dilapidated buildings in the court system—all Suffolk County buildings, and the Lawrence Superior Court, the vacant Cambridge District Court, and the old New Bedford Courthouse. Other counties could opt to turn their building over to the state, under the bill.

The legislation, filed Friday, creates a new state Court Facilities Authority to operate and maintain those courthouses, and to pay more equitable rents to counties who continue to own their own buildings, administration spokeswoman Barbara Kopans said.

Abortive exam-theft caper lands Amherst senior in jail

By DAVID LINTON
Collegian Staff

An Amherst College senior is currently serving a three-month prison term for breaking into the home of a secretary in a scheme to obtain a copy of a mathematics final exam so he wouldn't flunk out of school.

Robert Peterson, 21, of Farmington, Conn., admitted in Hampshire Superior Court last week that he broke into the home of a secretary the night before his final exam last December looking for office keys to gain access to a copy of the test.

Judge George C. Keady Jr. gave Peterson a five-to-seven-year suspended sentence at Walpole State Prison and two 2½-year suspended terms in the county jail but ordered that only three months of the term actually be served.

Assistant Northwestern District Attorney David Angiers said Peterson pleaded guilty to breaking and entering, possessing burglary tools, and larcency resulting from the 4 a.m. break into the secretary's home on Pomeroy Lane in Amherst.

Angiers said that Amherst police arrested Peterson as he fled from the home with a screwdriver, a utility knife, the woman's purse, $196, a flashlight and a nylon stocking Peterson used in the break-in.

Under a new state law, Angiers said, the victims of the crime were allowed to speak at the hearing. He said Charles Sullivan, the husband of the secretary whose home was entered, asked the judge to put Peterson in state prison because of the trauma the couple have gone through since the incident.

"He said he was traumatized by the incident and that he doesn't sleep well now," Angiers said. Peterson broke into the home through a garage window and "confronted" the couple, who were in bed at the time, he said.

Angiers recommended a 2½-year prison term, with six months of that to be served, and asked the judge not to be lenient on Peterson just because he was enrolled at Amherst College.

But Peterson's lawyer, Richard Howland of Amherst, told the judge that first offenders rarely go to jail in this state for this type of crime and described his client as "a victim of a very upwardly mobile life style" who made a desperate act.

SAFA lobbies for aid in D.C.

By JOHN KENNEY
Collegian Staff

Students Advocating Financial Aid (SAFA), a University of Massachusetts lobbying group, spoke with legislators in Washington D.C. yesterday as part of an effort to inform representatives about student concerns regarding aid.

The group, led by SAFA president Cindy Howland, is currently lobbying representatives and senators in hopes of defeating President Ronald Reagan's financial aid proposals for fiscal year 1985.

The Reagan administration's plan includes level funding for Pell grants, a 50 percent increase in work study and elimination of the supplemental grant program. 1,750 students at UMass currently receive this grant program.

The proposal, if passed, will affect the 70 percent of UMass students who receive some form of financial aid. Representative Paul Simon (D-Illinois), who drafted the proposal, wants to consolidate the National Direct Student Loan, the Supplementary Educational Opportunity Grant and the State Student Incentive Grant into one campus-based grant.

The plan would also cut the five percent organization fee which students must pay when they receive a Guaranteed Student Loan (GSL).

While state schools are in favor of the proposal, strong opposition is expected from representatives of private colleges.

Dallas Martin, director of the National Association of Financial Aid Administration, spoke to 40 SAFA representatives Sunday night in their hotel rooms.

Martin addressed current financial aid issues wuch as the Pell grant, the G.S.L., college work study, and the Simon proposal, which is now being considered by a subcommittee on education.

For the next three weeks the Retail Sales Promotion class of the Department of Fashion Marketing at the University of Massachusetts will design the window displays for 21 Amherst merchants.

The class of 96 students has been split up into groups of four and assigned to particular stores. The students will complete three consecutive window designs, each remaining on display for one week. The first displays were finished last Friday.

Signs have been placed in the windows of participating merchants, crediting the fashion marketing students with the work. When the project is complete the students will write papers about the experience and receive a grade.

The students of the retail sales promotion class study the ways in which retailers promote their goods and their image. Window displays are one form of promotion.

"The project gives students a chance to combine academic knowledge with actual on-the-job experience," said Dr. Jacquelene Robeck, who teaches the course and is currently fashion marketing coordinator at the University.

Depending on individual store management, the students will have varying degrees of control over what merchandise will be displayed in the windows and how the store's image will be represented.

"When you work in a store you never have full control. In this project you learn how to work with what you have. I think it will be fun," said junior fashion marketing major Aggie Mullens.

The project has been conducted by the Department of Fashion and Marketing for several years. In the past as many as eight merchants have participated, but never as many as the 21 involved this year.

Denis Perlman, manager of Silverscape, which is participating for the first time, said "I was a little apprehensive at first because we know what we want in our windows, but we are glad to give the students a chance to get some experience."

"Friday they did the first window and I think they did a very good job," said Amherst Cheese Shop manager Kate Hersey.

Restaurant, town at odds over license

By MARY-SHELIA LAUGHLIN
Collegian Staff

A recent University of Massachusetts graduate who owns a newly opened Greek restaurant is threatening to sue the town of Northampton because he was refused a liquor license, but the town says he does not understand the procedure of getting such a license.

Costas Emmanouilidis, owner of the Estia resteraunt on Main street and a 1982 economics graduate, said he plans to plead his case at the Norhampton town meeting today.

"I will attend the meeting and if I don't get a license then I will sue the town for loss of business," Emmanouilidis said.

"I am fighting for justice because they will not give me a license.

"In the past year Northampton has issued nine extra liquor licenses," Emmanouilidis alleged. "This is over their quota."

Mary Lou Molongoski, Northampton clerk of the license commission said, "Emmanouilidis doesn't really understand the system."

"He never officially filled out an application for a license, Molongoski said.

She said the city has met its quota and that "the only way to issue more licenses is for the city to drop the quota."

Molongoski said the last full-liquor license was issued in the 1960s and the last wine and malts license was issued in 1980.

She said the only way Emmanouilidis can get a liquor license is through a transfer from a restaurant already holding one. A full liquor license transfer costs between $25,000, and $30,000. A wine and malts license transfer costs $20,000, she said.

"Emmanouilidis doesn't want to transfer because he doesn't want to pay the money," Molongoski said.

"I am the only one in an area of 65 miles that is an ethnic restaurant," Emmanouilidis said. "A Greek meal goes with wine," he said.

"Almost half of the students are in their 30's," she said.

Though most Ada Comstock students live on campus or in surrounding towns, over 30 percent of the students commute, some from as far away as Vermont, Connecticut, New Hampshire, and Cape Cod, Massachusetts.

Rothman said many of the Ada Comstock Students drive 60-70 miles to take classes at Smith three days a week. "Most of the women who commute have family or employment responsibilities," she said.

Frances Stotz, a 45 year old Smith student, said, the Ada Comstock Scholars program has allowed her to pursue something she couldn't finish before.

"I am married and have a teenage child and two full-grown children, (with this program) I have been able to devote myself to my family on the weekends, when they want me the most," said Stotz, who attends Wednesday-Thursday-Friday classes and devotes Monday and Tuesday to studying.

The ACS program, which has been operating for nine years, has students majoring in everything except chemistry, physics and astronomy, because "most older students are lacking math skills," Rothman said. Most students are majoring in English, literature, art, psychology, and sociology, she said.

ACS students are allowed to study on a part-time basis; all other undergraduates at Smith are required to be full-time students.

The admission process for ACS students is separate and different from routine admissions. ACS applications are designed especially for older students and eliminate requirements such as recommendations from former high school principals.

Police crack down on phony ID's

University of Massachusetts police reported that three men were arrested outside of the Blue Wall in three separate incidents for possessing an altered license. The arrests were made between 3 p.m. and 5:30 p.m. last Friday.

In other action, a woman was arrested at 2:10 a.m., Friday for driving while under the influence of alcohol, failure to keep to the right and running a red light on Governor's Drive, police said.

An 18 year old woman was arrested for driving while under the influence of alcohol, failure to keep within marked lanes and speeding. The incident occurred at 1:35 a.m. Sunday, according to police.

A ten speed bicycle valued at $500 was stolen from Gorman Dormitory between 3:30 p.m. and 11 p.m. Wednesday, according to police. A cable which secured the bicycle was cut, police said.

Police reported that a radar detector valued at $300 and a graphic equalizer valued at $150 were stolen from a car parked outside of Greenough Dormitory between 8 p.m. Saturday and 10:15 a.m. Sunday.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

A question of responsibility

Over the past few years, there seems to be a contradiction hanging over the First Congressional district of Massachusetts. Our Congressional Representative from western Massachusetts, Silvio Conte, has had the distinct opportunity of running on the Republican as well as the Democratic ticket. Upon closer investigation, Congressman Conte has been far more supportive of Reagan and the Republicans, which seems to go against the needs and interests of his constituency in western Massachusetts.

Dee Theodoras

Being the Congressional Representative from western Massachusetts, Conte's politics have become quite supportive of Reagan's economic, social, and military policies over the past few years. In 1981, Conte voted against the Democratic Budget Resolution which sought to limit the amount of cuts in such areas as Medicade, Unemployment Insurance, Energy Assistance, Education Funding and Housing.

The vote against this bill seems to be quite damaging to western Massachusetts, when you consider the fact that the average income for the First District (Western Mass.) is far below fifteen thousand dollars per year. Conte also supported President Reagan's "across the board" tax cut in which one third of the tax savings was given to the wealthiest 6 percent of the country's tax payers. How many of the wealthiest six percent of Americans live in western Massachusetts?

Also in 1981, Conte voted in support of Reagan's second round of budget cuts known as the Gramm-Latta II. These budget cuts included funding for elementary and secondary schools, which includes school lunches, and college grants and loans, which a number of us here felt. Also included Gramm-Latta II, was a 16 billion dollar cut in assistance to low-income families. Yet, added to Conte's support for Reagan's cuts in Education and social programs, is his support of increases in military spending and especially 80 million dollars to the Military Government of El Salvador. Is Mr. Conte trying to tell western Massachusetts that the death squads in El Salvador need your dollars more than the school lunch program for the district's children does?

The confusion over Silvio Conte's support of Reaganomics over the needs and interests of Western Massachusetts is not so mystifying when you so consider where Congressman Conte is coming from. Perhaps Conte's $762,000 in holdings in 1982 has something to do with his zealous support of Reagan's "across the board" tax cuts. Or maybe it's his stock investments in IBM and McMoran, two large corporations involved in weapons and nuclear production that makes him support Reagan's increase in military spending.

All this seems to build up to one festering question that many of us in western Massachusetts are asking: Who are Congressman Conte's constituents, wealthy Washington bureaucrats and defense corporations, or the people and families living in western Massachusetts?

Dee Theodoras is a UMass student

Editorial Notes

Overcoming institutional barriers

A racist epithet is hurled across a room on campus; two Jewish students living in the dorms find a red liquid and a message, "Death to the Jews", delivered at their door; The People's Gay Alliance has its sign defaced. The fact that these events all happened within the same week tells us something about the level of harassment that occurs on this campus, the shared oppression and victimization of diverse groups, and the difficulties that victims of harassment have in reporting problems.

We, the staff and students of SCERA (Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy) devote considerable time to deal with issues of human oppression and are appalled at the recent incidents of anti-Jewish harassment that have come to public notice. However, our outrage and the welcome statement by the Chancellor somehow are not enough.

It has become clear to many of us that there are obstacles that stand in the way of effectively dealing with these kinds of incidents. We estimate that over 90 percent of harassment goes unreported. Why? Students are either reluctant to report harassment for fear of inviting more problems, or they don't know where to report the incident, or they somehow don't trust the people or agencies that they are supposed to report to.

We feel that it is essential that a clear grievance procedure be established and publicized, and that students are assured that if they report incidents of harassment they will be responded to with sensitivity and promptness.

The University in many ways goes beyond existing laws in good faith efforts to address problems of human oppression. However, we need a clearly-defined mechanism equal to these policies, a mechanism which will advocate for the victim, helping to overcome institutional and social barriers that create fear.

In the meantime, the Residential System, Dean of Students, and the UMass Department of Public Safety are all available to respond to harassment. We must use the channels that are available to us. Take an active role in reporting incidents—problems don't disappear by themselves. If you are harassed, or witness harassment—report it!

Abortion is destruction

There has been a black cloud hanging over America for the past eleven years, ever since the Supreme Court legalized abortion in the Roe vs. Wade decision on January 22, 1973. Every 21 seconds since then, a human life has been terminated by abortion. Think about it. That's 4,000 lives a day, 1.5 million a year. In total, more than 15 million babies have been legally murdered since 1973.

Peter Dow

All of this mass extermination is ardently supported by people who call themselves "pro-choice." More correctly stated, it is "pro-choice to kill those who are not wanted." Pro-choice supporters are just using this label to hide their own lack of responsibility and accountability for their actions. Rather than admit their misjudgement, they instead seek to destroy the evidence conceived. I would agree with them that the choice between having a baby or not should be made. But it should be stressed that a responsible person would make that decision before the act was committed, not afterwards.

We must realize that along with a pregnancy comes the responsibility of giving birth to the child. From that point, the mother can either raise the child or give it for adoption. There are many millions of couples in America who have been waiting for years to adopt a child, but abortion is, literally, killing their hopes.

In fact, there is huge epidemic of "convenience" abortions in this country today. Recent statistics report that 98 percent of all abortions are peformed for non-medical reasons. It seems, after reviewing these statistics, as if supporters of pro-choice have lost their sense of what is morally right and wrong.

Pro-choice advocates argue that they have a right to privacy — to do with their bodies as they see fit. This is true — but to what extent? By justifying abortion as a private matter and decision you also justify, for example, a man murdering his wife in their home. The point is, if a child in the womb can be redefined as a non-person, so can a child out of the womb. So can the elderly. So can anyone. Whatever justification that is given for killing a child in the womb will serve to kill a child after it is born. Whatever justification that is given to killing the handicapped and the "unwanted" in the womb applies to the handicapped and the "unwanted" out of the womb.

At last, some legislators in the Massachusetts State House have attempted to lift the dark cloud that has covered the nation since Roe vs. Wade in 1973. The Pro-Life bill has called for the elimination of state funded abortions except in cases of medical emergencies (2 percent of all abortions). Perhaps it is fitting that Massachusetts, America's so-called "most liberal state," is taking the first step towards outlawing this horrible crime against humanity.

Protest of Awareness Week

To the Editor,

As a student of this university I strongly protest the Gay Awareness Week and the contained support of such activities. I believe that some amount of money I pay in student activity fees go to support the Peoples Gay Alliance. As a member of The U.S. Army Reserve a portion of my college expenses is repaid to me. Also, the pay I earned in Basic Training and Advanced Training this past summer goes toward my educational expenses. Although it may be a small percentage of my money that goes to support and cultivate homosexual activities, it grieves and angers me to know that the physical and mental rigors I endured in service to my country help to pay for such activities as gay dances, lesbian encounter groups and other deviant activities.

In this protest, I wish to call for a student vote to see if the majority of this University's students wish to support homosexual social and "cultural" activities. Is the Student Senate willing to have such support put into a referendum? It is about time that the needs of all were considered before the needs of a group whose only claim for support is a common sexual preference. What next, student money to support sado-masochosts, pedophiles etc.?

If the homosexuals wish to hold a dance let it be totally self-supported. It is not my wish to deny individuals of their right to be gay but nor do I wish my hard earned money to go towards funding of their social activities. I am aware of gays and lesbians, but why do I have to pay a fee to make everyone aware of them?

Ad is not harmless

To the Editor,

We are writing in response to the extremely offensive ad for a movie, Up the Creek in the Wednesday, March 28 Collegian. The ad portrays an almost-naked woman in a raft full of fully-clothed men. One man stands at the front, holding a can of beer and "his" woman in the other. The front of the raft, which faces the reader is made into a woman's face and breasts.

This may appear to many as a bunch of guys getting together to have some fun-- some booze, some girls, a party. In the same issue of the Collegian was a story about the same sort of partying done in Lynn where a woman was raped by two of the men at a bar (the owner said he'd be the "third one on" if he didn't own the bar). Another instance of some guys havin' some fun with a woman occurred in New Bedford in Big Dan's Tavern. The portrayal of this woman, obviously on the raft and in the ad for men's sexual pleasure, invites men to view and use women in any way that men want.

If the reader's reaction to this is "Naw, it's just harmless fun! You take everything the wrong way," we ask you to ask youself, "Why is the woman practically naked while the men's bodies are fully covered, including life jackets?" Hint: the answer has something to do with making men powerful and women vulnerable.

The ad is not only promoting a movie, but also a contest based on the movie, encouraging readers to join; "So this is your big chance to prove that you really are 'UP THE CREEK' and tacky." We ask the Collegian to prove that it is concerned with the tacky portrayal of women in the media by refraining from patronizing the sponsors of this contest: Justin Ryan's, Plumbley's, The Pub, and Bart's Ice Cream, who are promoting their businesses through the promotion of sexism and the degradation of women, until they make a public apology.

Blues, Texas style

JOHNNY CLYDE COPELAND at the Blue Wall

By JACK BRESNEHAN
Collegian Correspondent

Johnny Clyde Copeland brought his energetic brand of Texas blues to an enthusiastic crowd at the Blue Wall on Thursday night. Battling a severe snow storm, he and his band arrived from New York, where they are now based. Copeland is becoming an increasingly popular blues artist and by every indication, made believers out of those in attendance.

In his early fifties, Johnny is one of the new generation blues musicians whose time has come. He learned his blues while growing up in Houston, inheriting his deceased father's guitar at the age of twelve. He spent the next few years boxing but eventually his guitar became the sole focus of his attention. The sounds of T-Bone Walker and Albert Collins in the local clubs influenced him and he was playing in clubs by the time he was sixteen. By 1963 he had his first local hit, "Down on Bended Knees," and "One More Time," on the flip side. In recent years he has played the Montreaux Festival in Switzerland, toured Europe and Africa, and has released several records. His latest record, Texas Twister, rocks steady, and Stevie Ray Vaughan is featured on a couple of the songs. Probably one of Johnny's greatest assets is that he writes his own songs instead of doing a repetoire of time-worn standards. It is great to hear so much new stuff and it brings to mind the amount of blues coming out of Texas these days. In addition to Stevie Ray, there's Johnny Winter, Albert Collins, Albert King, Gatemouth Brown, Billy Gibbons, the Fabulous Thunderbirds, all playing sharp edged blues different from the Chicago sound.

Widemouth Brown's "Boogie-Woogie Nighthawk" started the show off and then Copeland went right into "Natural Born Believer." Next came "Honky Tonkin," which began with a searing solo and featured some hot horns from the rhythm section. Johnny's son was the one on the tenor. Surely no one could forget his song, "Houston," a very upbeat boogie number. He closed the set out with "Love Utopia," another memorable song with fine lyrics.

Set two started out with "Excuses," which got the dance floor crowded, and it stayed that way for the rest of the night. He kept them rockin with "One More Time," "Done Got Over It," and "Idego Now." About the only slow number of the night was "Jessanne." Other that he covered were "I Wish I Was Single," Midnight Fantasy," and "Devil's Hand." He came back for the appreciative audience to do "It Was Early In The Morning "as an encore.

If I hadn't been covering the show I would have liked to have been out on the dance floor too. But information is needed to make a story. How was I to know that Johnny Copeland was going to give me a ride home that night. He'll be at the Bottom Line on April 18th and 19th for future reference.

Minutewomen face Providence in home opener

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Finally! For the University of Massachusetts softball team it has been a long nine days since they laced up their cleats and played some Division I softball.

The Minutewomen, who own a 9-4 record after their southern swing to South Carolina during spring break, will face (finally, somebody) Providence College as UMass opens their home and Northern schedule today at 2 p.m. at NOPE field.

The weather is also cooperating with the forecast for sunny skies and temperatures in the 60s. Friday's home opener against Boston College was snowed out.

"We haven't played in a long time, "head coach Elaine Sortino said. "We really need to get out and play."

"The team is pretty keyed up," co-captain Allyson Rioux said. "This will be a big week for us. (UMass has three vital Atlantic 10 games against Rhode Island (2) on Thursday and Rutgers on Saturday). We're ready for the challenge."

The challenge starts with the Lady Friars who return both of their pitchers including Mary Arndt, who scattered six hits as the Friars hung tough and were nipped by UMass 1-0 in the second game of last year's doubleheader in Providence.

Sophomore pitcher Cathy Reed tossed a two-hitter as UMass took the first game last year, 4-0.

"They are going to be tough," Sortino warned. "They are a scrappy team. "I want our team to go out and set the tone of the game."

To do that the Minutewomen will have to hit and the team's pitching must produce. The pitching is cruising right along, though.

Sophomores Lynn Stockley and Reed both have ERA's hovering around 1.00. Reed sports a 5-0 record and a 1.08 ERA while Stockley has a 4-4 record with a 0.71 ERA.

"Our pitching and defense look solid," Rioux said. "The only problem I could see is not producing enough runs."

UMass has the bats to produce. Catcher Beth Talbott leads the team batting .371. Rioux, the team leader in RBI with 9, is batting at a .342 clip.

UMass will miss the .370 average of Missy Oman, who hurt her knee in South Carolina after eight games and is still out of the lineup.

Sally Maher, who moved from the outfield to first to replace Oman, and the freshmen, second baseman Carol Frattarolli and third baseman Debbie Cole, have struggled at the plate lately.

Mincone heads up Minutemen defensive unit

By ADAM NAZIMOWITZ
Collegian Staff

If you were to talk to John Mincone, the captain of the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team, you would probably end up betting some money that they will have a great season.

The 22-year-old accounting major from Huntington, Long Island has that way of promoting confidence and exuberance. Of course, being on winning teams for so long, you would kind of expect that attitude.

Mincone began playing lacrosse in junior high school at the 8th grade level, about the same time he began playing soccer, another sport he excels at. His team at that time, West Hollow never lost a game in three years.

"Everybody in the neighborhood played lacrosse, and lots of people went on to college to play. I was always more or less defensive oriented, even in soccer," said Mincone.

He continued to play both lacrosse and soccer for Half Hollow Hills West High School until he graduated in 1980. He played fullback or halfback in soccer and crease defense, which is the last man to beat before the goalie, in lacrosse. He attained All-League status in both sports and his high school won the Long Island soccer championship.

Mincone decided to stick with lacrosse only and came to UMass because of the good reputation of the business school and his admiration and like for Coach Dick Garber.

"My assistant high school coach, Peter Klement played here at UMass. He recommended the school and contacted the coach. Garber is a really great coach. He is sharp, having coached for 30 years. UMass as a school had the most to offer in terms of athletics and academics," added Mincone.

John also enjoys playing other sports such as racquetball, skiing and pool. But his main focus is on lacrosse, where he has started for all four years and has been captain for the last two. He feels that the sport will become bigger in the next few years.

"It's big in certain parts of the country. Overall, I think it will be a growing sport, the sport of the future. More high schools are picking it up every year. It is a physical sport, but a skilled sport as well. We had bigger crowds for lacrosse game: then for football games in high school," said Mincone.

"Boyden Hill is the best place in the world for fan support. It's the best support out of any college I've played at. I remember one game where I pushed a Syracuse player into the crowd and everyone ran up and poured beer all over him. It is a big factor at a lot of the games. It makes a big difference, like the Cage," added Mincone.

John is much more confident in this year's team, and feels that last year's disappointing 5-10 season is behind them.

"Last year we didn't take advantage of our opportunities when we had them. We were a young team with a lot of freshmen playing at different positions. This year we have Barry Cain, an All-American on defense back and a lot of good freshmen, who will see some time," Mincone said.

"This year it's a totally different attitude. It's a strong team with strong character and I think we're going to win. These are not people who give up. My immediate goal is to have a winning season and then shoot for the NCAA's, which is a big honor. We've never had a home playoff game. We finished at 13-1 my freshman year but lost at Virginia because of NCAA regulations, but I still have high expectations," added Mincone.

Although UMass does not sport the biggest team on paper, they can be a very aggressive team. There is a lot of team unity this year, which came from spending a lot of time together down in Florida over Spring Break. They have played several club teams and fared well and are anxious to get the season started at Cornell on Wednesday.

"I'm confident we'll have a very good season. There's no real letup in the schedule, which is one of the toughest in the country, but the team is ready to play. We have a lot to prove and I think we're going to do it.

Mincone will be graduating after this season after playing four years of lacrosse, but will ring many memories with him.

"I've had the best times of my life here. Campus itself is great and it's a once in a lifetime experience coming here and playing lacrosse for UMass. I will probably play in clubs on L.I. after I graduate, but in less serious leagues," concluded Mincone.

Nads win hockey title

By LISA MARIE CANTWELL
Collegian Staff

Greenfield— Dedication, reflected in all those late week-night trekks to a rink 26 miles away, finally paid off for the Nads Sunday night, as they captured the intramural ice hockey championship title with a 5-1 defeat of Yukon Jack.

Senior John Antanya set the pace for the Nads barrage of goals, and victory was secured by the end of the first period as senior Chris Reagan topped the one Yukon goal scored by Freshman Scott Karkos.

The Nads continued to pummel Yukon Jack throughout the rest of the game, with the teams leading scorer Antanya notching another goal in the second period, and senior Captain Tom Jango and senior Mike Satorelli scoring in the third. The offensive drive was solidly backed by goalie John Coelho, as he stopped a total of about 15 shots.

We dominated the game with a lot of strong skating," said Jango, "as a team we work well together; the players are unselfish, and no one is afraid to pass the puck or work hard."

"We dominated the game with a lot of strong skating," said Jango, "as a team we work well together; the players are unselfish, and no one is afraid to pass the puck or work hard."

Yukon Captain Jody Ferrelli said his team was outplayed by the Nads. "They beat us to the puck," Ferrelli said, "We played well, but we did not give the goalie enough defense."

As goals began to mount against Yukon, the game turned chippy. Although there were no fights, three penalties were called against the Nads, and Yukon was charged with six. Yukon's Tyler Sheared also suffered a broken arm, after getting cracked with a stick in the third period.

The rivalry between the two teams is not a new one. Last season they met in the semi-final with Yukon continuing on to the championship title. Jango said his team, which has reached the play-offs for the last five semester-seasons, was "always considered a choice in the play-offs. This time we just said 'no way', went out, and skated hard."

All of the teams in the intramural hockey league travel to a rink in distant Greenfield several times a week during the season. Games don't start until at least nine p.m., with teams often waiting past midnight to play. Fan turn-out is always low, and at times non-existent. Grades dip, but the number of devoted hockey players who participate in the league don't.

Men's crew team fares well on Charles the River

By ED ROBINSON
Collegian Correspondent

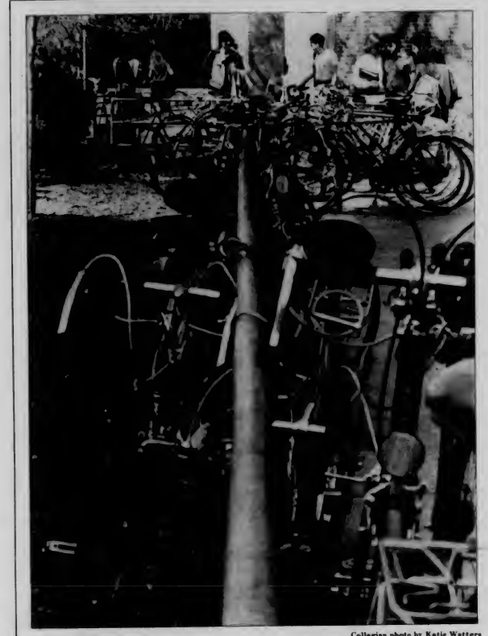
BOSTON — Softball and lacrosse teams had to cancel their games this weekend due to wet, soggy fields, but a wet field could do nothing to hamper the University of Massachusetts men's crew team as they opened their racing season with a respectable showing against the University of New Hampshire and Boston University in Boston on Saturday.

The greenish-brown and sometimes blue water (or at least people think it's water) of the Charles River was slightly rougher than usual.

The junior varsity team was the first to race over the 2000 meter course, starting at 9:30 a.m. With the grey skies overhead, and the snow lining the river, it seemed like wintertime. But by the time the race was over, and the J.V. team had beaten BU's third-varsity boat by five seconds to come in second with a time of 6:48, the sun had come out, the sky was blue, and it was definitely spring.

Dennis Holland, who rows in the fourth seat of the eight man shell, summarized the race. "We got off to a poor start, we were washing out a lot," he said, "but then we got going and made it up by the bridge."

The bridge he referred to is at the halfway point of the race. 'Washing out' is when the blade of the oar is partially removed from the water before finishing the stroke. After the bridge, the team stuck with the eventual winners of the race, BU's second-varsity boat, losing to them by six seconds. UNH had no entry in this race.



The varsity boat, rowing next, didn't fare as well. The boats were even off the line and stayed even until the 500 meter mark. But then the UMass shell fell behind.

"The boat's cadence (strokes per minute) was up around 33 to 34 which is slightly high for this early in the season," Head Coach Dave Kumlin explained after the race. "BU and UNH were stroking around 31 or 32 and were under control."

Also, another problem the UMass varsity boat had was maintaining a straight course. The wake left by the boat, which could be viewed from the vantage point of the bridge, revealed a slight zigzagging. Still, with both these problems, by the halfway point the UMass varsity were even with UNH and only a length behind BU.

They fell further behind BU, and UNH pulled away too, until the last 500 meters, from which point on UMass got it together and lost no further ground (water) to either boat. They finished third with a time of 6:22.

Students may be forced to receive some health plan

The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees will vote on a plan today mandating that all students be enrolled in either a private or a university health plan.

At the Board's bi-monthly meeting in Boston, little opposition is expected for a proposal that will force seven to ten percent of the students currently not covered to obtain some insurance coverage.

Student Government Association (SGA) co-president Charlene Allen, the student trustee, says she can find little reason not to vote for the plan, but has reservations about the ability of economically-disadvantaged students to pay what would amount to $120 more to be insured on the university's plan.

"It's something everybody needs but many people don't realize it until it's too late," said Allen. "Hopefully we can set up a fund for needy students or some kind of payment schedule. It's a lot of money to add to the bill, but's it is worth it."

Co-president elect Jim Keller will also travel to Boston with Allen to sit in on the meeting. He will take over the student trustee position next semester.

The Board will also discuss the refinancing of building on the Amherst campus as well as the tenure applications of several professors.

"The health plan is the most important vote the Trustees will take," said Allen. "The other matters are basically par for the course like annual reports."

UMass shopper shuttle adds 3 east campus stops

By RISA FREEMAN
Collegian Staff

The Shopper Shuttle, which transports University of Masssachusetts to two local supermarkets, will expand its route today to include stops in three East Side campus residential areas, according to a UMass transit official.

Paul Blanchard, assistant operations manager, said the route, which formerly began at the Graduate Research Center and stopped at Haigus Mall and the Southwest Residential Area, will now encompass the Sylvan, Orchard Hill and Central areas.

After its GRC stop, the shuttle will now drive past Sylvan Residential Area, down East Pleasant Street, into the Orchard Hill Residential Area, through Central Residential Area. The bus will wait at Butterfield dormitory and leave at five minutes to the hour, continuing its route back by Sylvan to the GRC, where it will follow the original route to Price Chopper and Stop & Shop.

The Shopper Shuttle, which runs Wednesdays from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. and Saturdays from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., was extended because it "did not serve the entire on-campus community, which includes all the residential areas," said Student Government Association co-President Tom Ahern. "The bus was not coming close enough to Sylvan, Orchard Hill and Central and we (the UMass Transit Board) wanted to alleviate the problem."

Ahern said the shuttle has been successful, with dozens of riders on Wednesdays and hundreds on Saturdays, he said.

The extension will be funded through the $700 originally allocated to the shuttle through the Student Activities Trust Fund, Ahern said.

The shuttle service will run through May 23 and schedules are available on the bus or at the transit garage.

Civil rights come only by action, speaker says

Education could be the way

By MARILYN BOU
Collegian Correspondent

Speaking on the legacy of Dr. Martin Luther King and the continual struggle against racism, the United States Commissioner on Civil Rights addressed an audience last night at the University of Massachusetts.

"Communities of all races sense something unnerving in racism and nations have a desire to fulfill justice ," said Mary Berry as part of activities taking place on campus this week in honor of Dr. King who was shot sixteen years ago today.

"I am very happy to be here at UMass during a week when many of us remember a truly immortal man. If Martin Luther King were alive today he would note that the struggle for civil rights is still alive, but that the bank of justice is indeed bankrupt," she said.

Berry said that although we as a people have progressed in our understanding of discrimination, we have more work to do now than ever before, especially without the aid of Dr. King.

"We have successfully acknowledged the problem, our task now is to eliminate it. If people who complain take action against their grievances we can send a message to Washington," Berry said.

"The message has been heard once before with the assistence of Dr. King and it can again reach the ears of Washington and throughout this land if there are enough people to cry it.

But if we don't keep repeating our cry for social injustice, the cry will disappear into the air," she said.

Berry also noted that education is an answer to many present and future problems of this nation. She quoted the President of the National Committee on Excellence as saying some current answers to the "present problems are in the fact that we did expand the accessability of education to the poor."

"In making our young educated and qualified we can continue to hope for a better future for this and other nations," she said.

Berry is often questioned on why she is still holding office when Reagan has done so much against civil rights and women rights, and her reply is that she was appointed by President Reagan.

She also said that Reagan can be beaten by having faith in Democracy. "We can beat Reagan and take back the Senate, the power lies in our hands, the task before us is to fulfill democracy, otherwise there is only totalitarianism."

Mondale roars back with New York win

NEW YORK (AP) - Walter F. Mondale won the New York presidential primary election last night and claimed the victory he needed to regain command over Sen. Gary Hart in the race for the Democratic presidential nomination.

"We had a very good day today in New York," Mondale said. "Apparently we did well across the board."

Based on polling-place interviews, the television networks said Hart was in a closer-than-expected contest for second place with the Rev. Jesse Jackson.

Jackson was polling exceptionally well in New York City, apparently winning about 80 percent of the black vote. Some 252 convention delegates were at stake - the biggest single-state prize so far and, next to California, the largest of the year.

"In New York, they, the Hart Campaign, spent maybe three times, mayber four times as much money as we did," Mondale said. "But Americans weren't looking at that. Citizens of New York were asking that key questions who would make a better president and I think that's why we won."

With 57 percent of the vote in, it was:
Mondale, 327,802 or 49 percent.
Hart, 221,401, 33 percent.
Jackson, 99,053, 15 percent.

The rest was scattered among Democratic dropouts.

Wisconsin Democrats held a "beauty contest" primary Tuesday, in advance of next Saturday's caucuses when 78 convention delegates are at stake. With 17 percent of the vote in, Mondale and Hart each had 43 percent of the vote.

President Reagan - Yes was piling up 93 percent of the vote in the Wisconsin GOP Primary. Reagan - No had 7 percent. There was no GOP line on the ballot in New York.

Victory was dramatic evidence that Mondale had completed a comeback in the Democratic fight, and an indication that Hart's "new ideas" candidacy faces difficulty in the weeks ahead.

Hart, who campaigned Tuesday in Pennsylvania, next week's on the election calendar, must move swiftly if he is to stall his rival's drive for the nomination.

Only three weeks ago Hart's candidacy was on a roll, winning several early primaries and caucuses.

But Mondale quit campaigning as a serenely confident front-runner and became the aggressor in the race, moving on to defeat Hart in the Illinois primary two weeks ago and taking aim in New York.

Hart said New York was not that critical to his chances for the nomination, and he already was looking ahead to Pennsylvania.

But New York is the kind of state that a Democrat must carry to defeat President Reagan next fall, and the Mondale victory would blunt Hart's claim that only he can capture the White House for the Democrats.

New England's governors to discuss saving Seabrook

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) - New England's governors gather today in what could be a stormy meeting over a plan to have utilities in their states save the utility building the Seabrook nuclear plant from financial disaster.

The "informational" meeting was requested by Gov. John Sununu of New Hampshire, where the embattled twin-reactor plant is being built. At least four of the six governors are expected to attend the gathering at the airport in Warwick, R.I.

The discussion will center on Public Service Company of New Hampshire's shaky financial situation brought on by soaring Seabrook costs that caused the utility's accountants to warn Monday that the company might be forced into bankruptcy court if it does not get help.

It wasn't clear whether that meant reorganization under federal bankruptcy laws or bankruptcy that would put the utility out of business. No major electric utility has ever gone bankrupt, though a half dozen small ones folded in the 1930s, according to the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Seabrook owners conditionally agreed last week to give Public Service some of their savings from imported Canadian hydroelectric power to help the utility recoup its $293 million investment in Seabrook 2. in return, Public Service agreed to cancel the reactor Dec. 1.

At the same time, PSC asked the other owners to pay in advance eight months of construction costs to help ease its immediate cash crunch. That request still is under discussion, the utility says.

Utility regulators need to approve the Canadian savings plan, and may be called on to approve any advance payment agreement, if one is reached.

Bottle distributors cleaning up on empties

BOSTON (AP)—All those empty bottles and cans that consumers do not bother to return add up to a windfall for bottlers and distributors that runs into millions of dollars, official records show.

The grand total could be as high as $20 million annually, but state officials warn against projecting from partial reports arriving at the Alcoholic Beverage Control Commission.

"Anyhow, that's a lot of nickels and dimes," George McCarthy, ABCC chairman, said Tuesday in his office.

Whatever the final total, the balance is viewed hungrily by lawmakers on Beacon Hill, who want to claim the unredeemed deposits on behalf of the state's consumers through the ancient legal principle known as "escheatage."

Accused police officers await rape decision

NEWBURYPORT (AP)— With a judge's admonition that "You don't give up your right to refuse sex by flirting," a jury Tuesday began deliberations in the trial of two policemen accused of raping a woman in an empty bar.

The seven-man, five-woman jury received the case shortly before noon after 90 minutes of instructions from Essex Superior Court Judge Francis Lappin.

Edward Jackson, 31, and Unree Poellnitz Jr., 34, both police officers in nearby Lynn, are accused of aggravated rape and drugging a person for sexual intercourse.

The owner of Ye Olde Ox Bar in Lynn, Stephen Harden, was charged with aiding them under the state's joint enterprise law.

A 21-year-old welfare mother testified the officers raped her after getting her so drunk she passed out. The defense argued the woman "was the aggressor" and invited sex with the men after an evening of barroom drinking and flirting.

Prayer supporters resign their campaign

FRAMINGHAM — Following the narrow defeat of a controversial, non-binding school prayer referendum in this eastern Massachusetts town, the proposal's supporters said Tuesday that "the democratic system worked" and they will give up their campaign.

"I'm disappointed that school prayer lost, but the democratic system worked and we have to listen to it," said School Committee member Joseph P. Conlon, a vocal advocate of school prayer in Framingham, which has 68,000 residents.

"We have to listen to the voters. But I only hope this makes people in other cities and states work for school prayer."

The school prayer referendum was defeated by 174 votes. If it had been approved and implemented, Framingham's 10,000 school children would have had the choice to recite each day a prayer based on language in the Declaration of Independence. The prayer acknowledges "the laws of nature and the nature of God."

Backers of the prayer held a 17-vote lead until the final precinct went against the proposal 350-159.

not discriminatory

BOSTON — The all-male membership policy of the United States Jaycees does not violate a Massachusetts law that forbids sex discrimination in places of public accomodation, the state Supreme Court rules yesterday.

The justices rejected a lawsuit filed by 14 women who said the nonprofit civic organization, once called the Junior Chamber of Commerce, was illegally operating in Massachusetts because of its policy of admitting only men aged 18 to 35 as members.

A similar lawsuit, initiated in Minnesota, has been scheduled for a hearing before the U.S. Supreme Court later this month.

The Jaycees have 67 local chapters in Massachusetts with a total of 1,792 members, officials said. Under the organization's bylaws, only men between the ages of 18 and 35 can be full members. Women and older men can be associate members, but cannot vote or hold office.

The Massachusetts chapters were given permission in 1975 to admit women as individual members as part of a pilot program. But the national organization ruled in 1978 that the male-only policy must be enforced and any chapter violating it would have its charter revoked.

UMass blood drive in action Red Cross wants 180 pints

By MARY-SHEILA LOUGHLIN
Collegian Staff

Despite the beautiful weather, many were drawn indoors to be donors for the American Red Cross blood drive held yesterday in the Student Union Ballroom.

The volunteer drive to be held again today and on Thursday is sponsored by the University Women, a group of University faculty wives at UMass.

Volunteer blood program chairman for Hampshire County, Dorothy Perkins said, "In the course of a year we get 4000 pints of blood from UMass which comes out even with the rest of the County. UMass is like a city in itself," she said.

Field Representative for the Red Cross Program, Richard Rubin said, "We're shooting for at least 180 pints a day and to do that we need at least 200 donators each day."

The Red Cross did get 170 of the 180 pints of blood that they wanted yesterday.

Rubin said the blood drive is held at UMass twice a year, for three days in November and three days in April. This tradition, he said, goes back to at least the 1960's.

"At one time we held the drive for four days and it was too much blood for the lab to handle," Perkins said.

She said the need for blood is constant month after month but the donors go up and down. Donations fall off in the winter months of December, January, and February because people are more apt to be ill at this time. They also fall off in the summer, she said, because it is too hot and people are on vacation.

Diana Franchi, a UMass Junior Math major said she didn't know about the drive until she saw the white Red Cross truck parked out front of the Student Union Building, then decided to give blood.

Karo Grover, a senior HRTA major followed Franchi's actions.

"You feel good after you give blood," Grover said.

Richard Davis, a Botany graduate student, said he saw the sign out front and he "happened to have time to give."

"The weather is good and I feel in a good and generous mood," David said.

Jonathan Broadhurst, a junior Economics major at UMass, said "It has been eight weeks since the last time I gave blood. I started giving blood when I lived in Southwest and our dorm was having a contest to see who could give the most blood. Our floor won and we had a keg party with the money. I've been giving blood ever since," he said.

"I really only give blood for the backrubs and food," Broadhurst added jokingly.

Info game more than trivial success

By PAUL DESMOND
Collegian Staff

Who wrote The Autobiography of Malcolm X? What is the only man-made object visible from space? What popular drink is made from gin and vermouth? These are some of the questions from a board game called "Trivial Pursuit," which is one of the most popular games on the market, according to some local merchants.

Steve Zach, toy manager at Bradless in Northampton, said the game was "very popular" in his store. "Twice in the last month a shipment came and went in one day," he said. That translates to anywhere from 24 to 48 of the games being sold in one day at about $30 each. K-Mart in Hadley has had only about 12 of the games in the store since Christmas, said toy manager Steve Kupras. It has been on "outstanding order" with the K-Mart warehouse for months, Kupras said, but the warehouse simply cannot get the game from the manufacturer.

The object of Trivial Pursuit is to answer questions from six different fields of interest. Players move around a board following the throw of a die, and their category of question is determined by what color space they happen to land on.

When a player lands on a special space marked by a colored triangle, he can earn a triangle of that color if he answers the question correctly. When a player earns triangles of all six colors, he goes for the center of the board and must answer a question in a category selected by the other players.

University of Massachusetts psychology professor, Richard Bogartz offered some "purely speculative" possibilities on why the game is so popular.

"It's a social game, people play in groups. There's the novelty of it; it's a new game. And publicity, the 'follow the crowd' phenomenon," Bogartz said.

"I suppose there's lots of little rewards from knowing something - just being able to come up with an answer. Perhaps it's a matter of being insecure and wanting to be involved in something a lot of other people are involved in," he said.

One student said the board game is a popular social activity in Kennedy Tower in Southwest Residential Area. Craig Sanders, a sophomore chemistry major, said he likes the game because "it really gets you thinking."

"I haven't played recently because of tests but I usually play on Wednesday nights and on the weekend," he said. "I'll have a few beers and sit down with some friends and play. It's a good time."

Julius Lester, a UMass Afro-American Studies professor, incorporates trivia into his class on the history of the Civil Rights Movement.

"I'm fascinated by all forms of trivia because trivia is song that took place at some point in history," Lester said.

6 still in running for provost position

By LISA MARIE CANTWELL
Collegian Staff

Applicants for the position of provost and vice chancellor for academic affairs at the University of Massachusetts have been narrowed from more than 200 to about six, and nominations are expected to reach the chancellor's desk in three weeks, according to the Search Committee Chair Richard Stein.

UMass has been without a permanent provost, the highest administrative position under the chancellor, since Loren Baritz' resignation last May.

Samuel F. Conti is the second acting provost since Baritz' departure, after appointee Dean Alfange resigned last July.

Stein said the provost search and applicant information is under tight security, in order to protect the current employment status of the interested candidates. Half of the final interviews have been conducted "in the Amherst area, rather than on campus," to prevent speculation, he said.

Norman Synder, assistant to the chancellor, said "a fairer judgment can be made if less information is leaked out." It is important, Synder said, that the selection process does not become distorted with unverified, outside information.

A Chicago-based executive search service conducted the original application screening, before forwarding an estimated 100 applications and information files to the university committee.

The provost is the chief academic officer for the University, and oversees both graduate and undergraduate academic programs, and the flow of personnel. The position is "customarily second in command," after the chancellor, Synder said.

Female engineering students blooming

By LAURA KOESTER
Collegian Correspondent

As Assistant Dean of the Engineering Department, Nancy Hellman is part of a growing effort to address the needs and concerns of the increasing number of women engineering students at the University of Massachusetts.

In 1983, Hellman was promoted from academic counselor to the Assistant Dean for Undergraduate Affairs. Since then she has helped plan professional seminars, career counseling programs, and informal luncheon meetings with representatives from engineering companies throughout the state.

Currently, 423 of the 2300 students enrolled in engineering are women, and the most popular concentration among them is mechanical engineering, followed by electrical, industrial, chemical, civil and computer systems.

In the past 3 years, more than 230 women have graduated with engineering degrees, compared to 119 over the preceding two decades.

Through the joint efforts of the Society of Women Engineers (SWE) and the College Industry Advisory Committee (CIAC), professional seminars regarding the field of engineering are available for both women and men this semester. The SWE is a National undergraduate association, and CIAC is presently composed of women from top industries throughout Massachusetts.

"Students speak with me about various concerns, among which is the faculty's level of sensitivity and receptivity to women and minority students," Hellman said.

She said she wished to stress the "cooperative nature of her efforts to heighten awareness of these issues in the department."

Hellman also said many female students are very reticent to speak in class, and that she is considering having a workshop on assertiveness to deal with this problem.

"I work to promote the image of women in the department and I counsel students individually to help improve their self-image," she said.

Another concern of Hellman's is networking and "familiarizing students with the working world."

Hellman also offers informational sessions about engineering careers to high school students and is planning a program in which women engineering alumni would return to their former high schools to discuss their personal and professional experiences.

A professional seminar, titled "Careers and Lifestyles," is being sponsored by the Raytheon Corporation, a CIAC member, tonight at 7 p.m. in CC 804.

Attorney's Office member to discuss new Public Rights Division

Ellen Cain of the Hampshire/Franklin District Attorney's Office will discuss her office's new Public Rights Division in a Human Relations Forum today at noon in the Campus Center at the University of Massachusetts.

Cain, director of the newly formed division, will give an overview of her agency's mandate. Her presentation will center on the role of the division in enforcing Civil Rights laws as well as open meeting and environmental protection laws. A discussion will follow.

The forum is expected to last until 1:30 p.m. and will be in Campus Center rooms 804-808.

Family survivor to speak

The son of Julius and Ethel Rosenburg, two accused communists electrocuted in the 1950s, will address a Northampton audience tonight on FBI surveillance.

Robbie Meeropol will be one of three panelists to discuss "The People versus the FBI: Three Counterattacks on Domestic Surveillance" in a presentation sponsored by the Pioneer Valley chapter of the National Lawyers Guild. Guild member Jonathon Moore will speak on the FBI surveillance of his organization, and UMass Legal Services attorney Charles DiMare will speak on the psychological profiles compiled by the FBI during last semester's arson investigation at UMass.

DiMare said the panel was selected to represent both locally and nationally what has been going on with the FBI, and will challenge and counterattack its surveillance activities.

He added that his presentation will reveal no new information on FBI activities on campus or the December arrest of a Crampton dormitory resident assistant, against whom all charges were later dropped. Charges against law enforcement agencies and University officials involved in the case will be filed by the end of the semester, he said.

The lecture will begin at 7:30 p.m. at the Unitarian Society of Northampton and is open to the public.

Hit and run man admitted to hospital

A twenty-one year old East Walpole resident, who fled from an accident scene Monday after hitting a tree in his rented car, was admitted to Cooley-Dickinson Hospital, Amherst police said yesterday.

According to police, they responded to an accident call on Dickinson Street about 6:43 p.m. and found a 1982 Chevrolet Chevette flipped on its roof. The driver of the car allegedly hit a tree, buckling in the left side of the vehicle, and the force of the collision caused it to flip. Witnesses told police that the driver was seen running down the street with apparent head injuries.

Some time later, police said, they learned that a friend of the driver had taken him to Cooley-Dickinson, where he was admitted with head injuries. According to police, the driver said he had swerved to avoid a dog, and hit the tree in a car rented earlier on Monday from Paige's Chevrolet on Main Street in Amherst.

The accident is still under investigation.

Latin American weekend offers many activities

By MARILYN BOU
Collegian Correspondent

The Latin American Weekend (April 5-9), which is dedicated to the Latin American community of the Pioneer Valley, has many different areas of entertainment available for everyone. "With such a variety of free activities surrounding this weekend, we expect a large turnout of both Latin Americans and all members of the community," said Linda Velazquez, coordinator of Ahora, a Latin American organization here on campus.

Students of the Latin community on campus are very excited and are looking forward to the weekend. Rafael Guzman, an engineering major, said "activities such as the one this weekend contribute in uniting the many diverse communities here on campus."

"The weekend will serve to strengthen the ethnic ties the Latin communities share on this campus," said Maria Rivers, a computer science major.

Thursday, April 5, the day festivities begin, there will be two films featured. A Cuban film entitled "One Way or Another" and "Pexote", a Brazilian film, will begin at 7:00 p.m. They will be shown in room 101 of the Campus Center.

On Friday a dance will be held in the Student Union Ballroom beginning at 8:00 p.m. The featured artist is Luis "Perico" Ortiz and his renowned orchestra. Tickets for this special event are available at the Fine Arts Center and also at the door. The price for both students and the general public is $5.00.

Some of the activities slated for Saturday are an arts and graphics display, folk dancing performed by "Serobic", a Latin folkloric dance group composed of children from Amherst, and a breakdancing troupe from Amherst will perform. Activities begin at 11:00 a.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

"The event will be a success and a very culturally enhancing experience for everyone," said Christine Archese, a political science major. Everyone is encouraged to attend the festival.

Vulcans are ignorant people

To the Editor,

I write in response to a letter written by Mr. "Vulcan" Tumey who believes there is no need for a Lesbian and Gay Awareness Week. Paradoxically, he is the exact reason such a need exists.

Mr. Tumey, you certainly have learned very little here at UMass. But, yes, you do have a great understanding of what prejudice is, but only from the archaic side of the issue. People like you are the very reason discrimination still exists. Until we can educate you and your kind, your ignorance will continue to infringe upon the rights of all people. I hope you are enjoying your small-minded world, Mr. Tumey. Hopefully, celebrations such as Lesbian and Gay Awareness Week and Martin Luther King, Jr. Week will soon render you and your bigoted world obsolete.

No, I'm not lesbian. I'm not Black. I just believe in personhood.

Abortion is not birth control

To the Editor,

I am writing in response to two editorials recently printed on the subject of Pro-Choice. I would like to commend Richard Vigeant for his courage to write about his participation in the Pro-Choice movement. It was an honest and well written article. Few men would participate in the Pro-Choice movement much less write an article in support of the movement. I am extremely impressed. Thank you Mr. Vigeant.

The second editorial was written by Miriam Zoll, who is the Collegian's Women's News Editor. Although the content of most of Ms. Zoll's editorial was accurate, the lead paragraph set up an entirely incorrect premise for the statement she was attempting to make. Ms. Zoll wrote that people "who enjoy having sex and are not planning on having children in the near future will probably be interested to learn that our so called "liberal" state is trying to eliminate state funded abortions." The statement insinuates that abortion is used primarily as a method of birth control. This is an inaccurate statement.

Few Pro-Choice advocates, if any, would agree with Ms. Zoll. although abortion is used by some as a method of birth control, this is not the main issue of the Pro-Choice movement. Abortion is an option when pregnancy occurs due to the birth control methods. The legality of abortion does not mean that men and women no longer need to take responsibility for preventing an unwanted pregnancy. I personally do not believe that abortion should be used as a birth control method but I do believe that abortion should be legal and subject to state funds for the needy.

Although the rest of Ms. Zoll's editorial is a positive statement for the Pro-Choice movement, I am angry that she misunderstands the reasoning behind the Pro-Choice movement. As the editor of the Women's News section, I would expect Ms. Zoll to be better informed. I believe that it is a journalists responsibility to print accurate information and it is very aparent that Ms. Zoll "did not do her homework."

A woman's right to control

To the Editor,

This letter is in response to the article in last week's Collegian, on the editorial page, by Sean Casey regarding the hypocrisy of pro-choice. I feel I must write in response for every woman, regardless of her stand on the issue.

Until every woman has the right to control her own body, there can be no equality. I will not restate here all the arguments woman have been making on this issue. I will state, however, that NO man has the right to legislate this issue; no man has the right to sit in judgment on any woman for making what can only be a very personal and individual decision.

Mr. Casey smugly states that women who do not want children should make this decision before sexual activity. Since no method of birth control is 100 percent effective, is Mr. Casey advocating celibacy for women? Haven't we gotten rid of that old double standard yet, Mr. Casey? And what of rape victims, victims of incest, or other criminal sexual acts? Or don't they count?

No scientific or biological evidence has yet to confirm when life actually begins. And no scientific or legal authority has been able to come to an agreement on this issue. I think it's wonderful that Mr. Casey has all the answers. Perhaps he can tell us what to do about generations of unwanted and abused children. Or perhaps he can counsel rape victims on how to live with the product of the crime committed against them.

In closing, I would just like to say that until men can become pregnant against their will they should have no say in the matter.

Student Senate for the record

To the Editor,

In his response to my editorial, "Commuters Do Need Democracy", Jose Tolson shows with rarely seen blatancy that he is starkly oblivious to reality.

First of all, to relieve Mr. Tolson's doubts, I was at that Senate meeting and I was paying attention. Perhaps if more people were paying attention, the proposal would not have passed.

Secondly, it seems that Mr. Tolson is the one who was not paying attention. He says that the Senate voted on the proposal four times. Despite his assertion, the records show that there was only one vote. The proposal was passed five votes with nine abstentions.

Also, Mr. Tolson claims to have seen a provision on the front page of the proposal which states that all members of the govering board must be commuters. This must be a hallucination on Mr. Tolson's part because there is no such provision anywhere on the proposal.

Mr. Tolson also says that I am mistaken in saying that the board appoints itself. Mysteriously, however, Mr. Tolson neglects to explain why I am mistaken. Did any commuters not in the Senate have any vote in how they were to be represented? No. Who voted? Commuter senators. In my opinion, that is self-appointment.

A thank you for a spring trip

To the Editor,

We would like to publicly thank the UMass Alumni Affairs office for doing an outstanding job in organizing last semester's 22nd annual UMass Trivia Contest. As members of the Ultimate Club, the first place team, we were given a trip to Orlando, Florida over spring break.

Thanks to the efforts of Alumni workers, John, Phyllis, Donna and Eric, we were able to enjoy seven days in sunny Florida despite several complications the week before the trip.

Ultimately, it is events such as the trivia contest and last year's Charter Day celebration that serve to unite the UMass students, faculty and alumni. These activities enhance the University's public image and school spirit.

We invite all challengers to begin to prepare for the 23rd annual Trivia contest in September. We are ready to take you on!

EDITORIAL/OPINION

'YELL THAT ONE MORE TIME, I DARE YOU.'

Martin Luther King remembered

"I just want to do God's will. And he's allowed me to go up to the Mountain. And I've looked over, and I've seen the promised land. I may not get there with you, but I want you to know that we as a people will get to the promised land. So I'm happy tonight. I'm not worried about anything. I'm not fearing any man. Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord."

The day after Martin Luther King, Jr. delivered these words, he was assassinated. That day was sixteen years ago today, on April 4, 1968. It is a tragic irony that a man who spoke the truth and confronted a whole nation and its injustices was killed by a man driven by that same blind hatred and ignorance that he himself had tried to overcome.

This week is Martin Luther King, Jr. Week, a time set aside as a symbolic recognition of King as one of the most powerful and eloquent seekers of justice in all our history. But it is more than that. It is a time in which we should try to exemplify the man and what he stood for; racial equality on all fronts, more compassion for our fellow man and woman, and most of all, the simple affirmation of the dignity and worth of everyone, of every race and color.

Martin Luther King is an outstanding example of something else—the notion that no force of history is as strong as the power of an idea or a leader whose time has come, and the brutal reality that there are some who will resort to nothing to stop this social progress. That is why King, his writings, and his ideas must live on in his place. And that is why this week is such an important occassion.

So take some time out and away from everything else, and think. Think about Martin Luther King, Jr., and what he would be striving for today. Think about what he would think about the tenuous state of civil rights and equality today, and how all the progress our country has made is being eroded. Think about what he would try to do to improve that situation. And then go out and try to do something yourself,to help not just this week, but every time you get a chance to.

A responsibility for the future

Can you feel it? A shake-up is coming as we near the next millenium. The world is getting smaller and smaller as technology tightens its grip on human behavior. The once-pristine surface of our planet has been deeply scarred at the hands of the human race. A multitude of destructive machines are loose, with more due out next year. Of course, these are the very tools we have used to provide us with our fast food and our shopping centers. Eagerly eyed by all Americans, merchandise for sale lines the highways of our nation. Vast monuments to consumerism have been built here, frequently on the backs of people who have little hope of enjoying anything for their pains.

William J. Spain

The point is, fellow citizens of an ascendant system, that it is going to become increasingly difficult to grab everything we desire as we have in the past. There are a lot more of us avaricious folks treading the soil these days and the twentieth century has introduced us to each other like never before. Modern methods of conimunication have stripped away the ability to hide wealth in a remote valley or oasis.

We do have wealth. Some of the same technological prowess we are used to destroy ourselves represents the best hopes for our continued survival. The very fact that people receive money for not producing food must say that we have what it takes to fill stomachs. Is there a wise way to utilize all this, a way with consideration for the future? This is one of the questions you and I will soon have to deal with.

Not surprisingly, most of the present stewards are quick to assert that everything is being managed in the proper way. However, the best forethought does not usually come from those who wax fat off present distribution. A lot of people from around the world are knocking on our door and we face a choice. The power we have is awesome and it can be used to either reach out and help or to seal already tight channels. At this point, there is a disturbing trend towards the latter. That approach, while very convenient to the short-term interests of certain old men, will ultimately destroy us in the end. The pages of history are overflowing with empires consumed by their own greed.

The earth shrinks fast as the ripping and tearing at the environment takes its toll. Things are running out. Forget the oil or the special metals for making fighter planes. We have repeatedly proven our ability to withstand shortages of certain materials. What is being poisoned at an ever growing rate is the beautiful blue-green ball that supports us. Deserts are inexorably advancing in the southern hemisphere, bringing famine and disease. In industrial countries, poison seeps into the water and food. The trees, our friends from which we have gotten shelter and warmth (not to mention good old oxygen) for so long, suffer everywhere from overuse of the woodsman's axe and the debilitating effects of acid rain.

Wildlife is also on the run. When an animal becomes extinct (now that is practically a weekly event) we lose a valuable piece of our heritage. Still, the hunt goes on. Do you ever think about whales? The biggest living thing on earth and they are being exterminated to the last. When they are all gone, part of us will be forever lost.

The real tragedy is that we are going to get to watch it all in living color. Actually, we are already watching it. For now, it is still possible to sit and cluck our tongues at the misery from behind the protective cordon of American might. Wake up, people. That time is rapidly going to come to a close as we continue to pour our vanishing resources into a senseless arms race. Pretty soon, if we want to keep the weapons rolling off the assembly lines, serious sacrifices will have to be made. Many are already being made. Here is a nice statistic—every minute in 1984 will see fifty children perish from lack of food. In that same minute, the world's governments will spend over one million dollars on hellish devices to use against their neighbors. Quite the noble breed, are we not?

It really does not have to go this way. We can see it, and more importantly, we have the capability to do something about it. Unfortunately, it appears that the minds of many of those who are going to inherit this mess in a few years are still focused on the house in the suburbs with the swimming pool. What kind of a shock is it going to take? How horrible will the state of affairs have to get before we act? These are not pleasant questions, but I am afraid that unless we start looking for some answers, they will resolve themselves in a most unsatisfactory manner.

Concern for free speech

To the Editor,

Recently there has been several letters in the Collegian denouncing pornography. The intention of this letter is not to advocate porn or belittle the seriousness of rape. My intention is to question the connections made between porn and rape, but more importantly to express my concern over our right to freedom of speech guaranteed to us in the First Amendment of the Constitution.

These people claim that they are not calling for censorship of porn, but rather an examination of its content, values, etc. . . What do they want from these examinations? You guessed it, censorship. These letters lead us to believe that if pornography disappeared overnight so would violent crimes against women. I think not. Likewise, I assert that if porn never existed violent crimes against women would still occur. Why is it that rape is overwhelmingly higher in the U.S. per capita than in other countries that are much less inhibited about sex and pornography to the point that it is shown on T.V.?

There is no question that porn is offensive to many people. Does this mean that we should denounce, examine, and subsequently ban every book, magazine, or belief that may be offensive to some people or is allegedly the cause of some undesirable effect? Does this mean that we should denounce religion because of the fact that in the history of man more people have died in religous wars than for any other reason, including starvation? The Constitution of the United States gives each of us the right to make our own decisions on such issues, thus eliminating the need for censorship. I agree that something must be done about rape and oppression of women, but at the same time our right to freedom of speech must be preserved. It may be 1984 but lets not get carried away.

Tasteless discrimination

To the Editor,

Today I made the mistake of reading the Collegian's Editorial Page over lunch. It seems that it is not enough for the student body to be aware of the difficulties that face homosexuals, but now we must read graphic illusions to homosexual intercourse. The letter in Friday's Collegian, "Discrimination Still Exists", is tasteless, repugnant and completely inappropriate to the editorial page of any half respectable newspaper.

Where does the Collegian draw the line regarding material such as this? Suppose the letter had begun, "Michael woke up and for a few minutes just lay still, a wonderfully warm reassuring feeling spreading over his body as he watched his little sister breathing deeply and contented next to him." Would the Collegian have found this equally acceptable? Is sex between a man and his dog also editorial page reading material if the man happens to get a rock thrown through his window? The fact is, that there are people who engage in all sorts of sexual acts that might lead to discrimination, but that does not justify the portrayal of these acts in print.

Gay activists should confine their efforts to eliminating discrimination, instead of attempting to gain the publics approval of homosexuality by illustrating the gay lifestyles that the vast majority find distasteful. Indeed, such illustrations only hurt the cause of the gay community by emphasizing the things that make them different. It is too much to ask for heterosexual approval of homosexual behavior. Ending discrimination is a worthy, but imposing obstacle in itself.

WFCR will begin airing dramatizations of short stories by science fiction extrordinaire Ray Bradbury on April 6. The National Public Radio series, entitled Bradbury 13, will be heard on Friday evenings at 10:30 p.m. Included in the series will be dramatizations of Bradbury's most popular short stories, such as "Night Call, Collect", "The Screaming Woman" and "The Ravine". For further information about the series, or any other WFCR boradcasts, call 545-0100.

Soprano Mimi Ravetti will perform in an interesting and unusual show at 8 p.m. on Tuesday, April 10 in Bezanson Recital Hall. Ms. Ravetti will sing poems by Emily Dickinson, which have been set to music by composer Gordon Getty. The song cycle, titled The White Election after a Dickinson poem by the same name, was written in 1982 by Mr. Getty, son of the oil giant J. Paul Getty. Based on a series of Dickinson poems, the piece attempts, according to Getty, "to tell Emily's story in her own words at a length appropriate for a complete single concert." The performance is free of charge. For futher information, call 545-1945.

artslines ...

The University of Massachusetts Department of Theater will present Tennessee Williams' A Lovely Sunday For Creve Coeur April 4-7 in the Curtain Theater. Tickets may be purchased at the Fine Arts Center box office. All performances begin at 8 p.m. For further information, call 545-2511.

Soprano Mimi Ravetti will perform works by Gordon Getty—see artslines.

Softball struggles in split with Friars

Senior co-captain Tina Coffin concentrates during yesterday's doubleheader with Providence at NOPE.

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

The sun was shining and the temperature was a balmy 65 degrees. It was a perfect day for the University of Massachusetts softball team to play their home opener yesterday against Providence College.

That perfect day lasted all of six batters.

Providence, in their first game of the year pounded (hard) the Minutewomen by a 8-2 score before UMass could regroup (sort of) to take a 3-2 victory in the nightcap.

In Massachusetts first game in nine days after posting a 9-4 record in South Carolina, sophomore starter Cathy Reed was rocked for nine hits as UMass gave up eight runs, the most they have given up in over three years.

In the second game, UMass got nine hits but committed six errors as they hung on to win.

"Time after time, we burst our own bubble," head coach Elaine Sortino said. "We had four scoring opportunities (in the first game) but we shut ourselves down."

Sloppy baserunning killed at least three rallies.

While UMass could not convert on their opportunities, the Friars took everything they could get their hands on and ran with it.

In the first game, the Friars hit the ball every where as they raced to a 3-0 first inning and 7-0 sixth inning lead.

"This team in the past didn't believe that they could hit," Providence coach Mary Ann Palazzi said. "We are all very good hitters but they didn't believe in themselves. So we have spent most of our time working on hitting."

Three singles brought in three runs in the first inning and it stayed 3-0 until the top of the sixth when Providence (1-1) put together three singles and a 2 RBI double by Sue Alteri to take a 7-0 lead.

UMass, on the other hand, lofted a lot of shots into the outfield but most were caught. Co-captain Allyson Rioux (SS) has UMass' only two hits until the seventh when UMass put together two singles by freshman Debbie Cole and Carol Frattorolli to score two and make the score respectable.

In the second game, UMass (10-5) hit the ball but had problems holding onto the balls the Friars sent at them committing six errors. And Lynn Stockely gave up an uncharacteristic six walks, very high for her.

"We lacked sharpness on defense," Sortino said. "Both pitchers fell behind on their counts. They can't do that, it limits what they can throw."

Despite major UMass baserunning blunders in the second and fourth and the errors, it was 0-0 up to the fifth when Sally Maher stroked a 2 RBI single up the gap at second to score Cole and Ann Ringrose.

Janet Miller's RBI double that knocked in Frattorolli in the seventh gave UMass a 3-1 lead going into the top of the seventh.

The Friars pulled to within one after catcher Beth Talbott lost the ball in the sun but Stockley struck out Ann Malzowe and forced Karen Byrne to ground out with men on second and third to end the game.

Baseball opener today

The University of Massachusetts baseball team, which sported a 4-12 before yesterday's game at the University of Connecticut will have it's home opener today as they host Holy Cross at 2:30 p.m. at Lorden Field.

The game was originally scheduled to be played in Worchester.

Lots of teamwork on women's crew

By ELLEN HASKINS
Collegian Staff

HADLEY — It's 5:30 a.m. as the members of the University of Massachusetts varsity women's crew slide their 60-foot shell from its rack and slowly slip the shell out of the Hadley boathouse. Balancing the boat on their shoulders, the eight women move along the Connecticut River bank to the dock.

Commanding these maneuvers is the coxswain. All eight lift the shell up and over their heads and roll the boat onto the water. The curved hull gently skims the river's surface and the shell rests unstirred waiting for its crew.

Carrying the fiberglass craft from boathouse to river displays the teamwork necessary even before the crew embarks upon their water workout.

Practices which began last September are preparing the women for a peak performance this May at the Dad Vail Collegiate Nationals. Water training extends from September through October and resumes in early March.

During the months when New England's weather is too inhospitable to host river workouts, the women train on land six days a week. Weight lifting, stair and distance running, and tank rowing comprise the strength and endurance building program.

"Rowing demands a different kind of dedication," said coach Maria Mpelkas. "As an individual an oarswomen must be in optimum rowing condition and grasp the technique, but she must also think and react with her teammates."

The varsity eight, lightweight four and novice eight will all travel to Worcester's Lake Quinsigamund this Saturday to open the season with a double challenge against Connecticut College and the University of New Hampshire. Sunday's schedule find the women against Amherst College at 1:00 p.m. at their Hadley Boathouse.

Orioles, White Sox are favorites to repeat in AL

By SCOTT HOOD

Now, the American League can stand up ad shout. No more are they "the other league". They have the best division in baseball, top to bottom, more young stars, more aggressive ownership, and less phonyturf. The AL can crow. Hey, why not? It's been a long time.

Sparky Anderson, hitting grounders in spring training, hopes the Tigers make a run in the A.L. East.

BALTIMORE: A class organization. They possess few weaknesses on the field, an intelligent front office, and a non-meddling owner. The starting pitching, as usual, is simply the best with Mike Flanagan, Scott McGregor, Mike Boddicker, Jim Palmer, and Storm Davis. Throw in superstars, Cal Ripkin and Eddie Murray and you know why they're world champs.

DETRIOT: No club is better up the middle than the guys from Motown. Lance Parrish(C), Alan Trammell(SS), Lou Whitaker(2B) and Chet Lemon(CF) see to that. A solid starting pitching corps headed by Jack Morris and Dan Petry and a bullpen including recent addition Willie Hernandez and Aurelio Lopez makes the Tigers a definite threat to the Orioles' throne.

TORONTO: Don't look now but the Jays are moving up fast. The starting pitching is the team's strength. Dave Steib, Jim Clancy, Luis Leal, Jim Gott, and Doyle Alexander form the corps and are backed by an improved bullpen.

NEW YORK: What many people forget among the hysterics of 1983 is that this club won 91 games. However, George Steinbrenner is not one to stand still, as evidenced by his deals for Toby Harrah and Tim Foli and the signing of Phil Niekro.

MILWAUKEE: This team certainly has talent. But also age. Two of the starting pitchers are at least 35 (Don Sutton, Mike Caldwell), as is DH Ted Simmons and outfielder Ben Oglivie. One area not affected by age is the infield, which is ranked among the best with Cecil Cooper, Jim Gantner, Robin Yount, and Paul Molitor.

BOSTON: This unit could remind New Englanders of the 1977 crew that bashed and crashed their way to a second place finish. The offense, spearheaded by Jim Rice (39 HR, 126 RBI), AL Batting champ Wade Boggs, and Tony Armas will produce. However, the pitching, as usual, is a question mark and desperately needs a comeback by Dennis Eckersely.

CLEVELAND: Yes, they will probably finish in last again, but the situation is looking up, thanks to some promising youngsters obtained in off-season deals, namely Otis Nixon (one of the best prospects in the Yanks system), Brook Jacoby, and Brett Butler.

A.L. WEST:

CHICAGO: Favorites for one reason: pitching. This staff reigns supreme in the entire universe and includes Cy Young winner LaMarr Hoyt, Richard Dotson, Floyd Bannister, and Tom Seaver. The bullpen, with Britt Burns, Ron Reed, and Salome Barojas is above average.

OAKLAND: Talk about change. The A's management made Steinbrenner look like Mr. Conservative. The starting pitching has newcomers Larry Sorensen and Ray Burris joining holdovers Steve McCatty, Mike Warren, and Tim Conroy.

CALIFORNIA: The western branch office of the Red Sox. Offense is no problem with Rod Carew, Bobby Grich, Doug DeCinces, Fred Lynn, and Brian Downing. Look for a big comeback from Reggie Jackson.

TEXAS: They challenged for the first three months in '83, but were caught in the White Sox avalanche. Starting pitching is strong with Charlie Hough and Danny Darwin leading the way.

KANSAS CITY: Problems here? Nah. Only that four players were convicted of attempting to buy cocaine, and, that over the weekend, George Brett tore some ligaments and will miss six-to-eight weeks of action. There are also several new faces, including Steve Balboni, and Joe Beckwith.

MINNESOTA: It's tough to be a Twins fan today. The team is in a word, bad. One of their few legitimate major league players Gary Ward, was traded away to Texas. Left are Kent Hrbek, John Castino, Gary Gaetti, and Tom Brunansky.

SEATTLE: Believe it or not, they're optimistic in Final Four country. Gorman Thomas, Barry Bonnell, and Bob Kearney come over in trades, while two good rookies, Darnell Coles (3B) and Harold Reynolds (2B) will start in the infield.

Author speaks on anniversary of King's death

By JIM FINKLE
Collegian Staff

Martin Luther King, Jr. paid a heavy price for the civil rights victories he made possible during the 1960's, biographer Stephen B. Oates said yesterday at the University of Massachusetts.

Speaking on the 16th anniversary of the civil rights leader's assassination, Oates, a UMass professor and author of Let the Trumpet Sound, said the campaigns King led in Selma and Montgomery, Ala., were directly responsible for the passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Right Act of 1965.

"King realized the power of television," Oates said. "(During the Selma and Birmingham campaigns) he hoped to put on our television screens how ugly and how destructive segregation in the South really was."

Politicians began to support civil rights legislation after witnessing the brutality of the Southern police on television, Oates said. "The police attack dogs lunged right into our living rooms," he said.

Oates said President Jimmy Carter would not have been able to win the election of 1976 without the existence of the 1965 Voting Rights Act.

"Andrew Young delivered the black vote in the South to Carter and that is what he won with," he said.

Before the Voting Rights Act was passed, there were 103 black elected officials in the United States. Oates said the law gave the vote to more than 5,600 black officials possible.

"There is absolutely nobody in American political life today that behaves the way they did before blacks got the right to vote."

Bachrach addresses SGA, new officers sworn in

By IAN POLUMBAUM
Collegian Staff

Mass. State Sen. George Bachrach addressed last night's Student Government Association (SGA) Senate meeting on the need for rules reform in the state legislature, and Jim Keller and Rick Patrick were sworn in as the SGA's new co-presidents.

"There is no democracy in the state Senate,' said Bachrach, who represents Suffolk and Middlesex counties. "The president holds all of the cards."

He explained that the state senate's president (currently William Bulger) appoints all senate committees, hires all senator's assistants and even "controls all the senate's creature comforts" (i.e. new office equipment.) More importantly, Bachrach said, "The president controls legislative flow. Bills go into leadership committees and they never come out (for a vote) if he doesn't want them to."

The rules reform bill that Bachrach supports would require that all proposed legislation be distributed in print to every senator, and that the bills "be discharged from the committees so we get a chance to vote on them," he said.

An effort to put the rules reform bill on the Massachusetts ballot was recently struck down by the state Supreme Judicial Court.

"The problem is not William Bulger. The problem is systemic," Bachrach said. "Under the present system at the State House, only one or two people in each chamber are really in the game." Bachrach added that while the Mass. House of Representatives has made some progress toward rules reform, "the Senate lives in splendid isolation."

He also spoke of his opposition to raising the drinking age and to capital punishment, and his support for tenant rights and students' lobbying efforts to prevent tuition hikes.

Bachrach was invited to address the SGA by the Public Policy Committee, which gave him a 100 percent on his voting record regarding student-related issues. Public Policy member Stacy Roth presented the senator with a plaque for his "dedication to higher education." Following Bachrach's speech, former SGA co-presidents Charlene Allen and Tom Ahern swore in Keller and Patrick as their successors. The new presidents pledged to abide by the SGA constitution and "always to uphold student empowerment."

Charges 'arrogant bureaucracy'

Son of convicted spies criticizes FBI

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — The son of Ethel and Julius Rosenberg last night charged the FBI with "arrogant bureaucracy" in their resistance to release his parents' files in 1975.

Robbie Meeropol has filed lawsuits against the FBI and other government agencies, charging them with breaches of the Freedom of Information Act when he requested his parents' files in 1975. After many delays, he obtained 200,000 pages of documentation.

"Each step of the way there was a fight," Meeropol said, noting much of the material was "cleansed" and the government has refused to release an additional 100,000 pages of material it claims are "just duplicates of files they have already released to us."

Meeropol called government resistance to the Information Act "arrogant bureaucracy."

"Aside from being secret police they are also government terrorist agencies," he said. "They function on the basis of authority. A lot of times they blank out the files to show that they have the power to do so."

Meeropol said FBI field office budgets are based on the amount of material produced, and files have been found which reports of activities which never occurred. "It's a combination of reality and someone who's having a wild fantasy," he said.

Tim Flenk, a National Lawyer's Guild officer, spoke on a Guild lawsuit against the U.S. attorney general's office for "spying and disrupting the national organization almost since its inception in 1937."

Flenk said Guild offices have been burglarized, lists of members confiscated, and telephones wiretapped for the last 40 years. In the 1950s, classified as subversive, though it was later noted there was not enough evidence, he said.

Why this harrassment? "The Guild was working with groups that were advocating social change," Flenk said.

ALL THAT'S LEFT — Rescue workers search for survivors after two buildings caved in on Manhattan's Lower East Side. Two people were killed.

Two die in building disaster

NEW YORK — Two adjacent buildings undergoing renovation collapsed yesterday on Manhattan's Lower East Side, killing two people, injuring 19 others and reducing it to "a big pile of dirt," witnesses and authorities said.

The dead men apparently were two members of a construction crew pouring concrete inside the vacant brick buildings when they collapsed at 2:35 p.m., Fire Department officials said.

Last week, the Buildings Commission had ordered a safety inspection of the buildings.

"Everything just came down...It's a big pile of dirt," said Michael Cruz, an employee of a nearby store.

There were only 10 workers believed to be inside the buildings when they collapsed, said Police Commissioner Benjamin Ward.

The dead men and three injured workers were pulled from the rubble, said Fire Lt. Frank Martinez.

Of the 19 workers and bystanders who were injured, none was seriously hurt, said Jared Lebow, a spokesman for the city's Emergency Medical Service.

Reagan accuses critics of unethical mudslinging

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Reagan accused Demteratic critics of his administration's ethics yesterday night of violating the old American tradition that people are innocent until proven guilty.

"We're having an awful lot of guilt by accusation," he said.

"I reject the use of the word 'sleaze' " Reagan said at a news conference when asked about Democrats who cite what they call "the sleaze factor" in his administration. Walter Monale and Gary Hart have both accused Reagan of ignoring violations of ethical standards in his official family.

With the nomination of White House counselor Edwin Meese III as attorney general stalled in the Senate while a special prosecutor investigates allegations involving his personal finances, Reagan said, without mentioning Meese specifically, "I'm not going to take any action that is based on accusation without proof."

He said he also would take no actions on the basis of political expediency.

Democrats hope to capitalize on the issue. They have started using a televisionial emphasizing ethical questions raised against Reagan appointees.

"I believe the halls of government are as sacred as are temples of worship," the president said. He said he expects high standards of integrity among his people.

He was asked whether his proposal represents an attempt to get Congress to appropriate money for chemical weapons, which it has refused to do for years.

"I don't think the accusation would stand up," the president replied. "...We haven't produced any such weapons for 15 years. The Soviet Union has a massive arsenal and is ahead of us in many areas having to do with chemical warfare."

"They the Soviets must know that the alternative to banning them is to then face the fact that we are going to build a deterrent.

But, he said, he also respects the old American tradition that "you are innocent until proven guilty."

"We are having an awful lot of guilt by accusation."

Reagan opened his news conference with an announcement that Vice President George Bush will go to Geneva in two weeks with a new American proposal aimed at breaking stalled 40-nation United Nations negotiations on a treaty banning development, production and stockpiling of chemical wapons.

Reagan said this country is developing "bold and sound" means of verifying compliance with a treaty. the United States will propose a worldwide ban on the weapons; the Soviet Union has proposed a ban applying to Europe.

Two Lynn policemen acquitted of rape

NEWBURYPORT- Two policemen accused of drugging a 21-year-old welfare mother with rum and raping her in an empty bar were found innocent of all charges yesterday. The bar owner was acquitted of charges that he aided the attack.

The Lynn Police officers, Edward Jackson, 31 and Unree Poellnitz Jr., 34, showed no emotion as the verdict was read in Essex Superior Court.

Stephen Harden, owner of The Olde Ox Bar in Lynn, lowered his head and wept.

The jury of seven men and five women deliberated for two days.

During the trial, the woman testified the officers raped her after getting her so drunk she passed out. The defense argued the woman "was the aggressor" and invited sex with the men after an evening of bar-room drinking and flirting.

Trucker arrested after vehicular terrorism spree

ANDOVER - A tractor-trailer driver careened down a 30-mile stretch of interstate highway north of Boston yesterday in an 18-wheeler sideswiping cars and forcing them off the road, but he was arrested after a motorist followed him to a New Hampshire convenience store, police said.

At least four people received minor injuries during the hour-long spree, according to authorities.

The trouble began about 8:30 a.m. when state police began receiving reports of an 18-wheeler driving erratically, crossing the median strip, sideswiping other vehicles and forcing cars onto the highway shoulder. Police said the truck rammed the back of another car, sending its three occupants to the hospital.

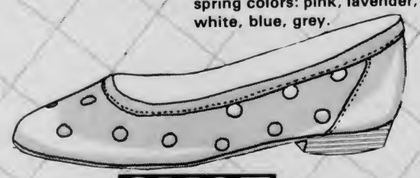
"I really thought it was the end today," said Susan Hagigeorges, 28, of Methuen, who was driving north on I-495 on her way to work at Wang Laboratories Inc. in Lowell when she saw the truck in her rearview mirror.

Homosexuals can hold parade on chosen day

NORTHAMPTON - A Superior Court judge has issued a preliminary injunction barring the City of Northampton from stopping a planned March by 1,500 gay and lesbian rights advocates on Saturday, May 11.

The city, maintaining the parade would cause massive traffic jams if held through downtown on a Saturday, had issued the group a parade permit for the following day.

But Archer Battista, an attorney with the Civil Liberties Union, told Judge George Keady during arguments last week that the homosexual rights activists didn't want to march on Sunday - Mothers Day - because "There is no audience on a Sunday."



"A march on Sunday is really a hollow gesture," he maintained.

Women's Studies at UMass may start doctoral program

LAURA KOESTER
Collegian Correspondent

The Women's Studies Program at the University of Massachusetts is considering establishing the first doctoral program on women's studies in the country.

Dale Melcher, professional staff member of the program said, "Although there are other post-baccalaureate degrees which focus on women, they are in specific areas like women's history. This would be the first inter-disciplinary Ph.d in women's studies."

Judith Branzberg, women's studies professor at UMass and Trinity College in Hartford, said, "The investigation would involve bringing in academic program consultants and release time for faculty to compile statistics on the numbers of interested students, placement possibilities for graduates, potential faculty members, etc."

Cathy Portugese, Director of the program, said, "For over a year we have been informally consulting with outside centers who do research on women. We are now ready to formalize that process." She said the investigation has "active support" from Murray Schwartz, dean of the School of Humanities and Fine Arts. The program under the Bachelor's Degree in Individual Concentration (BDIC) program in the fall of 1974. "The establishment of black studies here and at other universities paved the way for women's studies as an independent discipline" Melcher, who has been with the program since 1974 said.

Although the women's studies program continued to be part of the BDIC program until 1979, Melcher said, "We have, except in the very beginning, always had functional autonomy."

Melcher said, "The women's movement was obviously the context for the establishment of the program." A "joint effort" on by female faculty, working with the Committee on the Status of Women, the Everywomen's Center and undergraduate and graduate students who were researching women helped create the program.

The program was begun to provide support for female faculty members, and students who were doing research on women in their own separate disciplines.

"Women doing women's studies were at first concerned with uncovering biases and exposing holes, areas in which women were ignored and forgotten" Melcher said. "At first the work was remedial, finding women in history and filling in gaps."

Now, Melcher said "There is no area that cannot be looked at from a feminist perspective. Feminist scholarship has become more conclusive and expansive."

High school counselors praise university and area colleges

By SANDRA KONOPKA
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts is working to expand its nationwide student recruiting after participating in a Five College national Counselors Convention this week.

High school guidance counselors from across the nation and Canada visited the Five College area from Monday to Wednesday, participating in campus tours and academic seminars while meeting with students and faculty.

"It's an opportunity for us to make initial contacts in parts of the country that we have never actually visited. For us that is very exciting," admissions director of freshman David G. Taggart said.

"The goal was to introduce the counselors to Five College area opportunities," Taggart said, "and so far all we've heard were good reports."

Counselors from Massachusetts said UMass compares very favorably with other schools, and the school's reputation is improving.

"Based on my visits to most colleges, UMass is by far the most beautiful, and the buildings are attractive," said Barnstable High School counselor Al Lawson.

"Students that come back and participate in college information sessions say that they get everything they want out here, but you need self-discipline to survive," Lawson said.

Timothy Kinne, a 1963 UMass graduate and a Great Barrington High School counselor said that he tries to convince students not to be intimidated by the University's size.

"Counselors have to fight parent's misconceptions about the school, and the media doesn't help much. But once students get here they rarely leave," Kinne said.

James Fulmer, a counselor from Montreal, Canada, said he was very impressed with the University.

"The University's buildings are better than ours in Montreal," Fulmer said. "The colleges were very impressive and the University has a good reputation in Canada."

Andrew Zeedick, a counselor at Mt. Lebanon High School in Pittsburgh, Pa. said the best thing about the Five College area is the diversity.

New officers elected to UPC

Former Student Government Association (SGA) treasurer Eric Nitzsche was elected Business Manager of Union Program Council (UPC) Tuesday.

Along with Nitzsche Talent Coordinator Lance Foley and Production Manager Andrew Porter, were both re-elected.

Nitzsche, who will be in charge of finance for all UPC shows, said he was "sick and tired of the SGA and I think UPC is a dynamite organization."

Foley said the role of Talent Coordinator involves, "talking with agents, processing shows and planning new shows."

Porter is responsible for, running the production of the shows, lighting, sound and various other chores.

When asked about the upcoming spring concert, Foley said, "We haven't made any firm decision yet. We'll be deciding on groups in the next week or two."

UPC is the largest student-run production and promotion organization in the country, with more than 300 members, grossing over $250,000 last year.

Eight months late , Index still not out

By JOANN GALLO
Collegian Correspondent

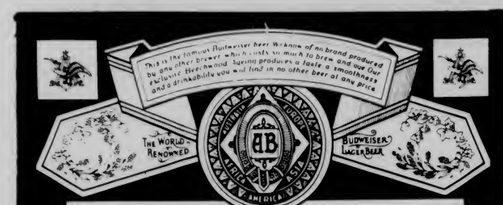
The 1983 Index is eight months behind schedule, and it is unclear when it will be produced for distribution, according to Index staff members.

Index Editor in Chief, Kevin Fachetti, said, "There is no guarantee...the publisher won't tell us." Fachetti said he hopes the book will be ready in May.

The final deadline to Josten's yearbook company was July 7, 1983, but the book was not handed in until March 1984. The contract was then broken, so "if they get a spot for it, they'll print it up," said Fachetti.

The 1983 Editor in Chief Mike Altneu said the 280 page book missed the deadline mainly because of a 60 page delay from the sports section. He also said, "The costs will increase beyond our budget because the delays pushed us into the next fiscal year."

Bob Jenal, assistant business manager of the Student Activities Office said, "traditionally, the late deadlines have increased costs (for the book) between $2,000 to $3,000, because it cuts into Josten's production schedule."



The 1982 Index came out last spring but distribution did not begin until last month because of problems with staff organization which began in October 1983. Current Index Managing Editor Cindy Orlowski said. It is now being distributed slowly to the students who did not pay beforehand through alumni magazines, Fachetti said.

The 1984 Index however, has met its first two deadlines and is 50 percent done.

Oates cited George Wallace, Governor of Alabama, as an example of the effect of the legislation. Wallace, famous for his call for "Segregation now, segregation tomorrow, segregation forever," is a changed man, Oates said.

"In January (of 1984), Wallace said "Segregation is dead in the South. It probably deserved to die," Oates said. "The practical realities of the world and the changes wrought by King and the civil rights movement have caused him to act differently, at least in public."

But King had to pay a huge price for the impact he left on American politics. "His sufferings were perhaps immeasurable," Oates said.

"He felt guilty about the leadership role thrust upon him. He felt guilty because people wanted him to be perfect."

King's supporters referred to him as "Little Lord Jesus," Oates said. "They thrust a halo upon his head."

"He could not even find a quiet place to sit and eat without being hounded for his autograph or worrying that Andy Young would whisper in his ear that that man over there might be the one with the gun."

King felt that he was always giving to others without being able to take something in return, Oates said. "At night in lonely places he found at least one way to take in," Oates said.

"He strayed from his wife and Mrs. King knew about it," he said. "His own congregation knew about it because King confessed it to them."

Presidents John F. Kennedy and Lyndon B. Johnson had extra-marital affairs during their presidencies, Oates said. "But there is no record of prodigious guilt felt by those individuals."

Oates praised the United States for recognizing King's birthday as a national holiday. "King is on his way to being mythologized," Oates said. "That's fine. If we are going to mythologize Washington and Lincoln, let's mythologize King as well."

Conservative group plans to sponser debates and talks

By DANIEL SOBEL
Collegian Staff

A group of students who have recently formed a new Registered Student Organization (RSO) will give their first presentation Thursday with a speaker on contemporary conservative thought.

The speaker, Robert Hessen, will give a lecture entitled, "Why Does Socialism Continue to Appeal to Anyone?"

The Thomas Jefferson Society was formed to present "an opposing view to the general leftist ideals on campus," the society's president, Jonathan F. Jameson said. "We are intent to make the organization a mouthpiece for contemporary conservative thought."

An author and columnist, Hessen is also a senior research fellow and deputy archivist at the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution and Peace at Stanford University.

Jameson said Hessen believes the socialist system is inherently flawed because its leaders are idealistic, not realists and because the system cannot function in societies with large populations.

The group, has a 21 member following so far, Jameson said. The society plans to discuss issues such as Central America, the arms race and economic policy later in the semester.

Jameson, a freshman economics major, said some of the members of the club would like to debate with some of the professors of the economics department. "The majority of the economics professors are dug out of the radical political paradigm," he said.

The society was named after Thomas Jefferson because he was an educator and a humanitarian. "Jefferson said people should hear both sides of an issue and this is how we like to model ourselves," Jameson said.

Legal program stresses public's rights

MARY-SHEILA LOUGHLIN
Collegian Staff

In order to help people whose rights have been violated the District Attorney's Office in Hampshire County offers a program to help ensure citizens their civil rights, according to the Assistant District Attorney.

Nancy Dusek-Gomez, Hampshire County Assistant District Attorney on Civil Rights, spoke yesterday at the University of Massachusetts about the role of the District Attorney's office in enforcing civil rights, meeting and environmental laws.

"We're trying to get word out that we're not only the people who enforce traffic tickets and prosecute bank robbers," Gomez said.

She said their program, the Public Rights Division, is a part of the broader Public Protection Bureau that was established by the District Attorney's office.

The Open Meeting law and Public Records statutes facilitate public access to government operations on the state, county and municipal levels.

"The open meeting law gives the public access to how decisions are made," Gomez said.

She said community education is offered by the division's staff to increase knowledge of the Open Meeting Law among the public and their elected and appointed officials.

Gomez said complaints alleging a violation of civil rights are assessed and investigated.

The office may also refer the complaint to another agency or a private attorney.

The assessment, Gomez said, is based on the nature of the discrimination and the type of relief sought.

"We like to see ourselves as a referral agency as well as one that handles complaints," Gomez said.

The District Attorney's office does not collect punitive damages for the victim," she said, unless it is medical expenses incurred because of the damage done. But we don't discourage people from civil actions when they can get punitive damages," Gomez said.

The Human Relations Committee which sponsored this event is composed of representatives from different service agencies, including the Dean of Students Office, Public Safety, Everywoman's Center, Residential Services Staff, and the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy.

"Behavior that interferes with a person's rights is not going to be tolerated," Gomez said.

★FBI

was the third speaker, describing the implications of psychological profiles compiled by the FBI in the arson investigation on campus last semester.

Such profiles, he said, "are never supposed to be utilized to make an arrest," but (of a Crampton House resident assistant) "the reason they made the arrest was because the FBI profile said it (the arson epidemic) was going to escalate to a grand finale."

DiMare said informants told police the student had planned a "going away party", was going to lace the punch, wire the dormitory and blow it up. "They literally believed they had a Jonestown on their hands," he said.

The psychological profile, linked notes found prior to some fires to the arsonist, and the student's handwriting was identified by a sample signature but no handwriting analysis was made before the arrest.

After the student had been jailed, released on bail, suspended from the University, fired from her job and permitted on campus only with a University escort or her mother to finish her semester's coursework, the analysis was completed. It did not match up, the charges were dropped, the notes were determined not to be related to the fires and a janior charged with writing them.

"(The student) is not the first case they (the FBI) have screwed up," DiMare said.

A DAY AT THE SEA ...

A photo essay by Andy Heller and Pam Madnick

Collegian photographers Andy Heller and Pam Madnick took advantage of a sunny day over spring break to capture these seaside images. The towns selected for their salty flavor were Hull and Scituate Massachusetts.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Just drinking his life away

Many people have problems with drinking — that is, they don't drink heavily enough or often enough, or enthusiastically enough. You'd think such people would understand that they can't possibly have a well-rounded college experience unless they develop the proper attitude toward alcohol.

I've tried my damnedest to convince these folks that their academic development would be greatly enhanced by drinking a beer, or six or seven, as often as possible. I've offered them cans, bottles and mugs at all hours of the night and day.

I've even tried to roust them out of bed to play Mexican, in the hope that they'd see the light. But they always make some excuse like, "I've got a midterm at eight in the morning."

Ian Polumbaum

Some students aren't grateful enough for what the breweries and their advertisers have done to improve our lives. Who can turn down the opportunity to get free articles of clothing festooned with the brand names and logos that symbolize our college years?

One recent Friday, I felt envious of tall guys- not because women might notice them first, but because the Bud Man at the Blue Wall happy hour gave everyone over six feet free Bud hats. Then I was jealous of people under five feet; they got them too.

Finally the Miller rep there offered High Life T-shirts to anyone born on a holiday. I said my birthday was July 4th (I lied), and got an essential addition to my collection.

I've been here two semesters and I already have six Bud shirts, three "Moosehead U." stickers, twelve hats sporting various brands, four Miller T-shirts and lots of real cool mugs and stuff. Did you know that some people spend four years here and come away with nothing, not even a poster? What a waste of the best years of one's life.

Beer companies do more than give us emblems to wear. They sponsor everything from rock and roll shows to intramural sports events. When we buy a keg, they're kink enough to give us cups with their logo on them in case we forget what brand we're drinking.

Brand names aren't always blatantly plastered over everything. But what would a Ski Club membership card be worth without that Anheuser-Busch mountain design on it? When I open my wallet, I like this subtle reassurance- a reminder that none of my problems can't be solved by a beer, or six or seven.

Of course, there are some things we can't all have. I'd sell my grandmother, if only I could own a neon "Lite" sign like the one some lucky devil has hanging in his frat window. But for now, I'll settle for the free posters available in liquor stores and in this newspaper.

Thanks to Calgary's "Spring Break" poster, women have something to drool at too. Sure, the buttalo on the beach looks downright ludicrous, but how about those bronze musclemen in the background?

Last semester, I found an authentic velvet-texture giant Budweiser label poster blowing around in a parking lot. I pity the fool who lost it. I wouldn't part with it, not for a million baseball cards. It's a simple, powerful icon, facilitating nightly prayer to the red and white Bud god.

Some people still don't get my point. They shake their heads at my closet full of empties, my ceiling-high stacks of spent cases, and the keg caps proudly displayed on my wall. They've hot this absurd idea that there are better ways to spend one's undergraduate years.

Will they never learn?

Rape jokes are not funny

This past Saturday night I experienced a few hellish minutes of very real fear and anger. At around 11:00 p.m., I stepped on the elevator in my residence hall on the fifth floor to go to a party on the seventeenth floor. Two males entered the otherwise empty elevator with me. The elevator then stopped on the tenth floor where six more males boarded. As the doors shut, I began to view this as a potentially dangerous situation for myself, but trustingly I decided to remain on the elevator.

As we rode up, the male nearest me and also nearest the button panel, reached over and pushed the emergency stop button. He then exclaimed, "Okay, rape time." And then all eight of them stood there and laughed. They all laughed. So consumed was I by panic and anger that I was speechless — I couldn't think. I finally managed to tell the one who had spoken that he was a riot. He looked around, said he was only kidding, and pulled the button back out. The elevator began again. He had only been 'kidding.'

I guess that I was supposed to find it amusing. But the fact that I possess human decency prevents me from finding it anything but repulsive.

At the time, I was at a loss for anything to say to the little boys in the elevator, but a few things have since come to mind:

First of all, how dare you? How dare you make me feel so helpless, and then laugh at my helplessness? How dare you laugh at my fear? Think long and hard about what you did. Ask yourselves why you did that to me and, perhaps more importantly why you would ever think it was funny. Why didn't one of you have the strength of character, the human decency to speak up? I would have, but I was too busy feeling scared to death and even more angry.

Question your strength of character; be ashamed. Rape is a violent crime, and you laughed at the thought of eight of you threatening me with that crime. Do you feel good about yourselves? Know that what you did is wrong and unforgiveable, and learn why. And, never do it again.

Hitchhikers are everyday people

The other day I got a ride on Route 2 from a guy who said the only reason he had picked me up was that his son had to thumb. Then I got a ride from somebody who never picks up hitchhikers because she is scared, but did not know where she was going and I was the only person around not in a car. Then I had to wait 45 minutes to get a ride. What is it about hitchhikers that makes people uptight?

Many people feel that hitchhikers are out there to rob you, rape you, steal your hubcaps, smell up your car, bum money, food, and maybe your life off you. It is true that these things happen, but they are far from the majority of cases. If you see somebody with a duffel bag and a sign on a lonely stretch of Route 2, the odds are pretty good that they are going somewhere and are not there to harass you. There are far easier ways to get kicks, even weird ones, than standing in the rain on Interstate 495 outside of Lawrence at midnight. Somebody on North Pleasant Street at 1 a.m. is probably mostly interested in getting home or to 7 Os for last call, than harassing his/her ride.

How come we never hear about the problems hitchhikers have. If you are driving along the road and see somebody thumbing you have some time to look at them. A little experience in the big bad world (something not taught at college) can enable one to determine a lot about somebody, by what they wear and do.

Of course if you determine wrongly your life could be in danger, but what the hell, it is already in serious danger being out on the highways and bi-ways of America, cruising along in 1500-2500 plus pounds of metal, rubber, and bad styling. Fifty-thousand Americans slaughter each other on the roads each year. Thousands are maimed. The chances of you getting biffed by a hitchhiker as opposed to two people necking and not watching where the wheel is going, or a drunk belching his/her way into oblivion, are small.

But if you are hitchhiking you cannot make somebody who has stopped to pick you up answer 20 questions while you determine if they are, like really marvey or groady to the max. You have to take what you get, which is often not good. I have been asked if I would be interested in making it with my ride and his wife, if I would be interested in going to a ride's house to watch dirty movies, had a woman drive down the New Hampshire Turnpike at 70 mph and show me how she can drive and roll a joint at the same time while staying in one lane. She managed all but the one lane part. I have had people pick me up and tell about the five pounds of weed they have in the trunk, why they have no passenger door handle, and how much acid they just took while swigging Jack Daniels. What did I do to deserve this abuse? I just want to go somewhere. If you are a woman and are thumbing you have a special set of problems to contend with, namely lots of jerky men who think they are such down studs that they can and have the right to make a pass at any woman, just because she can't afford some truck that is jacked up 20 feet off the ground.

Most of us do not thumb to find ourselves or contemplate our navels in the sun on Rt. 202. People thumb because they have no money or no car. Round trip to Boston is about $20. If I could afford to put my gas guzzling vehicle on the road it would cost me about $15 in gas and oil, not to mention depreciation and regular costs.

Well I have to leave and go play pool, then throw some things in a duffel bag. I have to go to Boston tomorrow. Unfortunately nobody who reads this paper will be able to give me a ride since I am leaving early in the morning. But for future reference, I am the guy with the yellow sign that has black lettering. The next time you see somebody with their thumb out, pick them up. It might be you someday.

A world without caffeine? Never

Everything was just dandy last Monday morning. The sun was shining down on UMass/Amherst, I was prepared to give my upcoming oral report, and a Fort Lauderdale sunburn was flaking off my shoulders. Furthermore, my writing class ended early, leaving me enough time to gulp down a can of soda (or tonic, for you Bay State natives), before hitting NOPE to do a few laps. Yep, life was pretty damned decent.

I slid a couple of quarters into the machine in the Student Union Building, and smacked the Sugar-Free Diet Sprite button. Usually, this grammatical sleaziness would have bothered me; aren't the words "sugarfree" and "diet" redundant? But, stricken as I was with spring fever, not even the slaughter of the English language bothered me.

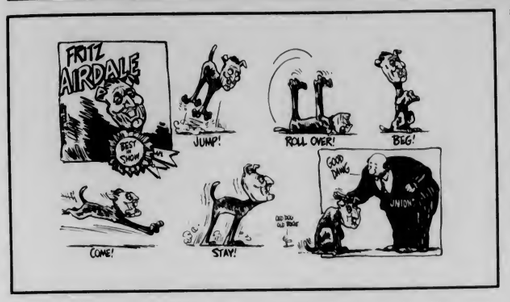
Then it happened. The can clunked out of the machine. I didn't mind that it contained NutraSweet, and I was even looking forward to those 12 ounces of great lymon taste. I did mind that the refreshing, carbonated slime was hailed as "caffeine-free."

Elizabeth Luciano

I like caffeine, and I resent the Coca-Cola Bottling Company for depriving me of it. After a late night studying or watching David Letterman, how else am I supposed to get that get-up-and-go? From thimble-sized cups of D.C. coffee? Don't make me laugh.

Caffeine-free beverages are pointless. They're a waste of time and money. Why throw away 50 cents to lug a Pepsi to class and fall asleep? Why guzzle down a steaming, black cup of instant Folger's without caffeine? Sorry, but those flavor crystals alone just don't do it for me.

What's even worse is that manufacturers are actually patting themselves on the back for producing those boring, lifeless liquids.



"Never had it, never will!" Seven-Up brags. Come on, people. That's not something to be proud of. Don't let their colorful cans and gaudy graphics fool you. The Sunkist volleyball players would not be bopping around the beach without the benefit of caffeine. They'd be napping.

These are those who claim that caffeine is a drug. Damned right, it's a drug. It's my personal, all-time favorite drug. Perhaps this seems pharmaceutically naive, but caffeine is cheap, legal, and abundant. So those of you who are sneering caffeine put that in your pipes and puff on it.

Caffeine is my vice, and I'm proud of it. I'm happy being hyper, and I hope all of Robert Young's fans drown in vats of boiling Sanka. I really do.

Letters

Unjust criticism

To the Editor,

In her letter March 4, Jeanette Maillet unnecessarily attacked the Collegian's Women's News editor, Miriam Zoll. Maillet mistakenly asserts that Ms. Zoll meant that abortion is a kind of birth control when she started her column with: "People who enjoy having sex and don't plan on having children in the near future will probably be interested to learn that our so-called "liberal" state is trying to eliminate state funded abortion."

This statement was made in reference to the fact that no form of birth control is 100 percent effective. The option of terminating a pregnancy should be available in the case of not only pregnancy because of rape or incest, but also in the case of birth control failure.

Maillet uses a tenuous inference to launch an attack on Zoll's journalistic responsibility and accuracy.

This kind of attack, where a simple correction would have been enough, is unfair. Ms. Zoll, as a feminist and a member of the Collegian Board of Editors, needs support from the feminist community, not undermining and sloppily reasoned attacks.

Double standard

To the Editor,

I am writing to express my concern about an event that was held Thursday, March 29, during "Gay Awareness Week." I was denied entrance to a slide show simply because I am a "man." I would like to point to a few reasons why I feel the coordinators of this event acted irresponsibly to the university community.

Although the slide show had been advertised "for women only", it was held in the Campus Center. The Campus Center was built and is maintained with fees paid by members of both sexes, and therefore this discriminatory policy was inappropriate in such a public place. Secondly, in my opinion, this event did not foster better understanding between gays and straights, or men and women, but only contributed to certain negative stereotypes. This was definitely not the intent of the people who organized "Gay Awareness Week."

As seen by this event, sex discrimination is "in the eyes of the beholder" and a definite double standard was in evidence Thursday night. The coordinators of this presentation owe the university an apology for their discriminatory policy and for their contribution to the polarization of the sexes. They proved that discriminatory views are sometimes held by those who claim to oppose discrimination.

The difference is church and state

To the Editor,

The recent controversy over school prayer is just as important for the dialogue it creates as for its actual outcome. I was relieved to see Reagan's proposal shot down (although it was a close call). I am an intern at Amherst High School and each morning a moment of silence is offered. To institute vocal prayer in the classroom is a blatant violation of free choice in this moment, the freedom of how to pray or how not to pray.

The new proposal in Congress which would allow for students to set up religious activities in high school rooms, and deny Federal and state funds to systems which wouldn't comply, illustrates the breadth of this issue. As Senator Hatfield of Oregon pointed out, it is "ridiculous to deny students the right to study about Jesus Christ when they can study Karl Marx." To further complicate things, I think these religiously orthodox legislators and presidents should keep in mind that not all religious activity is the institutional type they have in mind.

What would Mr. Reagan think if the religious verbalizations he endorses had a strong Buddhist tone, including the teachings of non-violence, and all the eligible high school students refused to register for the draft? Does he realize that the American Bishops consider his nuclear arms' policies immoral? Religion, it should be remembered, doesn't only mean Johnny and Mary reciting monotones in Sunday school.

Criticism of funds seen as unfair

To the Editor,

When I began reading the letters column in Tuesday's Collegian I thought I was reading a continuation of the April Fool's edition. But Kevin L. Eachus was in fact raising concerns he felt were quite serious. He was protesting the use of his student activities for "gay dances, lesbian encounter groups, and other deviant activities."

Kevin, as someone who pays for part of your education with my tax dollars (through the money ROTC gives you), I am appalled at your ignorance. The way student funds, even taxes, work is to pay for a variety of interests of a variety of groups of people. For instance, even though I am aware of health issues, I think joggers are insane; yet I would gladly contribute some of my student activities money to a jogging club. Further, you are misinformed on PGA dances: they are fundraisers, so do not use up student funds.

What are these "Lesbian encounter groups" you talk about? The way you phrase it, it sounds as if you were thinking of orgies. The reality is far more mundane. Rap groups for lesbians, gay men, and bisexuals tend to focus on our love (not lust) for someone, and our fear that we will be persecuted for that love. I am deeply disturbed that you find such things more perverse than training yourself for institutionalized murder.

The unfairness that others inflict

To the Editor,

For three years I've worn the uniform of the U.S. Air Force, and for three years I've taken both verbal and physical abuse. Today I reached my limit. While walking to the Morrill bus stop I was hit by a snowball. When I turned to confront my attacker he had the dignity to turn and run away.

In the ROTC program we are instructed to ignore people who feel the need to get their kicks by abusing ROTC cadets. In this case all I wanted to do was discuss why the man felt he had the right to attack me. Apparently he thought the adult thing to do was to avoid discussion and run home. I'm sure that this person felt that by this violent act he was protesting the use of violence. This, to me, is a hypocrisy.

As an AFROTC cadet I acknowledge as well as support the right of people to express their opinion and to protest what they feel is wrong. This does not mean that they reserve the right to verbally or physically attack an individual. I, personally, have never criticized a person for the career or lifestyle they have chosen to pursue. All I expect is the same consideration.

The verbal and physical abuses that I and other cadets have encountered while wearing the uniform of the U.S. military have done nothing more than to demonstrate the ignorance, immaturity, and hypocrisy of those who chose to inflict those abuses.

Counseling service is there to help

To the Editor,

Earlier this year, in the midst of emotional turmoil, I decided to try out the student counseling service. In my pessimistic frame of mind, I anticipated the scenario to go something like this: I'd walk in for an appointment and everyone would scrutinize me as though I were really screwed up. I'd have to tell the woman behind the desk why I was there and the people in the waiting room would all hear it. As I waited, someone I knew would inevitably walk by and see me and wonder what was wrong with me. And, of course, I'd be assigned to see a psychiatrist who would label me with some diagnosis and make me feel like I really was crazy.

Feeling terrified and vulnerable, I managed to get myself into the building (after walking by it twice to think about it.) Gratefully, I noticed a bathroom on the way in where I could relieve my anxious bladder and "stall" a little longer. Finally, lacking other means of procrastination, I ventured into the office.

One by one, my preconceived expectations were proven to be figments of my fearful imagination. The windows of the waiting room were glazed so that bypassers couldn't see in. The pleasant woman behind the desk was professionally discreet in asking about an appointment, and gave me a form on which to confidentially describe my reasons for being there. A list of descriptions of the therapists and their backgrounds and orientations was made available, and I was able to choose the person I wanted to see. (And I would even be able to switch therapists if there turned out to be a personality clash.)

The process of going to the counseling service for help was not unlike the process of therapy once I got there. Taking the risks of trying something new, making the commitment to it, trusting the persons involved, and even letting my friends in on it were all worth the gains in my self-awareness, self-esteem, and peace of mind. The counseling service staff made themselves available, took things seriously, maintained confidentiality, and offered their help in a nonthreatening way. I think they deserve a lot of credit for providing their services in a sensitive, skillful, and beneficial manner.

More wasted time

To the Editor,

I was appalled and offended by the recent letter to the editor by Kevin L. Eachus who strongly protests Lesbian and Gay Awareness Week. His letter has made me realize even more the great importance of such a week, and reminded me of how much further we have to go to rid our society of such ignorance and bigotry. For him to label gay dances and lesbian encounter groups as "deviant activities" angers me.

Let me say also that the cost of funding Lesbian and Gay Awareness Week was miniscule. Compare it to the amount of tax money that is wasted each year by the U.S. Army (of which Kevin Eachus is a member), to investigate and discharge gay and lesbian people, simply because they are gay. It "grieves and and angers" me to know this happens with the tax money we all pay.

Since maybe he did indirectly help to finance in a small way Lesbian and Gay Awareness Week, why then didn't he show up at any of the workshops? What's the matter Kevin? Does your education like so many other people's, stop when you get out of classes each day?

A hateful boy?

To the Editor,

I have two comments to make about Kevin Eachus's letter (April 4). First of all, just think of the millions of hard working gays and lesbians who pay taxes which support our military system and its R.O.T.C. program. "Gay-Lesbian Awareness week" is clearly underfunded in comparison and is much less of an economic burden on our society. Secondly, as an American citizen, I find it scary that such a socially, emotionally, and sexually immature boy is trusted with weapons and will be put in leadership positions within our military system. Such a hateful boy cannot be trusted to defend our society and its diverse population.

Expensive act of needless violence

To the Editor,
Attention Webster Residents:

To the person or persons involved in throwing beer bottles off the east side balcony and screaming oppressive and disgusting remarks at approximately 2 a.m. on Friday night (March 30).

I want to let you know that your act of violence and vandalism is costing me over $200 dollars out of my own pocket to replace my windshield because you were stupid and immature enough to throw beer bottles (or anything for that matter) off the balcony. Your disgusting violence and thoughtless act has made me question the kind of poeple who try to peacefully live with each other in this dorm, our home. You make me question what it is to be a human being, not to have any common sense, passion, or respect for the resident's personal property.

It is because of people like you who commit senseless and harmful acts of violence that the East Side Residential System continually contemplates whether to close the balconies off to the residents of Orchard Hill. We do not want to take away privileges, but you have showed us that you do not understand or respect the responsibility, safety, and well-being of our environment.

You have really helped to make my last semester as a graduating senior less than memorable but an expensive one.

The National Bestseller That Takes You Inside America's Most Powerful Law Firms

"I have never read any book that more effectively captures the essence of lawyering in a great firm on a great case."
—Neal Johnston, The New York Times Book Review

"Vividly describes the behind-the-scenes stories of major cases, bringing to life the spectacular gambits and inhuman toil... first rate... with episodes that should make talented third-year law students blanch."
—Newsweek

"Who will read the book? Every lawyer in these named law firms. Who should read the book? Every lawyer who is thinking about joining one of these law firms. Offers disturbing insights on the partnerships of eight nationwide law firms... in plain English—not legalese."
—San Francisco Chronicle

"A book that not only delights those who have never seen the inside of a corporate law firm, but rings true for those who have devoted their lives to these firms as well."
—The New Republic

"Stewart has created a book which is half thriller, half moral primer. Airing dirty laundry as well as legal strategy, Stewart's book reads something like The Brethren, but seems better documented and less voyeuristic. The Partners has a powerful sense of drama. The book is very hard to put down."

live wire

Bonnie Raitt returns to the area. See Live Wire.

Just when you think this column is gone for good, it pops back up. Kinda like a bad penny. Or a DC lunch. Or herpes. Whatever.

I guess that the big music-oriented news this week involves the untimely death of Marvin Gaye. It's hard to get past the absurdities of a talented man being shot to death by his own father over an insurance policy. He will be missed by many.

Echo and the Bunnymen were surprisingly fantastic last Friday night at the Channel. Can't say about Saturday's show in NYC, though. Don't get me wrong - I love the band; it's just that I almost died of boredom at their Channel gig this past summer. Is Ian really a heroin addict, or does it just seem that way...

Congrats to all you brave troopers who camped out for Elvis tix. Should be a great show.

Unlike the Clash at the Worcester Centrum, which should be a joke. (Rock the cash box...) God, and I thought they sold out in a big way when they played Orphium-sized halls a couple of years ago. Anyhow, if you haven't grown to despise Joe Strummer too much and want to actually see the Clash in what might almost pass for a club, then you might want to check them out at Hartford's Agora Ballroom on the 25th. Just think - you could get drunk, jump up and down in front of the stage and pretend the whole thing is a scene from Rude Boy...

Moving on to the impending weekend. This weekend's best live music bet isn't even happening in the valley (I certainly hope you weren't surprised). The Wipers will be playing tonight and tomorrow night at the Rat in Boston. Now, we're talking two nights in a place that's only two hours away, so there's no reason to miss these guys.

A little closer to home, the Blue Wall will be featuring Moving Parts tonight. Sass will be at the Wok, The Radiators are at the Nail, and the Sighs are downstairs at Sheehans.

Tomorrow night's pick is the Modern English/Fleshtones show at Smith College. As of this writing, there are still tickets, which can be had just by accosting one of the friendly salespeople at the University Store record department and giving him or her some money. If only all life were so simple.

Also on Friday, the Nail will feature Girls Night Out, and Sheehans will host the Transformers.

Ronnie Spector, ex-Ronnette, will be at the Nail on Saturday night. this promises to be a good time for those of you who appreciate a good "blast from the past."

A couple of decent shows coming up this week: Jorma Koukonen will play two shows at the Iron Horse on Tuesday night, and Bonnie Raitt will be at the Rusty Nail on Wednesday.

No Live Wire Trivia, so sorry to those of you who suffered through the whole column just to get to the trivia question so you could answer it and win lots of cash and prizes. Better luck next time.

Extraordinary and extrasensory

If you're looking for something a little out of the ordinary to do this evening, why not suspend your belief in the concrete and head over to Mahar for a few hours of ESP and hypnosis with UMass student, David Dipietro.

Dipietro, who claims 90 percent accuracy in ESP, says that the show "isn't a magic show at all." During the first portion of the show, he will use audience members in "sightless vision" and telepathy experiments.

Audience members will again be able to volunteer for the second part of the program, which involves hypnosis.

Dipietro, who once worked as the "Magic Burger King," for Burger King restaurants, says that he has been involved with ESP and hypnosis since he was about 16. He has since displayed his talents at numerous private parties and street festivals.

Admission to either of the two performances (7 p.m. and 10 p.m.) is $2. The event is sponsored by Hamlin Dormitory.

Some final thoughts on the NCAA final game

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The scary thing about Georgetown's 84-75 victory over Houston for the NCAA title Monday night is that the two Hoya catalysts, Reggie Williams and Michael Graham, are both only freshmen.

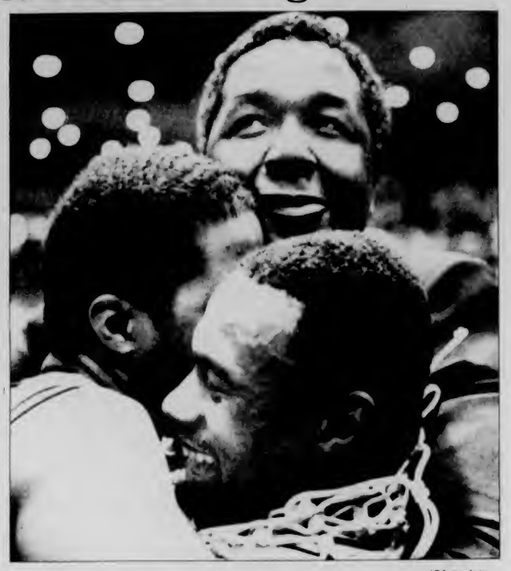
Williams, as predicted Monday, played better than he did against Kentucky sparking the Georgetown offense in a manner similiar to his all-American play at Dunbar High while Graham literally stuffed the Cougar's chances on defense and played a solid offensive game.

Graham isn't afraid to go up against and several times he outwitted Houston center Akeem Olajuwon with smooth lefthanders under the rim. He followed those up with a trio of stuffs that helped to establish the dominance G-town enjoyed under the glass.

The Hoyas, who finish at 34-3, completed a sweep of the Big East regular, tournament and NCAA tourney titles in bringing Coach John Thompson his first crown, truly an impressive feat.

I know Guy Lewis has been the target of much criticism by the media, myself included, but once again he did little to help his team. With Pat Ewing on the bench for the final 7:35 of the first half Lewis stubbornly stayed in his zone, refusing to exploit the obvious Akeem-Ralph Dalton mismatch.

Georgetown had some trouble with Houston's 1-3-1 trapping defense but Thompson knew enough to have good ballhandlers in the game when it counted, especially during the last five minutes when what had been an exciting game turned into a semi-rout.



Remember also that Hoya defensive whiz Gene Smith, a senior, didn't play a second thanks to an injured foot. He's provided a lot of leadership to a young (two seniors) Georgetown team and it's too bad he couldn't have contributed.

Thompson, himself the butt of much unfounded criticism, is to be commended for saying on TV that it's most important that the players graduate from school. He's got a point, a Gene Smith or a Fred Brown will, in all probability, go nowhere in the ranks of the NBA, but with degrees they have a shot at a successful career at something other than roundball.

Houston, if Akeem stays, will be back. Guard Alvin Franklin, a sophomore, impressed everyone with his offense and the team was at one point an uncharacteristic of 13 from the foul line in the second half. Lewis will have another chance to blow it in the future.

The Big East has a title holder, Thompson has his revenge on the media hordes and the managing editor's out 16 bucks. Let's get on to the pros and their playoffs which of course will be taken by the Celtics, in seven games against Philly followed by six against L.A. You Knick fans wait until a real center comes down New York way.

I wonder if Thompson will see fit to let Ewing face Akeem in the Hall of Fame classic next December in the Springfield Civic Center...could be a major plus to area hoop fanatics. Think like Ralph Houk and be optimistic.

Minutemen win home opener, 6-3

By BOB BROCK
Collegian Staff

Using both timely hitting and strong defense, the University of Massachusetts baseball team earned a much-needed 6-3 win over Holy Cross yesterday in their home-opener at a cold Lorden Field.

UMass catcher Todd Ezold and shortstop Angelo Salustri led the way as they each had two hits and both scored two runs. Centerfielder Dan Clifford also aided the Minuteman cause as he collected three hits off Holy Cross pitching. UMass pitching was also strong as winner Bob Kostro (2-2) and relievers Jon Martin and Matt Subocz scattered nine Crusader hits.

The Minutemen opened the scoring in their half of the first, when with two outs, Salustri singled, stole second, and then just trotted home as UM designated hitter Todd Comeau blasted a fastball from Crusader starter Darren Maloney over the 400-foot sign in center field. The Minutemen were up 2-0.

The Crusaders struck back for a run in the second by putting together a hit, a couple of walks, and a sacrifice fly by HC catcher, John Quinn. The Minutemen picked up another run in their half of the inning with Todd Ezold scoring on a sacrifice fly by Jack Bloise.

UM picked up another run in their half of the fourth as Ezold drew a walk and then scored on Bruce Kingman's double to left-center. Clifford then singled him to third, but the threat died as Bloise popped to third and Andy Connors grounded to second.

In the sixth, sophomore Jon Martin replaced Kostro on the mound for UMass and retired Holy Cross in order. But in the HC seventh, things got a bit hairy. Infielder Nick Zammarelli opened it with a walk. Quinlan and new shortstop Rick Rabideau then both singled loading the bases with nobody out. Incredibly, Martin got out of it unscathed. Brian Reale hit one hard to Andy Connors at third who was able to turn the double-play. Martin then got the next hitter to pop harmlessly to third.

In the home half of the inning, the Minutemen picked up two important insurance runs. Salustri singled, stole second and then scored as he and Todd Comeau worked a double-steal with the throw going into left field. Comeau then scored moments later on an Ezold double to right. Holy Cross closed off the scoring on an eighth inning homer by first baseman Jack O'Keefe.

Matt Subocz pitched the ninth for UMass and picked up his first save of the season, despite getting himself into a slight jam. With two outs, he gave up an infield hit and walked two but he got HC thirdbaseman Tony Froio to ground out to end the game.

The Minutemen will take their 5-13 record into games this weekend with St. Joseph's and Boston College.

Just a few thoughts...

After a series of overtimes and last-second thrillers, the NCAA college basketball tournament is over. The Georgetown Hoyas, riding on their extremely deep bench and a clever coaching job by John Thompson, proved that they were the best team in college basketball this year...Akeem the Dream turned out to be a restless night's sleep, as he got in early foul trouble. Without him, the Cougars just couldn't do battle...The question now is which players will give up a continuing education and go hardship. Akeem, Michael Jordan, and Pat Ewing have a lot of thinking to do before May 5, the day they must declare hardship..The choice is a tough one, getting a degree or getting a lot of money--players are mostly worried of a lackluster senior year and a decrease in their value.

Jordan and Ewing have excellent mentors to help guide them in Dean Smith and Thompson. The 76ers own the first pick (depending on the coin flip) and Jordan will suit their offense to a tee. He would be the quick, big guard and could also back up The Doctor at the forward spot. So, Jordan may wait and see if the Sixers have the rights to him...I don't think Ewing will leave the D.C. area especially because of Thompson's record--42 out of 44 of his players have graduated. Of course, some may have degrees in the History of Sneakers or Bowling for Perspiration, but they do get their diplomas.

Some of the top seniors that should go high are Sam Perkins, Melvin Turpin, and Michael Young. If he practices real hard and learns how to shoot a free throw--he's thrown more bricks than the Library Tower)...Don't forget about Terence Stansbury. The senior guard from Temple looked quite impressive in his visit to The Cage and was the Atlantic 10 MVP (as predicted here in the Log--thank you, nice to be here).

One playoff is over, another is beginning. The NHL begins its quest for the Stanley Cup with preliminary round games on tap. There are some good contests slated in the Wales Conference. The Bruins-Canadiens will continue their slightly soured rivalry and Quebec will take on Buffalo. The Sabres defeated the Nordiques only once in the regular season and could face an upset. It's a lot different for rookie goalie Tom Barrasso playing 80 games vs. a few high school games--he may be tiring.

In another New Yorkers dream as the Islanders and Rangers face off (a little hockey talk). The Islanders are in their drive for five while the Rangers hope that their late-season slump doesn't carry over into the playoffs...The best series will be the Capitals and Flyers. Washington has the best defense in hockey but Philly always plays tough. Don't be surprised if Washington not only beats Philly but also the New York winner, and maybe takes the Cup...The other conference is about as boring as Little House on the Prairie reruns (Gretzky does look a little like Laura Ingalls). Minnesota is probably the only other team with a shot at it, but the Wales conference will reign.

This stupid weather has made it tough to get into baseball season, but it is here...Willie Wilson is able to play again after his recent bout with cocaine. He will resume play on May 15 and should give the Royals a shot in the arm (so to speak)...It's really sad to see the Mets, sporting a young look, to use Mike 'Taco' Torrez as their opening day pitcher. the Mets did lose, 8-1, but the last time they lost opening day was in 1973 - the last time they were in the World Series.

Finally, what about that move by Baltimore Colt owner Robert Irsay, sneaking the Colts out at night? Yes, there is a job for him in Washington.

No more need be said.

Hey gang! Big rivalry today, URI meets UM in softball

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Anyone who has watched any NBC this past winter has had to see a promo similiar to this for college basketball:

"Hey gang! Al McQuire here. UMass - Rhode Island! Atlantic 10 softball today! Big game! Be there! I will," screams McQuire followed by the NBC theme song.

The promos usually don't feature a softball game but today's clash between Atlantic 10 rivals Massachusetts and Rhode Island has the makings of a game just as intense and exciting as those college hoop games on Saturday afternoon.

This afternoon's doubleheader, which starts at 2 p.m., is vitally important to both squads.

Here's the scenario: There are six softball teams in the Atlantic 10 and they have been split up into two three-team divisions that will invite the top two teams to the Atlantic 10 championships, May 4-5 at Rutgers.

Penn State, last year's champ, St. Joseph and Temple are in one division while UMass, Rutgers and last year's Northeast NCAA representative Rhode Island are in the other.

And in the Atlantic 10, the winner of the conference gets an automatic bid to the NCAA tournament, a bid that UMass has just missed the last three years.

"The team knows what they have to do," head coach Elaine Sortino said last night. "We have known since the start of the academic year in September the set-up for the Atlantic 10."

The WRams are a team that matches up with UMass well. They have stingy pitching and a tough defense. Sophomore pitcher Cathy Bade and junior pitcher Lori Whidden (who shut out UMass 3-0 last year in Kingston) head up the WRam staff.

Junior first baseman Debbie Pereira returns with the ability to hit the long ball.

"We're expecting a very good team," Sortino said. "We know we can hit off of them." The Minutewomen outhit Rhody in two of their games last year.

UMass is 10-5 coming off the split to Providence and Sortino said that the team worked hard in practice yesterday on batting and baserunning, (where four blunders were committed in the Friar game) but the practice was nothing out of the ordinary.

Providing that tomorrow's game is not washed out, UMass should know by Saturday if they will go to the Atlantic 10. They face Rutgers on Saturday, finishing up UMass' four games with URI and Rutgers.

IN THE CIRCLE - Past URI-UMass games have been doozys. The quarter-final match-up at last year's Atlantic 10 title tourney gave URI, a 3-2 winner, the NCAA bid. In that game, Periera hit a long shot down the foul line to give Rhody the edge despite six Lynn Stockley strikeouts.

Hey gang! What a matchup!

SGA to investigate Student Activities Office spending

By IAN POLUMBAUM
Collegian Staff

Members of the University of Massachusetts Student Government Association (SGA) charge that the Student Activities Office (SAO) uses too much money at the expense of student activity groups.

The Undergraduate Student Senate passed a resolution Wednesday night asking SAO Director Randy Donant not to fill a vacant, $19,000-a-year Program Supervisor position recently vacated by Irene Richard because they claim the expenditure is unnecessary.

"I don't think they need a supervisor," said Jim Murphy, sponsor of the resolution. "It used to be just the program advisors in there," he said referring to the professional SAO staffers who arrange campus events with student groups.

Murphy charged Donant with having an interest in building a top-heavy management structure.

"Since Randy took over three years ago that office has developed a hierarchy," he said.

Donant has hired a business director and two office assistants in addition to the program director, Murphy said.

Donant responded that he had not made any significant changes and that "our area may actually be understaffed in comparison to other major universities."

Donant said that student leaders had not confronted him directly on the issue of misuse of funds and apparently misunderstood the SAO's operations.

"I don't wish to insult anybody in the student senate, but they're not in the program realm, they're in the political realm," he said. "It's a personnel matter, not a senate matter."

Murphy called the hiring issue "part of a larger problem: the Student Activities Trust Fund, going through the roof. They're bleeding the SATF. That money has to come away from student groups."

SGA budget committee Chairman Joseph Sparks said Fiscal Year 1985 will see a $45,000 drop from 1984 in the amount of money allocated to student groups, in large part because the SAO budget will increase by $33,000.

"All the student groups will be getting level funding at best, or decreased funding. That's our money." Full-time students pay $48 per semester into the SATF.

"Who's the SAO for, itself or the students?" asked new SGA Co-President Rick Patrick. Patrick said he and Jim Keller have been planning for some time to address SAO spending.

Donant said he was surprised by the resolution and by a subsequent motion authorizing senate speaker Chris Sullivan to form a task force investigating the SAO.

"Student leaders were involved in the whole process," he said. "We're now advertising and we're going to fill the position."

Knapp, Trustees oppose Regents on tuition hike

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The new tuition proposal by the Massachusetts Board of Regents of Higher Education has met with opposition from both University of Massachusetts President David C. Knapp and the UMass Board of Trustees.

Student Trustee Charlene Allen said yesterday members of the board told her before meeting on Wednesday that more work must be done on the Regents' plan.

"They really want to examine it," Allen said.

Joyce Hosie, a spokeswoman for Knapp's office, said Knapp also has reservations concerning the proposal, which would increase student contribution to the cost of their education from a current 24 percent to 33 percent.

Members of the Student Government Association Public Policy Committee met with the regents yesterday to learn more about the proposal. The trustees of the various state schools have to accept the proposal before it can go into effect.

Trustees approve fee hike

In the Wednesday meeting in Boston, the trustees approved a $50 fee hike for on-campus students that will pay for student health plans, arts programs and dormitory renovations.

"The mandatory fee increase is one that has been expected for some time," Allen said. "The additional money is for needed programs and shouldn't cause any alarm among students."

New aid made available

Students whose families make too much money to qualify for financial aid may qualify for low interest loans, now that the trustees have approved a pilot program to provide $500,000 in aid.

"This program is for middle or high income students who do not qualify for regular aid," Hosie said.

"It is totally different from the student loan programs available now and--because it adds money to the financial aid pool--it's a great idea," Allen said of the plan.

Up to 200 students will receive loans under the program that calls for UMass to join with 13 other schools in pooling their money and issuing a bond to generate more than $20 million in scholarship money. UMass is the only public school in the program.

Buildings package finalized

The trustees also put the final touches on a bond package that will provide $21 million for improvements to the Amherst campus, including renovation of the Curry Hicks Cage (see related story below).

New student trustee initiated

Student Government Association co-president Jim Keller attended the meeting and said he was "impressed" with the respect Trustees have for the student members of the board.

"It takes time to earn their respect but they do care about student opinion on issues," said Keller, who was well-received according to Allen.

"Many times they (the Trustees) receive only the administration's opinion and that's biased," Keller said. "I hope I can help them see the student perspective on things."

Duffey reveals details of bond plan

By LAURA YEE
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey told the Faculty Senate yesterday a $21 million state capital improvement grant is now available for campus repairs, including the renovation of the Curry Hicks Cage.

After meeting with the Board of Trustees and the UMass Building Authority, Duffey said the funds are part of a bond issue which will be used for improvements in the Campus Center, Campus Center Garage, dormitories, North Village Apartments and the Curry Hicks Cage.

"Late last year the legislature passed $26 million in capital funding which will be released over a period of some years," Duffey said. "We now have $47 million that will be available for renovations, repairs and deferred maintenance."

Some of the activities will span over a period of five to six years Duffey said. "Plans include fixing roofs and leaking pipes, conservation measures, new insulation, and fixing generations which will involve a substantial amount of work."

John L. DeNyse Vice Chancellor of Administration and Finance said "any type of repair imagined," in the Campus Center will take place including "the leaky roofs."

Renovations and repairs will "go much further than just painting dormitories," DeNyse said.

"Work in the dorms will include fire and safety improvements and building and operations improvements," DeNyse said. "It's an ambitious undertaking that we've been deliberating for a long time now. We're all very pleased that we got this money."

Feasibility and design plans will take place this summer when contracts and bids are made, DeNyse said.

Duffey said the funds now available will not cover the renovations and deficiencies the faculty have cited in previous meetings. He said repairs and replacement of faculty equipment, and departmental building erosion are in a different budget.

Plans for upgrading the Cage call for $2.3 million out of the $26 million.

When completed in time for the 1985-86 baseball season, the Cage will feature a synthetic surface that will replace the dirt floor and allow the indoor track, lacrosse and basketball teams to make full use of the building.

New locker rooms, a skylight and expansion of 9,000 square feet are also included in the renovations.

Duffey said the project "brings the building up to the 1980's."

Pepsi tested for petroleum

BOSTON — State public health officials said yesterday they have asked an Ayer soda manufacturer to halt New England sales of one batch of Diet Pepsi Free after a complaint about one can in a batch of about 2,000 cases.

A Gardner woman said she had consumed two 12-ounce cans of the soda, code marked a11a12, then said she felt there was a petroleum odor and taste in a third can, according to Vic Walsh, general manger of Epie Enterprises, the local Pepsi Bottler.

The can is being tested by the state public health lab in Amherst and results were expected by Saturday, said department spokeswoman Janet Hookailo.

"In the meantime we're saying that anyone who opens a can of Diet Pepsi Free and it smells like gasoline, don't drink it," she said.

Walsh said the soda was part of 2,023 cases manufactured in mid-January and distributed to every New England state except Rhode Island.

He said his company would comply with the instructions from the public health department and ask retailers to stop sales on that batch until the tests were completed.

Walsh emphasized that the action was being taken on "one isolated complaint" to a single can of soda from a run of more than 2,000 cases.

Utilities face $20,000 fine

HARTFORD, CONN. — Two Connecticut utilities that complied with a request to make their April 15 construction payments on Seabrook 2 two weeks early violated a state order, state Consumer Counsel Barry Zitser charged yesterday.

Zitser said the payments by Connecticut Light and Power Co. and United Illuminating Co. violated the state Department of Public Utility Control's order that they work to cancel the New Hampshire nuclear plant. He asked that they be fined $20,000 each.

But spokesmen for each of the companies denied that the utilities had done anything wrong.

Mike Sette, a spokesman for UI, which owns a 17.5 percent share of Seabrook 2, said the company's $9.3 million on April 2 was two weeks early, but he noted, "The ownership agreement clearly states that earlier payment can be requested.

Sewage overflows in storm

SPRINGFIELD — A regional planner said yesterday that seven cities and towns should improve sewage systems to make sure the Connecticut River doesn't get further polluted during storms.

Chris Curtis, senior planner at the Pioneer Valley Planning Commission, said sewage overflow pollutes a 10-mile stretch of New England's largest river so much that it is suitable for no more than boating.

The other stretch of the river in Massachusetts north of Holoyoke is in a more rural area and is clean enough for swimming and fishing.

The river, once considered to be polluted too much for even boating, has been cleaned since 1972 when the federal government passed the Clean Waters Act to restrict discharges into waterways.

Fish dealer accused of fraud

BOSTON — A fish dealer who says his business consists of one truck and an unpaid mortgage was accused by a federal grand jury yesterday of understating his income by nearly $7 million over a five-year period.

"I don't know where they got those figures," said 58-year-old Edmund Opozda Sr. of Fairhaven. "You couldn't net that much in your lifetime, with one truck and a one-man operation."

The grand jury charged that Opozda understated income by $1,340,761 in 1977; $1,718,666 in 1978; $1,942,062 in 1979; $1,146,506 in 1980 and $821,578 in 1981.

Robert Muller, an assistant U.S. attorney, said he could not release any details beyond the indictment. The document did not say what taxes the government believes are owed or what income was actually reported for the years in dispute. The formal charge is making false and fraudulent statements in tax returns.

Divorcee wants Megabucks

WORCESTER - A factory worker who won $1 million in the lottery learned Thursday what a bittersweet blessing money can be when his ex-wife brought him to court, demanding compensation for the emotional hardship she suffered while he spent hundreds of dollars trying to win Megabucks.

John Radzik won $1,003,700 playing Megabucks Aug. 27, 1983, one month and two days after his divorce became final.

His ex-wife, Nancy Anderson, filed suit against Radzik in Worcester Probate Court to change the provisions of the couple's original, pre-Megabucks divorce settlement.

In a bitter courtroom hearing, Mrs. Anderson, a 34-year-old administrative secretary, said she is asking for a "lump sum" to compensate for the emotional hardship she suffered during the three years that Radzik spent $75 a week on lottery tickets. She did not demand a specific amount.

Salamander migration begins

FRAMINGHAM - With the spring comes the rain and so, too, the salamanders. Thousands already have begun their annual nighttime walk across the wet asphalt of Hemenway Road here to a pond for mating.

And it appeared that last night's migration would be a "big run" for the creatures who take to their journey when it rains steadily and temperatures rise above 40 degrees.

"It looks like tonight is the night," said Peter Mirick at the state's Division of Fisheries and Wildlife field headquarters in Westboro.

Hessen calls socialism immoral

By PAUL DESMOND
Collegian Staff

In practice, socialism is not "generous, benevolent, or appealing," but rather, socialists are "hostile and intolerant," said Dr. Robert Hessen, author of Defense of the Corporation and a New York Times columnist, to about 50 people last night at the University of Massachusetts Campus Center.

Socialists "love the abstraction of mankind and despise the reality of individuals" who want to pursue personal interests, Hessen said.

In his speech, titled "Why Does Socialism Continue to Appeal to Anyone?" Hessen sought to reaffirm the morality of capitalism while proving socialism to be immoral.

He said socialism is designed to achieve the "highest ethical ideal mankind has ever held: From each according to his ability. To each according to his need." Translated, Hessen said, that slogan means, "Everyone must be willing to forego any comforts and conveniences as long as anyone, anywhere on earth, has more than you do."

Hessen said socialists "coerce" people into behaving virtuously. "It means the annihilation of freedom," he said.

"The most remarkable thing about socialism is it has any adherents at all," Hessen said, since no socialist country has raised its standard of living.

"The Soviet Union, remarkably, is the only country on earth that has had 66 years of bad weather to explain crop failures," he said.

Hessen said he was a Socialist at the age of 17 because it held out "heady, noble, lofty ideas". In reality, those ideas cannot work, he said.

"The only way these ideals can be brought about is by coercion."

Hessen stressed that slogans used by socialists must be translated and people should think about how these slogans would be brought about in practice.

For example, he said the real meaning of "power to the people" is that: "Individuals would be reduced to a state of powerlessness. No private spheres of influence would be permitted," and people would not be allowed to choose their own careers, he said.

Hessen criticized socialists for seeking complete equality among people because equality "is the most unnatural of states, for the reason that individuals are so different from one another." The only way to achieve equality is to "strip people of their inventiveness, ingenuity and creativity," he said.

Hessen argued for ownership of private property by quoting Russian revolutionary leader Leon Trotsky who said, "If you don't obey, you don't eat." "You can own private property and not be cut off from the means of survival," Hessen said.

Hessen is currently a Senior Research Fellow and Deputy Archivist for research at the Hoover Institution of War, Revolution and Peace At Stanford University.

"Socialism is immoral"

Board tells Amherst eateries to accomodate non-smokers

By JULIA MAYCOCK
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Board of Health unanimously passed a regulation last night requiring designated non-smoking sections in all public buildings.

Effective July 1, the regulation says no less than 25 percent of the seating capacity of a restaurant shall be set aside as a non-smoking area. Owners of bars, or restaurants that include bars, will be required to provide 20 percent of their seating space as a non-smoking section.

The board defined a bar as "a counter at which alcoholic beverages are served and consumed."

The regulation will apply to all university establishments. This includes the Hatch and the Top of the Campus Restaurant, which do not have designated non-smoking areas.

"There has been a longstanding question in this town as to whether we can regulate the University," Health Board chairman David Ross said. "It's my personal feeling that this (regulation) does apply to the University," he said.

"We have to avoid the pitfall of thinking that this is a university town only," Ross said. "There are people who live in this town all year who deserve to be protected."

The intent of the regulation is to require proprietors of restaurants and bars to establish non-smoking sections that are "situated as to effectively eliminate the presence of smoking by-products" in the air, according to the document.

"We are trying to get across the message that you have to provide space for non-smokers," Ross said. "You can't put smokers and non-smokers side by side."

"It's time that people didn't treat smoke as an inconvenience. It's a health hazard," Board Member Frank Meyers said.

The board deleted a clause that would have required the use of "physical barriers and/or ventilation systems" to minimize the level of smoke in non-smoking areas.

The change accomodated restaurant and bar owners who voiced opposition to the initial draft because they said they would have difficulty erecting physical barriers.

In a public hearing on March 27, Chick Delano, president of the Amherst Chamber of Commerce and owner of Delano's Restaurant, asked the board to consider changing the requirement that non-smoking areas must be provided one-hundred percent of the time. He suggested the regulation be applied only during peak meal times.

Delano said he would have difficulty catering to a large college crowd during non-dinner hours if they had to wait in line longer to be seated in a specific section.

These folks crave green eggs, ham

Cats will be jumping out of hats tomorrow at the University of Massachusetts.

If you have ever wondered how a children's book is put together, then you may want to put off making way for the ducklings on the campus center pond and head for the School of Management and the 12th annual New England Conference on "Perspectives in Children's Literature."

Paula Danziger, well known author of The Cat Ate My Gymsuit, Can You Sue Your Parents for Malpractice? and The Pistachio Prescription, will speak at a luncheon during the conference, which will last from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Illustrator Ed Young, whose works include The Emperor and the Kite and Up the Tree, will conduct a presentation at 3:15 p.m.

Publisher Jane Yolan, who has worked on more than 70 children's books, and Delacorte Press Senior Editor Olga Litowinsky will make a presentation on publishing children's literature at 9:00 a.m.

Registration for the event, which is being coordinated by UMass Professors Masha Rudman and William Moebius will take place from 8 to 9 a.m. Coffee and donuts will be served during this period.

Participants will have the chance to choose from several workshops after the morning presentation on publishing. Author Christine McDonnell, illustrator Ruth Sanderson and Storyteller Susan Klein are some of the speakers who will be featured.

Both Rudman and Moebius will lead workshops as well. Rudman, a professor from the UMass School of Education, has written several books on children's literature. Moebius teaches a course on children's literature in the UMass comparative literature department.

Ann Courtney and Tom Zink, graduate research assistants in the UMass School of Education are organizing the program this year.

"We expect around 300 participants to come hear the guest speakers and participate in the various workshops, but walk in registration is available between 8 a.m. and 9 a.m. on Saturday," Courtney said.

There will be two autographing sessions and a portfolio consultation on a first come, first serve basis. A book exhibit, book sale, and the display from the Council on Interracial Books will be open all day.

To obtain information on registration or other details, call 545-4325 or 545-3121. Registration will be going on until this afternoon. There will be a limited number of walk-in spaces.

State Legislature nurtured feminism

By MIRIAM ZOLL
Collegian Staff

Before she was elected to state office in 1980, Rep. Susan Schur (D-Newton) said she never identified herself as a feminist.

"I think I was a practicing feminist, but I never would have called myself one" said Schur, who yesterday met with students from her district and attended several classes.

Once she began listening to the attitudes of other state legislators and hearing about the treatment of women in other situations, Schur said she knew she was feminist and that "women needed better representation" than they had been getting.

Prior to coming to the House, Schur was involved with local politics in Newton where she worked on such issues as housing, human services and poverty programs.

A member of the Energy and Federal Financial Assistance Committees, Schur said she "discovered there wasn't a lot of representation of women in the state."

Schur is an active opponent of the anti-abortion amendment, currently in the State House, which could eliminate all state funded abortions.

"I feel that my pro-choice position means I don't want to impose a view, either pro-choice or other, on someone else. And I don't want to tell anyone else what to do, or have anyone tell me what to do," she said.

Schur said abortion is a morality issue that should not be legislated because there is "no religious consensus, no philosophical consensus, medical consensus, or ethical consensus regarding this issue."

When asked about her professional relationship with male legislators, Schur said she faces "subtle forms of sexism."

"I try to fight it by example and develop a sense of humor about it, although it isn't always pleasant."

She said sometimes male legislators are better on women's issues than women are.

"It's where they stand on the issues that counts," she said. "It's more an ideological split than a sex split on some of these issues."

According to Schur, some "people assume the women they're electing are feminists, progressive, and all for women's issues," but that it's impossible to generalize women in the House.

"We run the full gamut, from reactionary to radical, from feminist to non-feminist. The one thing we have in common is that we come in around age 30-40, and we tend to work harder and take the job more seriously."

Schur said the 21 women in the House and five women in the Senate make up the Caucus of Women Legislators. Established in 1973, this group focuses on women's issues such as comparable worth, the Equal Rights Amendment, and practically "every children's issue and elderly issue," in the state.

Masspirg finds 1,000 toxic waste sites

BY SANDRA KONOPKA
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG) reported yesterday that there are 1,000 hazardous waste dumpsites in Massachusetts.

Issuing a report entitled "Hazardous Forecast: 1000 Toxic Waste Dumps in Massachusetts," was the first step of MassPIRG's kick-off campaign to solve the Massachusetts hazardous waste problem.

The report claims that at least 1000 hazardous waste dumpsites exist in Massachusetts, and 150 to 200 of the state's waste sites may pose high risks to existing water supplies. Nearly 10 percent of Massachusetts communities have already shutdown one or more ground water supply wells because of chemical contamination, according to the report.

MassPIRG is advocating the Hazardous Waste Emergency Clean-Up bill that would put the state on a 10-year timetable for the clean-up of waste sites.

The bill would require the State Department of Environmental Quality Engineering to:

- immediately eliminate imminent threats to public health,
- within one year assess the health and environmental threats from all known and suspected hazardous waste dumpsites,
- within five years contain the threat at all priority sites and complete a clean-up at all priority sites that were known before the law was enacted,
- within ten years complete permanent solutions at all sites.

"The problem of hazardous waste is far above what state and federal authorities are saying," University of Massachusetts MassPIRG Chairman Tom Genung said.

"The figures in the report are real and they're above and beyond anything that's been released before," Genung said.

MassPIRG has a four-point legislative platform: clean-up, prevention, compensation and source reduction, Genung said.

"Current clean-up plans are inadequate because DEQE (the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering) does not have adequate funding," Genung said. "As soon as the bill goes through then they should get the funding needed."

DEQE proposed 37 new positions for site assessment and clean-up for the new fiscal year, which was cut to 18 slots in Governor Michael Dukakis' budget recommendations to the State Legislature.

Through community awareness and pressure on the State Legislature, hazardous waste site problems could be alleviated, Genung said. As the platform gets stronger, we will have laws and state actions to enforce them, he said.

"The report puts the realism of the problem in front of people's eyes," Genung said. "We hope to have the bills passed as soon as possible."

Close BOG vote prevents 'porno free zone' at UMass

By RALPH ROBERTS
Collegian Staff

A proposal by the Board of Governors that would have demanded Playboy, Playgirl and Penthouse magazines be banished from the University Store was rejected last night by a 10-9 vote.

BOG Treasurer Jerry Quill said he was upset the motion did not pass, and that it will not be the last time that he brings the motion up for approval.

"We had a great opportunity to make a strong stand against pornography tonight and we let it slip through our fingers," Quill said.

The BOG meeting began with Jenne Cullen of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA), and Karen Santoriello of the Woman's Forum Against Media Violence (WFAMV) making a plea to board members to support their actions in trying to create a "porno free zone on the UMass campus."

Along with their speech in which they would answer no questions, they presented a slide show entitled 'Abusive Images in the Media and Pornography in the Media,' which showed the media depicting women as either being nymphomaniacs who loved to be raped, perverted sadomasochists, or others who raptured puriant degradation.

Recently re-elected board member Ron Homa urged the board to keep in mind that whatever the decision was, that it would "most likely set a strong precedent regarding a few different issues."

"We must be careful because we're talking about a definition of censorship as well as the pornography issue. If those magazines get censored, then what else may get on the censored list," he said.

L. S. Kohen, who voted against the proposal, said that "although every sane person is against violence to women, it's important that we don't ignore the first amendment which protects the freedom of literature."

Gay activists pleased with court order

By TAARA EDEN HOFFMAN
Collegian Staff

Gay and Lesbian Activist (GALA) organization members said they are pleased with the preliminary injunction issued by Superior Court Judge George Keady in Northampton on Wednesday to permit the group's march to be held on Saturday May 12.

The city of Northampton denied GALA a march permit when they filed on Jan. 19, said Doug Lerner, a graduate student at the University of Massachusetts and co-coordinator of the GALA march committee.

The city claimed public safety could not be guaranteed on a Saturday in Northampton and a permit for Sunday, May 13 was then granted.

"Saturday would be a better day to show our presence in the community and also to educate the community about lesbian and gay oppression," Lerner said. "Downtown is busy (on Saturday) and we feel it is better to march where we'll be visible."

GALA representatives met with Mayor Davis B. Musante, Police Chief Daniel LaBato, and City Solicitor Maureen Ryan Feb. 15 and offerred to change the route of the march, shorten the time of the march and keep the participants to the right side of the road as compromising measures. When they were still denied the permit, they sought legal advice, Lerner said.

Susan Ritter of the Boston-based Gay and Lesbian Advocates and Defenders (GLAD) was an attorney who took on the case in early March.

"Our main argument was the unconstitutional city ordinance restricting the march," Ritter said.

The ordinance did not permit parades or gatherings without the permission of the Chief of Police, and put "prior restraint on freedom of expression," Ritter said.

Mark Lucey, vice-president of the People's Gay Alliance (PGA) at UMass said, "A march like this draws a lot of people. People in the Amherst and Northampton area are dependent on public transportation and the busses run infrequently on Sunday."

Man attempts attack from library elevator

University of Massachusetts police reported that officers were dispatched to the library tower at 1:15 p.m. Wednesday after security reported that a man had tried to drag a woman into a 14th floor elevator. When the officers arrived on the scene the suspect could not be found, police said.

STOLEN BIKES REPORTED

An 18-speed Fuji bicycle valued at $386 was stolen from the first floor lounge of Dickinson Dormitory between 1 a.m. and 11:20 a.m. Wednesday, police said. The cable securing the bicycle was cut and there are no suspects, according to police.

A $180 Royce Union 12-speed bicycle was stolen between Wednesday, March 28 and Sunday from a bicycle rack outside of Webster Dormitory, according to police. The object was secured with a chain and lock that was cut, police said.

Author speaks on significance of King

By DARLENE JACKSON
Collegian Staff

A group of high school counselors from 18 states around the nation listen intently to Stephen B. Oates, biographer and history professor, as he addresses the significance of the life and career of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. in the Campus Center at the University of Massachusetts.

All of his life he wanted to be a professor, a teacher, said Oates on the sixteenth anniversary of the civil rights leader's assassination.

"He never got to realize his dreams," he said.

"He worked out his anger," Oates said of King. "He hated the system he had come out of. He hated segregated Atlanta," Oates said.

"Between the ages of eight through twenty-one, he wrestled with that problem," Oates said. "The result of it being non-violent resistance and redemptive love," he said.

"Martin Luther King's Selma campaign resulted in the voting rights act of 1964 that has made possible Jimmy Carter's election in 1976 and Jesse Jackson's campaign for the presidency," Oates said.

"There is absolutely nobody in American political life that behaves the way they did before blacks got the right to vote," he said.

King became a public figure, Oates said. "He didn't have a personal life anymore. He felt guilty about being thrust into the leadership role," Oates said.

"I don't derserve to be the leader of an improvish nation," said Oates quoting King. "I'm not a messiah, he said, I'm not perfect," Oates said.

Oates praised the United States for recognizing King's contribution to American history by making his birthday a national holiday.

"King paid a heavy penalty for his successes," Oates said. "His sufferings were prodigious, perhaps immeasurable."

"He set an example of moral courage which no one did," he said.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

"Resistance to Racism: Poetry, Politics, and Sports in South Africa" is the title to a talk to be given by Dennis Brutus and Richard Lapchik on Monday, April 9, at 7:30 p.m. in the Converse Assembly Room, Amherst College.

Brutus, a poet and anti-apartheid activist, is in exile from South Africa and recently concluded a protracted legal case with the U.S. government. The State Department granted him asylum with a restricted travel visa, a point that Brutus is still challenging. He is professor of English at Northwestern University, chairman of Africa Network, and author of numerous poetry books. Brutus was visiting professor of English at Amherst College in 1981-82.

Lapchik is the acting director for the Center for Sports and Social Issues at Northeastern University and national chairperson for ACCESS (American Coordinating Committee for Equality in Sports and Society). He is the author of several books.

The talk, sponsored by the political science department, is free and open to the public. Reception will follow.

•The Center For Racial Studies in Southwest will sponsor a Black History "MATCH WITS" Contest on Sunday April 8, 1984 at 6:p.m. in the Hampden Theater, Southwest.

Didn't you know that if you're a senior with the promise of a $10,000 career-oriented job, you could have the American Express® Card?

Where have you been?

Asleep?

Because for some time American Express has been saying that we believe in your future. But even more than that. We believe in you now. And we've been proving it. A $10,000 job. That's it. No strings. No gimmicks. And this offer is even good for 12 months after you graduate.

But why do you need the American Express Card now? First of all, it's a good way to begin to establish your credit history. And you know that's important. Of course, the Card is also good for vacation travel, as well as for shopping for things like a new stereo or furniture. And because the Card is recognized and welcomed worldwide, so are you.

So call 800-528-8000 for a Special Student Application or look for one at your college bookstore or on your campus bulletin boards.

The American Express Card. Don't leave school without it.®

Look for an application on campus.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

A MOMENT OF SILENCE

Question the need to drink

While speaking to a neighbor, who happens to be an exchange student from West Germany, we came across the subject of parties at the University of Massachussetts. He commented that at the end of the party every one is totally drunk. This caused me to realize that not only is alcohol always present at parties but it seems to be the core element of the parties. There have to be more important aspects of parties other than getting smashed.

Art Stile

To most of us, a party without alcohol sounds boring. Is this feeling caused because we are boring people? Maybe it is the social conditioning and the way alcohol is sold to us, through multi-million dollar advertising campaigns. Or it could be, as Dick Gregory explained in his speech at Smith College, that while we are busy getting drunk the government is able to slip things by us. Mr. Gregory was referring to things such as, the cutting of financial aid and the instatement of a draft registration.

Many people would say that alcohol performs certain functions at parties. The major function being the lowering of peoples' inhibitions, making it easier to communicate with others. But how do these people explain the exorbitant rate of alcohol-related crimes and deaths?

Alcohol is a drug that changes peoples' moods. Do people really have to alter their moods in order to socialize? This vice is unnecessary. We have been conditioned to believe that we have to get wasted in order to have fun. It seems that a lot of UMass students' lives revolve around happy hours and keg parties. People should realize that a hangover is your body's way of telling you that what you are doing is not good for you.

This is not a plea for everyone to totally disband the use of alcohol, but to make people ask themselves why they do use alcohol.

Perhaps one should try a few simple exercises before making the decision. Maybe go to a party and stay straight and (personally I find it easier if you go towards the end of the party) observe how ignorant and nonsensical people become towards the end of the night. Or perhaps be even more deviant and have a party without alcohol being present. If anyone shows up straight you might be surprised by the results. Most of all consider the valuable waste of time.

Finally, ask yourself the question; if I have to alter my mood in order to communicate with these people, are they really worth communicating with?

Haig's dream a nightmare

Recent developments in Lebanon have caused me to look back fondly on the days when Al Haig ran the State Department. Under Haig, United States' foreign policy was realistic and productive. While some may jump to criticize Haig's views in Central America, or his open support for the Siberian pipeline, one cannot deny that Al Haig's policy in the Middle East was the right course.

When Israeli forces screamed northward towards Beiruit, Haig stood by our ally (Israel votes with the United States 93 percent of the time in the United Nations, El Salvador only 23 percent). All the while John Chancellor, peace lovers everywhere, and a gallery of former Carter aides (primarilly on National Public Radio) decried atrocities by the army of the Jewish State. "Stop Begin!" chanted the moral equivalent of the "best and brightest".

Neil McCabe

At last Reagan gave in. Haig resigned. And Israel was stuck in Lebanon, a cruel fate for any army. Enter George Shultz, formerly of Beethel (a construction company dependent on the contracts of Saudi Arabia, and other friends of the Jewish Homeland), and the Nixon administration. Shultz's plans were naive attempts to pacify a hostile press. Military forces became mere peacocks, unable to prevent, deter, or react to the events swirling around them.

After the miserable lesson in terrorism taught to us by a fanatic truck driver, hope for success was nothing more than fools gold. One by one the democratic candidates announced they would withdraw troops immediately. Having lost his gamble Shultz relinquished the reigns to Congress and the press.

Last Friday, "sans fanfare" we left Lebanon to the wolves. The promise of Haigian resolve, and foresight, in less time than it takes to complete a term in Congress, was forgotten in favor of Shultz's prescription of bandaids and inaction.

Lebanon has become our Suez Canal. At no point since the Yom Kippur war has the US been at odds with so many people in the Middle East. Unless we take swift action to pressure Jordan and Egypt into real co-existence with Israel, draw a line before the armies of Syria, and sincerely work to stabilize the true government of Lebanon, we are doomed to a position of permanent weakness.

It is in the interest of the United States that real progress is made towards peace in the Mideast. If not directly, surely we must secure the status of Israel, and protect the source of much of Western Europe's oil.

Reagan must take his role as leader seriously and ignore the advice of men who want his job. Because of its volatility the Middle East will again provide the United States a chance to play out its responsibility. Reagan must be alert and be prepared. However, another loss could signal the end of American influence in the chain of events.

Pornography: not a love story

Pornography is not related to, nor does it perpetuate rape and violence against women. My mother tried to convince me that the opposite was true. I couldn't see the relationship. I mean, so (mostly) men enjoy looking at pictures of nude women. maybe they get some sort of sexual gratification out of it, that doesn't affect me. My male friends don't get into those magazines so that puts the issue even farther away from me. Hey, my attitude toward life is "you do your thing, and allow me to do mine."

Chris Alibrandi

I was hardcore against the idea that pornography is related at all to violence against women...it was just a little too farfetched a correlation for me. Then I saw Not a Love Story, showing again Sunday night at 7:00 p.m. in the SUB, which is a movie about pornography. That movie hit me like a rock because of the relationships it showed between pornography and actual, real life violence against women.

Pornography isn't just pictures of naked women laying there with suggestive looks on their faces. It's also shots of naked, chained women hanging upside down with fear in their eyes. It's also women supposedly enjoying wire tied around their breasts tightly enough to contort their natural shape.

These examples come from Not a Love Story, which collected examples of this violence from magazines, porn flicks, peep shows, and other forms of pornography. A cartoon in Penthouse shows a naked woman with knives in her back bleeding on the ground and two men over her are cracking some joke. Another one from Hustler that supposedly shows humor has a woman, black and blue, with fear on her face, recoiling from a man holding a golf club ready to hit her again. These examples from porn magazines are minimal compared to the violence seen in porn flicks and peep shows.

I think the reason violence against women in pornography is harmful is because after years of exposure to it, usually starting in the formative early teens, boys and men grow accustomed to seeing and reading about that kind of treatment of women and after a while stop seeing how wrong it is.

Years of exposure erode away reality; the reality being that it is wrong. I'm not unrealistic enough to think that to get rid of violence against women in pornography is to get rid of all violence against women. However, I strongly believe that when people stop getting reinforcing visual images of this violence, there will be a decrease in violence against women and children and, therefore, it will be safer for women to exist. I don't think that's too much to ask for...a safe place to exist.

Please come see Not a Love Story this Sunday night.

Letters

Separation, not division

To the Editor,

I want to write in sympathy with the men who were turned away from the "for women only" slide show "Lesbian Images in photography 1850-1984," March 29. It is disappointing to be excluded because lesbian women are among the most articulate and exciting social activists of our time with a lot of leadership to offer men and the gay movement.

I agree with the Op-Ed letter by Bruce Crow and Ken Paulsen (March 28) that "sexist discrimination can go in both directions," and the Collegian title that "Sexism affects both men and women." However the directions that patriarchal sexism have brought us leave men and women in very different places. Understanding that oppression can be broken down into the equation "prejudice" plus "p[illegible] makes the need for "women only" s[illegible] clear.

Men have had the pow[illegible]r throughout history to enforce their prejudice that women are inferior in many ways. We have kept women separate with laws, wars, rape, pornographic violence and all the institutions that create our notions of gender.

In a world organized by and for men, it is easy for women to believe the lies men use to justify their oppressiveness. Women empowering themselves to join together contradict the ideas that women are incompetent, and in need of a good man to change their lives for the better. Being separate offers members of each gender the chance to move through prejudices amongst themselves and release the destructive elements in the power dynamics between sexes. The need to be separate is not necessarily a long-term vision or cure-all for gender justice, for by its very method it lays bare the psychic and worldwide violence implicit in our human relationships.

This one event is certainly not classifiable as "rampant sexism," and in a broader vision of liberation working separately for social change does not mean that we as gays and lesbians, or men and women are divided. Separate events are a strategy to supportively create an identity out of the dangerous confusion of heterosexist-white-male-constructed reality. It is refreshing to see women move beyond the liberal masculinist perspective that we're all just human beings. It may be scary, but what's wrong with wanting more?

Who could question UB40?

To the Editor,

UB40 represent the most pop(ular) band in an entire Reggae movement indigenous to the U.K. This, argues Bob Burgess in his review of the band's performance of March 14, is their inherent weakness. "You don't have to be Jamaican to play good reggae but it helps," he tells us. This to me, is garbage.

A crude analogy would be to say only British punk-rock has any validity. He seems to ignore the fact that Britain has a large black population with an accompanying reggae movement, with many bands performing the purer/Jamaican style he so readily idolizes. What right has he to question UB40's validity as a reggae band? No more than I have the right to question his review. Both are opinions, I just wish he would make the reader aware of this.

However, my main complaint does not concern the opinionated nature of the review, but a number of inaccuracies and misleading statements within. Mr. Burgess asserts 'Cherry-O-Baby' is a Stone's composition; it is not. This is not a fatal flaw in itself, but does seem to indicate to me a lack of research.

And how can he say that 'Lyrically, UB40 is solid, but in the SUB most understanding was lost.'? How the hell does he know? Are we to assume he conducted a survey? If UB40 are politically dubious, what band is not? This Mr. Burgess describes as "weak attempts at criticizing capitalism, and the U.S. in particular." I can only think of one song during the entire set which criticizes the U.S.; Tyler, and if he thinks this song is weak, maybe he should try another band.

Steve Tingley Brown

Editor's note: The author states that even though his "main complaint does not concern the opinionated nature of the review," it is of concern to him.

Trailers by Andy Gordon

Ever have one of those days when you just want to open fire on a crowded classroom in a fiery blaze of rage and destruction? Whitmore does some bung job on your transcript; some snide twit professor implies you're not working hard enough. This time of year can be a major bummer. And the worst part about it; the very worst part, is that on Monday Terms of Endearment is going to win an Oscar.

That's right, Monday night is Oscar night and I, and everyone else in the world, am predicting that Terms picks up the Picture award, as well as statuettes for Shirley Maclaine and director James Brooks. This makes me sick. Meryl Streep blew doors off Maclaine but Maclaine's been in the business for like 100 years and never won an award. Brookes, the sitcom king, is also about the last person I'd give the award to, just a notch before Bob Clark for Porky's II.

I can see some of the positive aspects of Terms, but I can also see the negatives. It's an easy production, packed with easy devices; close-ups and children crying. I sat in in a theatre for two and a half hours for a tearjerker? Give me a frigging break. If it's that easy all movies hould give their main character cancer during the last twenty minutes [Sudden Impact: "Hey Callahan, I want you to see a doctor, you look kind of pekid." Close-up, Close-up, child crying.)

Recapping my other predictions, and keep in mind that last year I got every major category right, is as follows: Robert Duvall for Tender Mercies (it's about time, but Michael Caine also has a shot), Jack Nicholson for Terms (If there's anyone out there who'd like to wager me on this category please call me at 545-3500), Cher for Silkwood (possibly Linda Hunt) and "What a Feeling" for Best Song.

Opening today at the mall is Paul Mazursky's new film Moscow on the Hudson, which looks to be pretty good. Mazursky is a stimulating and entertaining filmmaker, with flicks like Tempest and An Unmarried Woman to his credit. Robin Williams stars as a Russian musician who defects to America and is befriended by a black security guard whom Williams moves in with. Williams is an excellent actor, as he proved with Popeye and The World According to Garp, and went into extensive training for this new role. He learned to speak Russian fluently and took saxaphone lessons. Also in the impressive cast is Cleavant Derricks of Dreamgirls and St. Elsewhere. Definitely could be a good one.

In the April Fools issue I made a crack about Burt Reynolds and Clint Eastwood starring in a film together; well they are. They play a cop and a detective working together on a case. I don't have any information on it, but I'll take a stab that Clint plays the detective. In other big, bankable male star news, Charles Bronson will again return to the only role audiences will accept him in. Death Wish III will be released next winter. Sylvester Stallone has like half a dozen pictures in the works; there's Rhinestone, a Pygmalion tale of a country singer (played by Dolly Parton) who turns cab driver Stallone into same. Lame. There's also The Mission: First Blood II and Over the Top.

Local Best Bets: You got me. The malls have Ice Pirates and Greystoke and sludge like that. Amherst Cinema has Heat and Dust and The Man from Snowy River for a week. You'd have to be really hard up for something to do to see that double bill. Paul Belval will probably be there. The film to see if you haven't yet.

Robin Williams getting down to some heavy sax in Moscow on the Hudson, which opens today at one of the malls.

Calvin I think has Star 80 (they did yesterday anyway), an intense flick which absolutely should not have been passed over in the Oscar race. On campus, Night Shift is playing somewhere sometime (I'm a wealth of accuracy this week). Not a Love Story, an anti-pornography documentary (attacked by many as really being anti-male) will be shown at the SUB Sunday, to be followed by discussion. I caught it several years ago, and while it is amazingly affecting, it's also more non-objective than a documentary should be. Linda Lee Tracy stars. Now that I think about it, Splash is TRAILERS Trivia: How anybody got last week's question is beyond me. I purposely asked a tough one so I could keep the prize; but Regina Martel outsmarted me. She knew that Against All Odds director Taylor Hackford is married to Lynn Littman, director of Testament. This week's question: A pair of passes to Columbia Pictures new film Moscow on the Hudson to the first person to tell me who plays Uncle Sal's Mother in that film. Try to get that one, Regina.

Gorillas dump Cornell, face Rutgers

By ADAM NAZIMOWITZ
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team successfully opened its 1984 season holding off 14th ranked Cornell University on the turf at Ithaca, New York, Wednesday, by a 10-9 margin.

UMass takes on sixth ranked Rutgers tomorrow in Jersey.

"Cornell (who ranked number 6 earlier in the season) is always a good team to beat. I was only concerned that we might run out of gas, but we didn't. We were outrunning them at the end of the game," said Coach Dick Garber.

The Gorillas fell behind early, which became a trend last season. The Big Red led 3-0 at the end of the first quarter, but Garber wasn't worried.

"We start slow every once in a while, but it wasn't that we played badly. They capitalized on their scoring chances and we didn't," said Garber.

Mike Fiorini scored UMass' first goal of the season at the 3:46 mark of the second quarter, and it turned out to be an important goal as the Gorillas who were down 4-0, came back to score four unanswered goals to tie the game at 4-4.

Fred "Bubba" Sandford then scored 15 seconds later, and Ken Freeman scored two goals in a row, both assisted by Peter Martino, to make it four goals in a span of five minutes and 15 seconds for UMass.

Cornell came back to once again grab the lead, 5-4, but UMass' Carl Hatton tied it up before Cornell came back to a 6-5 halftime lead.

The Big Red came out strong in the second half and jumped out to an 8-5 lead from two unanswered scores. But that was the last time Cornell would score until the last 19 seconds of the game. Sandford scored off a Fiorini pass to make it 8-6 at the end of the third quarter, as he began a string of five unanswered goals for the good guys.

UMass took a 10-8 lead with about a minute and a half left in the game and fought to hold on. Cornell got an in close goal at 14:41, but 10-9 was as close as they would come, despite a last second shot that sailed just wide of goaltender Gerry Moreau, who played a fine game stopping 15 shots.

"Gerry played really well, he handled the clearing passes beautifully. A lot of the middies like Matt O'Reilly and Perry Seale played a good game that just doesn't show in the stats. We also played without one of our starting midfielders, Rich Messina, who is still recovering from the flu," added Garber.

Kevin Cook, Cornell's All-American on attack scored four goals and added three assists, but most of his goals came on broken plays or on extra man play, and not in one-on-one situations.

"Our defender Tommy Aldrich played Cook superbly. Barry Cain and John Mincone also played great. They played individually and good team defense. Our whole close defense played super," lamented Garber.

The Gorillas now take their road act to New Brunswick to face number sixth ranked Rutgers University, always an exciting and formidable foe as evidenced by last year's 14-13 thriller the Scarlet Knights pulled out as they scored twice in the last minute, and UMass 13-12 victory there a year earlier.

"We usually have one-goal barn burners with them. We have to go right at them. There is a tendency when two good teams play to slow down and play cautiously. When we run and gun and go all out like we did against Cornell, we play well. We fell behind, but played well enough to come back and keep it going," said Garber.

"Their strength of scoring in close is going to play against our strength of defense. Gerry Moreau will start in goal once again. If we come out of it with a win, we're looking pretty good. Every game is tough, but that's what really makes it fun," added a smiling Garber.

Crucial games upcoming for baseball

By SCOTT HOOD
Collegian Staff

A quick glance at the University of Massachusetts baseball team's schedule indicates that there are 29 games left. Therefore it might be difficult for the average Joe Smoe UMass college student to believe that this weekend's games vs. Boston College (today, 3:00 p.m.) and St. Joseph's (Saturday doubleheader 1:00, Sunday 1:00) in Amherst are important. But, believe me, they are. Really.

UMass enters the weekend frolics sporting a 5-13 record and a team .309 batting average. Unfortunately the opposition has a .364 average and the pitching staff is the not-so-proud owner of a 10.21 earned run average. Sophomore Andy Clark, the scheduled starting pitcher for today's game, has an 0-1 record, and in four-and-two-thirds innings pitched has allowed 13 hits, 19 runs, (12 earned) and 12 walks. It adds up to a 23.23 ERA.

After being swept in three games in Philadelphia by Temple last weekend and being shutout at UConn on Tuesday, the Minutemen finally won for the first time since March 23,Wednesday when they beat Holy Cross 6-3 at Lorden Field.

"We needed a victory, especially playing on our home field," said UMass coach Dick Bergquist. "We needed the game for the guys to believe in themselves again, especially after Temple and UConn."

In the UConn game, the Minutemen managed to get runners on base in every inning except one, but suffered from a lack of clutch hitting. Tony Presnal, pitching on two days rest, did a more than adequate job in hurling the first seven innings. Presnal is scheduled to start the opening game in Saturday's doubleheader. Jim Knopf, 0-1 with a 5.65 ERA, will get the call in the nightcap.

Now 0-3 in the Atlantic 10, UMass is backed into a must-win two-of-three situation against St. Joseph. Anything less and they could be out of the race to qualify for the Atlantic 10 championships in May. On a historical note, this series represents the first meeting ever on the baseball diamond between UM and the Hawks.

A quick stat look: Second baseman Jack Bloise still leads the team in hitting with a .414 average, despite going 0-for-4 against the Crusaders on Wednesday. Bloise also leads with nine stolen bases...Dan Clifford, who has replaced Steve Messina in center field, raised his average to .400 by collecting three hits on Wednesday...The lowest ERA for any pitcher who has thrown more than two innings is 5.18, held by Presnal...UMass pitchers have allowed 199 hits and 188 runs in 121.2 innings...UMass batters have struck out 100 times, as compared to the opponents 52 times...The Minutemen travel to Harvard on Tuesday.

Lynn Stockley and the Minutewomen softball team travel to New Jersey tomorrow to meet Rutgers at noon and Miami of Ohio at 2 p.m. Yesterday's doubleheader with Rhode Island was washed away by the steady rain. UMass is 10-5.

Softball faces Rutgers Saturday

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

There is The Day After the URI washout for the University of Massachusetts softball team.

Yesterday's rainstorm cancelled the Rhode Island-UMass match-up and the doubleheader has been rescheduled for April 27 at NOPE.

For it was just another day in the Cage as the team prepared for another Atlantic 10 match-up against Rutgers tomorrow at noon in New Jersey. UMass will also face Miami of Ohio at 2 p.m.

The Rutgers game is as important as yesterday's URI game in the fact that UMass has to beat out Rutgers or URI for an Atlantic 10 tournament berth.

The Minutewomen and the Scarlet Knights have met once already this season as UMass took a hard-fought 4-1 victory down in South Carolina. Last year, the two split their two games.

Taking a look at the statistics, pitcher Lynn Stockley has a very deceiving record. The young sophomore has posted a 5-4 record while posting a low 0.63 ERA. After 15 games, Stockley has 38 strikeouts.

Shortstop Allyson Rioux has welded the team's hot bat with a .341 average and leads the team with 10 RBI. Catcher Beth Talbott is batting .333.

UMass' (10-5 overall, 1-0 in the conference) next home game is against Holy Cross.

Gazelles hope to have home opener

The University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team can't seem to get a break from the weather. First, their season opener on March 31 against Boston University was snowed out and now last night's game at Northeastern was postponed due to the rain in Boston.

Now, hopefully, if the weather cooperates, the Gazelles will play their first game of the season Saturday against New Hampshire at 1 p.m. at NOPE.

If the weather is bad Saturday, the teams will try to play the game on Sunday at 1 p.m. UMass co-captain Carol Progulske said yesterday.

The New Hampshire game will be of three home games the Gazelles play this season. The home game with BU was cancelled because the schools can't reschedule the game. The Northeastern game has been rescheduled for April 23.

"To get a game in will be good," Progulske said. "UNH will be one of our hardest games. We would have liked to play before though. It's a big game for us."

New Hampshire, which is ranked first in New England, defeated BU in their season opener 12-9. That was the only time they have been outside all season, Progulske said, and that could by to UMass benefit she said.

UMass, who went to the Final Four last spring, is ranked second in New England.

—GERRY deSIMAS

Funding is approved to renovate the Curry Hicks Cage

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) The University of Massachusetts will pay Springfield $2,500 to use the Civic Center for men's and women's basketball games next season while its campus court is renovated.

The university will pay the city $2,500 for each date during the 1984-85 season, said Frank McInerney, the university's athletic director.

The men's team will play all of its 12 home games there and the women will play four games there on the same dates as some men's games. The women will play their other home games at Amherst College, about a mile from their campus. Springfield is about 20 miles from Amherst. The university now spends about $1,000 each time it uses the Curry Hicks Cage on campus for games, said Aloysius Rufe, a business manager in the athletic department.

The university plans to spend $2.3 million to place a new floor, stands and other fixtures in the 50-year-old cage, a brick structure with wooden bleachers, a wooden jogging track and a wooden basketball floor over a dirt surface.

The renovations will not make the cage any larger. It seats 4,024 people.

UM loses $80,000 account

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

Conference Services at the University of Massachusetts has lost an $80,000 a year account with United Technologies Corp. following student protests over the group's presence on campus last fall.

University Conference Services Director Elizabeth A. Dale said she learned the corporation would no longer hold its advanced technical studies program at UMass when she met with members of the Hartford-based form earlier this year.

"I think they felt uncomfortable on campus, she said.

During a two-week conference in the Campus Center last October, students rallied twice on the steps of the Student Union and the Campus Center and attempted to meet with UTC officials to discuss the company's military related work. The Undergraduate Student Senate then passed two resolutions, one to deny UTC further campus access and another to demand full disclosure of University contracts with the defense department.

UTC representative James L. Hubbard, who signed the conference contracts said the UMass protests were the first UTC officials ever encountered, but were not responsible for the company's decision to not return to the campus.

"Our people enjoyed the conference and it was not disrupted (by the protestors)," Hubbard said, claiming a "better" facility has simply been found as a conference site.

Hubbard said UMass was originally chosen and had been "very conducive" for the training program because of its facilities, engineering school and cost. He declined to say where the company will have its conferences now.

Dale estimated the value of the UTC account, which included three two-week seminars in 1983, at $80,000 annually and said efforts to retain that revenue will be generated by seeking other large accounts. Conference Services, which books about 200 conferences a year, operates as a University trust fund and drew about $1.8 million in revenue last year, she said.

Profiles given for Tuesday elections

By JULIA MAYCOCK
Collegian Staff

Amherst residents will cast their votes for a number of town officials, 91 town meeting members and two selectboard members in tomorrow's town elections. Polls open at noon and close at 8 p.m. at normal precinct locations.

In the only contested race, incumbent Richard Minear, Amherst resident Charles Ferguson and finance committee chairwoman Joan Golowich are vying for the two selectboard seats, one of which is being vacated by Board Chairwoman Edith Wilkinson.

Here are the candidates' stands on the issues:

Richard Minear

Incumbent Minear, a UMass professor, is seeking his second three-year term on the selectboard, has stressed continuity and openness in town government during his campaign. He said he wants to make sure "everyone who wants to be heard (by the board) gets a chance to be heard."

Minear, a resident of Amherst and a Japanese history professor at the University of Massachusetts since 1971, has served as a Town Meeting and Planning Board member. Since 1981 he has been the assistant chairman of the board.

Town Officials will have to work with less money now, since state and federal aid is leveling off, Minear said. He said affirmative action is "always an issue" but the town is "headed in the right direction."

He is attracted to the idea of Amherst as a nuclear-free zone. People can decide "what kind of community (they) want to live in," he said.

Minear said the University has an enormous impact on the town. "Nobody on campus is totally removed from the town. People living here are fortunate to live in a tolerant and open community. One way to keep it that way is to become involved in town politics," he said.

Charles Ferguson

Ferguson, an Amherst resident since December and a former psychology professor at Fitchburg State College, describes himself as "the little boy who doesn't see the emperor's new clothes. You need to question authority."

Though Ferguson has never held a political office, he ran for selectman in Lincoln, capturing 40 percent of the vote. Ferguson is working full-time on Democratic presidential candidate Rev. Jesse Jackson's campaign.

Ferguson said he is running to give voters a choice. "Amherst is politically naive. It's in it's infancy. (I'm trying) to rescue the endangered species of democracy," he said.

Low voter turnout in town elections concerns Ferguson. Last 3,589 of Amherst's 13,889 registered voters cast their ballot. This year there are 16,205 registered voters. "We have this freedom and we're letting it atrophy," Ferguson said.

Despite arguments that Ferguson is inexperienced because he is new to Amherst, he considers it "an asset, not a liability."

"On a five-member board, the only time anyone's vote is significant is when it's a tie breaker. It's better to have an objective person who won't get caught up in any polarization," he said

Joan Golowich

Golowich, looks at local government from a budgetary angle and said it is important for selectboard members to have broad experience in Amherst politics.

"Amherst is a unique place. There are a varied array of issues coming up and you have to know where they're coming from. You have to have a sense of history," she said.

Golowich is well-versed in Amherst government. Presently chair of the finance committee, she is serving her second three-year term. She has been a town meeting member for more than a decade, has experience as an administrative assistant to the town manager and as a budget officer.

The economic future of Amherst is Golowich's primary concern. State aid had decreased slightly and the only funding the town has is through the property tax which cannot be raised by more than 2½ percent a year, she said.

Golowich said some programs may have to be cut. "It will be difficult but somebody has to make those decisions. It's very difficult to manage in a period of declining resources," she said.

"I hope my experience can help to foresee budgetary problems before we have to react in a crisis situation," Golowich said.

The candidate said she is "amazed" that the selectboard race is the only one which is uncontested. Golowich said students should be aware of local government. "Certainly they are citizens of the town I've always looked at them as a resource," she said.

Students count in elections

By LAURA YEE
Collegian Staff

In an effort to increase student interest in town government, Project Big Vote has targeted Tuesday's Amherst town election as a first step to show that students really do care about politics.

Joel Weissman, director of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA), said that students who voted in the presidential primary here March 13 "are most likely to vote" in the town elections as well.

"We have a list of students and have sent out letters and put up flyers. We've done some calling and some door knocking," Weissman said.

Weissman said a recent survey on voting trends "shows that students really care."

According to the survey conducted by University's Project Pulse, of the 388 students polled:

- 81 percent felt that students should take an active role in Amherst politics.
- 75 percent felt that local officials care about student views
- 90 percent felt that local politics were not too complicated to understand.
- 71 percent felt that they could have some control over local government

The survey also said this large student interest in politics should result in a large UMass voter turnout in Tuesday's election.

Project Big Vote is a combined effort of Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG), the Student Government Association (SGA), and SCERA as an "ongoing process to start a strong educational component to make students more aware of what the issues are," Weissman said.

The first step of Project Big Vote, Weissman said, "is to have a large turnout in Tuesday's town elections."

Competition a minimum in Oscar's

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Glamorous figures from the old and new Hollywood gather Monday night for a less elaborate, and perhaps shorter, broadcast of the 56th annual Academy Awards, which are expected to prove a runaway for "Terms of Endearment."

Unlike last year, when "Gandhi" and "E.T.: The Extra-Terrestrial" seemed in a tight race, "Terms of Endearment," a bittersweet study of a mother-daughter relationship, has been widely predicted as the winner for best picture of 1983.

Also favored are the movie's director-writer James L. Brooks, lead actress Shirley MacLaine and supporting actor Jack Nicholson.

Producer Jack Haley Jr. has planned a glittering show which he hopes will be briefer than the marathon telecasts of recent years.

"When the Oscar show runs longer than 'Gone with the Wind' you're in trouble," said Haley. "Last year's broadcast went three hours and 33 minutes. We hope to keep it at three hours Monday night.

"There will be no big opening number and no elaborate production numbers. The nominated songs will fill the bill for entertainment.

"We've tried to reduce the chitchat and the flat jokes. We've designed the set so there won't be long entrances.

"Acceptance speeches are always a problem. But at the Academy luncheon for nominees, I had more than half of them in one room, and I asked them to keep their remarks short."

Monday night's presenters range from such veteran stars as Cary Grant, Ginger Rogers, Jackie Cooper and Shirley Temple to current favorites Kevin Bacon "Footloose," Daryl Hannah "Splash" and Mathew Broderick "WarGames."

Haley promised more film clips this year, including some from the classic comedies produced by Hal Roach, winner of a special award. George "Spanky" McFarland, formerly of "Our Gang," will help salute his oldtime boss.

Amherst Bookshop offers alternative to Textbook Annex

By ERIKA KLEIDERMAN
Collegian Staff

While the Jeffery Amherst Bookshop recently began soliciting University of Massachusetts professors for their fall textbook orders by mail, the store's manager said the marketing project is not an effort to take business away from the UMass Textbook Annex.

"Obviously we are not in direct competition with the annex. The annex serves its purpose and we could never take the business away from them," said Jeffery Amherst textbook manager Sara Leo. "We just want to be available for UMass professors who want an alternative."

The Bookshop is offering professors a 10 percent discount on all trade book purchases and has also extended this offer to UMass students, including a 10 percent discount on all school supplies purchased at the store. The Jeffery Bookshop, however, offers no discount on academic textbooks to either professors or students.

Leo said the shop's advantages are personalized service, which students receive while trying to locate a book, the close atmosphere of a bookstore as opposed to a large factory outlet atmosphere, and the promise that book orders will be processed immediately.

UMass Textbook Annex manager Russel Evans said he is aware of the competition from the small downtown bookstores, but "I believe in free enterprise and we encourage competition." But Evans added that faculty placing their orders with downtown stores should also order from the annex "to be fair to students.....expecially handicapped students."

The annex offers a 5 percent discount on all books and also makes special orders for students and offers cash refunds if students purchase the wrong book. Evans said "no other downtown store does this....they only offer credit refunds."

Evans said downtown bookstores have had no affect on Annex business and business has increased, with this year's gross earnings about 7½ percent more than last year's.

May replace cable-t.v. sets stolen in C.C.

By JEANETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

Three cable-television sets stolen from the Campus Center last year may be replaced soon, if the Campus Center Concourse Improvement Panel approves requests from the Union Video Center.

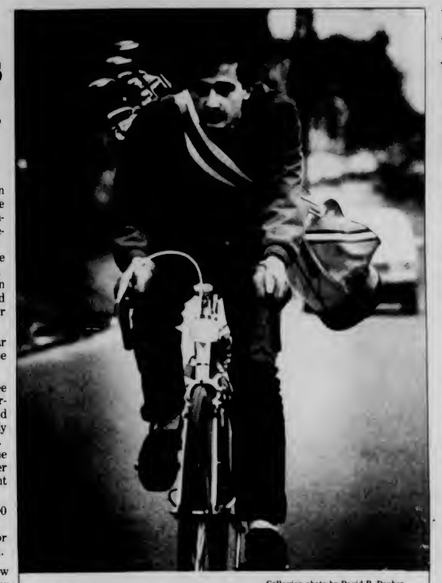
At present, two video monitors are located in the Campus Center Concourse. Five other outlets exist– two on the main cable and three others that can be reached by simple extensions, said Christopher Hurley, of the Union Video Center.

Three monitors were stolen last year from storage on the second floor of the Campus Center, Hurley said.

"We would like to have the three monitors replaced," cable systems coordinator Mark Chesak said. Hurley said UVC would like the systems permanently mounted to reduce the chances of theft. The monitors cost about $400 each, and the stands $100, said John Turbish, former chairman of the Concourse Improvement panel.

The panel also proposed to replace a $100 tape deck that was stolen in February. UVC members requested $1500 for replacements at a panel meeting last week.

The panel also planned a student art show and competition in the Campus Center music room, across from the Blue Wall April 30th through May 2nd.



Members of arts groups such as the Spectrum and DRUM will judge a competition on paintings and $100 will be awarded to the first place winner.

Panel members also discussed a painting hanging in the Campus Center which was termed "racist" in a letter to the Collegian this semester.

"It's a piece of artwork and the painting reflects the times," said Gray. "It was done to reflect the diversity of UMass in the sixties. Turbish said there is a need for "an additional mural showing 1984, the changed university."

The panel also "strongly recommended" mounting outside the Hatch directing people to the Collegian office, WMUA-FM Radio studio, and the Index office, which are located on the first floor of the Campus Center. "This sign is necessary to the existence of these groups," said John Turbus.

He said the groups lose potential revenue because many people do not know where the offices are located.

Divorced women carry extra responsibilities

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Correspondent

Divorced women face a significant decline in income and an increase in the responsibilities of single parenting, according to University of Massachusetts sociology professor Naomi Gerstel.

"Many women face an enormous decline in income whereas men do not face this decline. A very small proportion of men pay alimony or child support, Gerstel said she is writing a book titled, "Uncoupling: A Study Of Women's And Men's Experience Of Separation And Divorce.'

Gerstel said there are great benefits for women who are given custody of their children after a divorce, but they are usually accompanied by "a number of pressures which men do not have to face on a daily basis because they do not live with the children."

"Many women with children found it difficult to begin relationships with new lovers," Gerstel said. "Men on the other hand, don't face these restraints because they are not full-time parents."

Though many people believe women have more meaningful friendships than men, Gerstel said it is difficult for some women to talk freely about their experiences without feeling uncomfortable.

"Women have a greater norm of reciprocity. They have learned that they should be listeners as well as talkers. Since in a divorce experience they need to talk rather than listen, they feel as though they are burdening," she said.

Teresa Fuentes Wilson, a UMass undergraduate enrolled in the University Without Walls program, is a divorced mother of two who found life after divorce to be "very difficult".

She said that once she came to Amherst, she found other women like herself in similar situations, who were working, going to school and taking care of children.

She said the decline in income she experienced was a significant problem.

"I didn't feel like I had any skills. When I would apply for a job I felt I had nothing to offer," she said.

"My husband had more skills than I did for the job market and felt more self assured," she added. "I know many women who are not sufficiently supported by their ex-husbands", Wilson said, "but most women don't want alimony, they want to be self supportive."

Lori Hadlock, a 19-year-old zoology major from Wellesley, has seen her mother go through two divorce experiences - "I think that although my mother is a really strong person, the whole thing was probably harder on her, financially and emotionally."

Noting her mother's well-established career and active social life, Hadlock said, "Women seem less dependent on men as they used to be, it's as though they want to gain a sense of worth and identity by themselves."

Physical Plant to work with group to beautify campus

By LAURA YEE
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Campus Planning Committee, which considers itself a "watch dog committee," is developing closer ties with the Physical Plant to improve the appearance of campus grounds.

Committee Chairman and art design professor Arnold Friedmann, said this is the first time in many years the Physical Plant has become actively involved with the committee.

"We're not a decision-making body, we have no money or power," Friedmann said. "Funding and approval comes from the administration. We're just an advisory committee and the Physical Plant is now willing to work with us. What we can do is make recommendations."

"The committee is very concerned and we offer suggestions, and consider ourselves a 'watchdog-committee,' and serious efforts are being made," he said.

Friedmann said many of his collegues criticize the appearance of the campus unjustly but what they may not realize "is that projects and improvements take a lot of time and money."

A campus "master plan," developed by Sasaki Association of Watertown about 15 years ago, for future development and shape of the campus, is now "temporarily in limbo," Friedmann said. The committee is urging the Physical Plant to re-evaluate "what's proposed in the master plan and see what may possibly be implemented," he said.

"We have landscape architects and botanists looking into ways for possible improvements. The disaster areas are between the Tower Library, the Student Union Building,and the Campus Center Garage. The garage is a part of the Campus Landscape Improvement Program (CLIP) which is not funded at present, Friedmann said.

The CLIP program is also something the committee wants the Physical Plant to look into.

Friedman said these critical areas are in need of millions of dollars for improvement. The committee is also very optimistic because Roger Cherewatti, Director of the Physical Plant, is aware of the problem and is working on it," he said.

Friedmann said a proposal for a bus turn about on Massachusetts Avenue was originally defeated, but passed after further review by the committee and will be implemented this year.

In order to make plans for improvements, the committee "assures all studies have been done about landscape and safety and to be sure these projects are beneficial to all," Friedmann said.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Keeping our public education public

Hello students. I am writing another letter to the Collegian and once again it is about tuition policy. (I must be getting boring) But maybe these figures will keep you from nodding off: a $167 increase in tuition, a rise of 15 percent over last year. Those figures are the ones the Board of Regents of Higher Education have proposed for academic year 1984-85. Funny how the Regents proposed increase is the highest percent increase allowed by the new tuition policy. (A policy, by the way, that has many, including myself, questioning whether maximum possible accessibility to public higher education can be maintained.)

Gregory Madden

During discussions, before the policy was adopted, the Regents' staff noted that the 15 percent figure was a ceiling and not a floor, but lo and behold, in its first year of being in effect, UMass is hit with a 15 percent rise in tuition. In view of this fact perhaps we should look at another ceiling in the tuition policy. The policy states that the student shall bear no more than 33 percent of the cost of their education. The 33 percent figure applies to any students within the Massachusetts public higher education system; be they at a state university, a regional university, a state college, or a community college. Problem is that no students were bearing more then 29.7 percent of the cost of their education before the policy went into effect. The 33 percent ceiling does seem to leave some space for shifting more of the cost of education from the Commonwealth to the students

But we don't have to worry. The Board realizes the difficulty students and their families have paying for school, what with rising fees and other costs, and they would not try to shift a larger burden onto the students. Well, maybe there is reason to worry if one looks at what happened in the first year of the new policy. One does not have to be an Albert Einstein or a clairvoyant to envision tuition increases until students' portion of the cost of education reaches the ceiling of 33 percent. The public higher education system is moving toward a situation where the term public may soon be considered a misnomer.

The time has come for us as consumers of the public higher education system to take action and have a say in how the system operates. HOW? The Public Policy Committee of the SGA is sponsoring a letter writing drive, holding a rally on campus against the Regents' tuition proposal and renting a bus for a rally against the proposal at the State House. I ask you, yes, you the person reading this column to participate and help keep public education public. But maybe you're saying to youself, "What do I care? I'm graduating" or "Nobody listens to us anyway." Well you still have reasons to help. Many of those of you graduating have younger brothers or sisters who are planning to or are attending a public higher education institution. If not then you must have friends who are not graduating and who will be affected. Yes there are reasons for seniors to care. Will our actions do any good? YES! Sources at the State House have let members of the Public Policy Committee know that we can fight this proposal. Members of the UMass Board of Trustees have problems with the proposal as does President Knapp. We have powerful allies, let's not waste the opportunity we have been given. Sign a letter to your state senator or representative at the Public Policy table outside the Hatch. (If you sent one to your representative you can still send one to your senator.) Go to the rally outside the SUB on Wednesday at noon. Sign up at the Public Policy table for the free bus to Boston on Thursday and rally outside the State House.

Gregory Madden is a member of the Public Policy Committee of the SGA.

Gays do contribute to society

To the Editor,

There have been many anti-gay letters in the Collegian regarding Gay and Lesbian Awareness Week. One even goes so far as to equate homosexuality with incest and bestiality. This is not only preposterous, but deeply offensive. Such people accuse gays of "flaunting their sexuality." Rather, they themselves should be reproached for flaunting their inhumanity.

People who do not recongnize the gay lifestyle as full, rich, and acceptable are simply not looking closely enough, or with proper elasticity of the mind.

Gays lead healthy, normal lives and, like the members of any minority group, contribute to the overall diversity and richness of life.

Silent majority responds

To the Editor,

"We are writing in response to . . ." How many times lately have we seen letters to the editor in the Collegian that start with this line? Well, we are 'writing in response to' these people, because, quite frankly, we're tired of listening to them.

'We' are the non-gay, non-raping, non-woman hating decent males who we feel comprise the vast majority of men on this campus. And we are sick to death of the radical feminists who seem to have a monopoly on 'letters to the editor' in the Collegian and other daily papers, preaching the man-haters gospel and warning the 'sisters' to beware of the raping monsters, who, it would seem, comprise about 98 percent of the non-gay male population, in their humble opinion.

We've had it with being told by these people that this movie or that movie degrades women, and that if we watch it, we will most likely go out and beat and rape somebody. I think we can decide for ourselves what movies we want to see, thank you.

We're also very tired of you using the much overpublicized New Bedford incident as a excuse to fill newspapers with slanderous diatribe against men in general. You aren't the only ones who have feelings. So quit acting like you people can do no wrong and have cornered the market on decency.

The high cost of hitchhiking

To the Editor,

In this column on April 5, Brooke States obviously feels it is the drivers obligation or responsibility to pick up every poor legitimate hitchhiker thumbing down the road. I think he should come out of his self-centered, narrow-minded little world and look at it from the drivers side as well.

As a driver, I incur many of the expenses that everyone faces in owning a car. These costs extend far past the price it takes to fill the tank with gas or add a quart of oil. Insurance, excise and sales taxes, as well as annual repair expenditures are all part of it. So why, I ask, should I pay to keep my car on the road so Mr. States can leave his at home and leach off me?

Another important fact Mr. States forgot to mention was the liability a driver accepts when he/she picks up a passenger. If I were to get into an accident and he was injured or killed, what's to stop him or his family from sueing me for all I've got? The reasons behind not picking up a hitchhiker extend far beyond the mere intimidation they may impose. Just pulling over to pick one up puts you in danger of being struck by an unobserving tailgater and on most highways it's against the law.

I saw Mr. States hitchhiking to Boston the other morning. I was sorry I could not pick him up, but I was driving the bus so I could afford to run my car. Perhaps Mr. States should break away from his pool game and get a job so he can drive himself around.

Spring is here, so are Moonies

Spring is finally here. There is plenty of fresh air, the birds have returned and "Moonies" are starting to infiltrate the UMass campus, as well as campuses all over the country. "Moonies" are members of Reverend Sun Myung Moon's Unification Church. Since members of this church are becoming more prevalent, it might be a good idea for students to become better informed about his controversial religion.

Lorena Nozzolillo

It is estimated that the Unification Church has at least 50,000 members nationally and approximately two million world wide. Moon, a middle-aged, balding Korean, started his religion in Korea in 1954. It has now spread to 120 countries and has an estimated annual income of $60 million in the U.S. alone. Moon himself lives on a $625,000 estate in Irvington, New York.

The main document the church uses is a 536 page book called The Divine Principle. The basic theory discussed in this book states that God's plan to save mankind failed when Jesus was crucified. Therefore, according to Moon theology, the human race is badly in need of a new messiah. Moon had not claimed to be the Messiah but, he has stated that the Messiah was born in Korea between 1917 and 1930. Moon was born in Korea in 1920 (You don't need a grade point average of 3.8 to figure that one out).

When Moon first brought his church to America in the early 70's, its source of income was the profits brought in by members selling flowers, candles and other items on street corners. The church is now a multi-million dollar operation. It owns the New Yorker Hotel in downtown New York and they also own property in California, Alabama, and even Massachusetts.

Specifically speaking, Gloucester, Mass., a prominent fishing town, has become a favorite with the church in recent years.

In the past 5 years since they have been in this town, they have a great deal of real estate shopping. They purchased The International Seafood Company, The Gloucester Lobster Company, and Bob's Clam Shack. The church aroused the most amount of controversy when they brought The Cardinal Cushing Manor. The Manor was originally owned by the Order of the Daughters of Mary of the Immaculate Conception. The order refused to sell the Manor to the Unification Church. They sold it to Myron Brock, a business man from New Hampshire. Brock almost immediately re-sold the Manor to the Unification Church.

Very few people in Gloucester are happy with the Moonies being in Gloucester. Especially that city's mayor, Leo Alper. At one point Alper asked in disgust: "Have you ever heard of a religious guy owning one hundred fifty corporations, and running them? Now what in the hell kind of religion is that? You either pray to God or to the (cash) register."

Well now, let's see what we are actually dealing with. We have a man who indicates that he might be the Messiah, yet he is the head of a multi-million dollar network. That's funny, I don't remember Jesus being an entrepreneur. This is a man who claims to be a loving father, but stated in a 1974 Congressional report "...any person or any organization that goes against our organization will drastically come down and die." This is supposedly a man who is pure in spirit and cares only about God and religion, yet why was he involved with Tongsun Park and the Korean scandal?

Rev. Moon is a powerful man with strong ties in both government and big business. When people think of the "Moonies" they just shake their heads and laugh. They don't think of them as being anything more than religious fanatics. However, that's the way people thought about Jim Jones before Guyana. Hopefully, those people will think again

You guessed it.

Lots.

Because when you get the American Express Card now, you can use it for vacation travel, restaurants, hotels, and car rentals. As well as for shopping for things like a new stereo or clothes.

And if you think you need the Card now, just wait until you're working. (It's going to happen sooner than you think.) Then it will be absolutely indispensable.

So apply today. All you need is a $10,000 job. That's it. No strings. No gimmicks. And this offer is even good for 12 months after you graduate.

Because American Express wants to show that we not only believe in your future, but we also believe in you now.

Just call 800-528-8000 for a Special Student Application or look for one at your college bookstore or on your campus bulletin boards.

The American Express Card. Don't leave school without it.℠

out of the game with the flu, and was replaced by Gerry Byrne, who played an outstanding game marking one of Rutgers top attackmen, according to Garber.

"The defense was excellent. (Tommy) Aldrich played (Ken) Trabulsky and held him to one goal. You can't ask for much more than that. Their goalie John Naslonski (who stopped 10 shots) played very well and was a difference. Our defensive midfielders, Mark Stratton, Ted Spencer and Rick Zoerner also played really well," added Garber.

UMass will host Brown University, the defending New England champs, on Wednesday on Boyden Hill in the home opener, in what should be a big game.

"Our inter-squad scrimmages with them, show that they are a lot like Rutgers, so we will play the same type of game. People who like lacrosse should come down and see a good game," said Garber.

Bruins eliminated by Montreal

MONTREAL (AP) - It was a brutally real regular National Hockey season for the Montreal Canadians, but with a 5-0 victory on Saturday night, they eliminated Boston Bruins from the playoffs with perfection.

With rookie goalie Steve Penney backstopping them and their forwards and defensemen checking the Bruins to a virtual standstill, Montreal completed a three-game upset sweep of their best-of-five Adams Division semifinal.

It also ended a three-year string of first-round playoff frustration for the Canadians, who won a postseason series for the first time since 1980.

The Canadians had just finished a 35-40-5 season, 29 points behind first-place Boston, for their worst record in 33 years.

They plummetted into the playoffs, finishing with a six-game losing streak to face the Bruins, who had surged by the Buffalo Sabres into first place with a season-ending seven-game unbeaten string.

Boston Coach Gerry Cheevers said he knew Montreal would be tough to beat but didn't bank on them shutting down his team, particularly snipers Rick Middleton and Barry Pederson, so effectively.

"I never dreamed we'd play so badly tonight," he said, "And the odds on one player Tom Fergus scoring both goals, all the goals for your team in a series..."

walks, and getting two strikeouts.

UMass couldn't get anything together despite four hits.

Miami won the game in the bottom of the seventh. Shelia Knowman singled and was moved to second on the bunt sacrifice by Laura Righer. Knowman stole second and proceeded to score on a long fly ball to left by Mimi Fly.

Janet Miller kept the game scoreless in the third making a great diving catch with two out, runners on first and third to keep the game 0-0.

PLAYOFF PICTURE- Rutgers played URI in a doubleheader and the results of that will be interesting to see. UMass best bet for a NCAA berth is to qualify for the Atlantic 10 championships and they have to beat out Rutgers or URI to do it. UMass plays URI on April 27 and split the season series 1-1 with Rutgers.

UM Baseball splits over weekend

By SCOTT HOOD
Collegian Staff

One Strike. That's all that separated the University of Massachusetts baseball team from their third devastating defeat in two days at the hands of Atlantic 10 rival St. Joseph's yesterday at Lorden Field.

Scene: Bottom of the ninth inning. UMass trailing 7-6. Two outs. Runners on second and third. St. Joe's pitcher Sean Finnegan, a physical carbon copy of White Sox hurler LaMarr Hoyt, is looking to clinch a Hawk three-game sweep against UMass batter Tom Fabian.

If one had witnessed the previous days' happenings, then the ending to Sunday's game would have been simple to predict. This time, however, the good guys pulled it out as Fabian drilled a single to center field, delivering two runs and a much-needed UMass win that prevented the Minutemen from dropping to 0-6 in the Atlantic 10.

Tom Fabian slams the 2 run single that beat St. Joe's Sunday.

Saturday's doubleheader can be described, in a word, as wacky. Also frustrating. For UMass anyway, in particular pitcher Tony Presnal, who, in the bitter cold pitched superbly, in the opening game, striking out 10 and walking nary a Hawk batter. In five of the seven innings St. Joe's went down 1-2-3. Two pitches cost him the victory. Up 1-0 on a Bruce Kingman RBI single in the second, Presnal ran into trouble in the third, hitting a batter and allowing a single to Dave Parks. Lead-off Ed Berryman then picked on a Presnal fastball and clanged it off the scoreboard in left. Rocketed it is more like it.

UM bounced back in the bottom of the inning, scoring two runs without a hit, combining two walks, two errors, and a fielders choice. The Minutemen inched ahead 4-3 in the fifth, again without the benefit of a hit. Andy Connors walked, scampered to second on an arrant pickoff throw, went to third on a flyout, and scored on an error by third baseman Tim Koch, who botched a grounder by Todd Ezold.

The second Presnal bad pitch came in the sixth as James Moran followed a single by Chris Loschiavo with a long homer to right.

In the second game, UM snatched defeat from the jaws of victory. Ahead 4-0 entering the seventh with Jim Knopf sailing along with a two-hitter, all hell broke loose as the Minutemen were buried alive under an avalanche of seven Hawk runs and six hits. After loading the bases on two walks and a single, Knopf was replaced by Matt Subocz, who uncharacteristically made like a firefighter in "Farenheit 451" by throwing kerosene on the fire. Facing only four batters, Subocz surrendered three singles and a sacrifice fly before giving way to John Martin, who was promptly rocked for a three-run homer by Moran.

UM gained the early lead by scoring a single run in the fourth (RBI single by Steve Messina), a two in the fifth (RBI double by Angelo Salustri, who was later walked home), and another in the sixth (Messina's RBI single).

Yesterday's game was a back-and-forth affair that featured four lead changes. With the contest tied 2-2, UM tallied single runs in the fourth (RBI single by Jack Bloise) and fifth (RBI double by Todd Comeau). St. Joe's erupted for three runs in the sixth, one coming on yet another HR by Moran, to take the lead. Singles runs by each team in the next four at-bats gave the Hawks a 7-6 lead, setting up Fabian's heroics in the ninth.

On Friday, UM got the weekend frolics off to a positive note, coasting past Boston College, 6-1, behind the pitching of Andy Clark and Steve Allard and the hitting of Todd Ezold (two-run single) and Jeff Cimini (solo HR).

Women's lacrosse wins first of the season

By ED CUNNINGHAM
Collegian Staff

Victory number one for the University of Massachusetts Womens' Lacrosse team took all of fifty minutes of play in the young campaign. Possessing the calmness and coolness of seasoned veterans, the Gazelles defeated the University of New Hampshire who were ranked number one in New England, to prevail in the gusty winds of Nope field with a 10-9 victory.

"They kept their heads and knew what to do in the last few minutes," stated interim Head Coach Polly Keener. Keener leads the team while Head Coach Pam Hixon is away coaching the United States Olympic team.

The key figure in the waning minutes in the home opener was the player behind the mask and pads. UMass junior netminder Debbie DeJesus played exceptionally well turning away several point blank shots from the pesky Wildcat attackers.

The first twenty-five minutes of this contest were a totally different game than the second twenty-five minute stanza. At the six minute mark, UNH hopped out to a quick 1-0 lead on a goal by freshman Karen Geromini. Geromini tallied once again in less than a minute putting the Gazelles in a small hole. At 17:05, Susan Kosloski broke the goal line plane for UMass and the lead was cut to one.

The Wildcats rebounded with two more goals as the lead stretched to 4-1. The Wildcats were picking apart the UMass zone defense. In the final ten minutes of the half, UMass began to emerge from their rut. Two unassisted goals from Linda Haytayan and Mary Scott, coupled with Pam Moryl's two tallies, deadlocked the score at fives as the half ended.

With less than one minute gone in half number two, UNH forward Amy Walsh had two golden opportunities but was shut down by DeJesus. Suddenly the Gazelles started performing like a well oiled machine. UMass was playing somewhat of a 'new found' defense and offense. On the defensive side, they played a tough zone but also pressured the ball, causing inopportune passes from the Wildcats.

Offensively, UMass played a controlled game in the second half, and at 23:22 Haytayan gave UMass the lead they would never relinquish.

UMass has a week to work out the kinks in their game, until they head to Harvard next weekend for two games. The Gazelles face Harvard on Saturday and Northwestern on Sunday afternoon, and on Tuesday, they'll be back at NOPE to face Boston College.

Gorillas fall to Rutgers

By ADAM NAZIMOWITZ
Collegian Staff

Although the score was not indicate of their play, the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team did drop their first game of the season, Saturday, to sixth ranked Rutgers University, 8-4 in New Brunswick, New Jersey.

"It was a great game with two good teams going at it. The kids played a good, hard, tough game. Their effort was a super - 100 percent, but their execution was only about 60 percent," said Coach Dick Garber.

Rutgers jumped out ahead early, building a 3-0 lead by the 5:53 mark of the first quarter. Greg Fisk came back 25 seconds later to score off of a Bubba Sandford pass to make it 3-1. Perry Seale scored an unassisted goal to cut the lead to 3-2 at the 8:01 mark to end the scoring for the quarter. Unfortunately, for The Gorillas, that would be as close as they would come to The Scarlet Knights.

At that point of the game, it was still up for grabs. But it was Rutgers that capatilized on their scoring chances. They came out strong in the second quarter and scored three goals (two within nine seconds) to pull out to a comfortable 6-2 margin, before Sandford scored the first of his two goals on the afternoon to close the score to 6-3 at halftime.

Rutgers scored the only goal of the third quarter to make it 7-3. Sandford once again responded with a goal, as he was set up by Mike Fiorini for the second straight time to close the score to 7-4 with 10:30 remaining in the game.

But, Rutgers scored one more time to make it 8-4, and UMass frustration was shown as a good opportunity at an empty net sailed over the top of the net and off the field.

Gerry Moreau once again started in goal for the Gorillas and played well making 13 saves. He was replaced by Benny Strokes for the last four and a half minutes of the game. Defender Barry Cain had to be taken

Softball hitting is weak ; UMass drops two close ones

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

It has long been said that great pitching can carry a team. But even a team that features super pitching needs hitting. Ask the Baltimore Orioles or the University of Massachusetts softball team.

The Minutewomen lost two close games on Saturday to drop their record to 10-7. They lost to Atlantic 10 rival Rutgers 2-1 and to Miami of Ohio 1-0 in the bottom of the seventh in New Brunswick, New Jersey.

In the Rutgers game, UMass gave up six hits while only gathering in three. Against Miami, UMass outhit the Ohioans 4-3.

"I was pleased with everything except our hitting," Head Coach Elaine Sortino said. "We have to get more than a run for our pitchers."

Both games were ones that keep you on the edge of your seat said Sortino, and were played in very cold weather with wind gusts roaring all over the field.

In the first game, UMass fell behind to Rutgers 1-0 in the fourth after a double, a wild pitch, a walk and a single.

UMass evened up the score in the fourth as centerfielder Tina Coffin led off with a single that was misplayed and the senior stretched it out into a double.

Allyson Rioux, who had three hits on the day (two in the Rutgers game) singled up the middle and the game was tied.

However in the fifth, Lynn Stockley (5-5) with a full count on Pat Adorna, walked in the winning run with the bases loaded. Stockley had four walks and four strikeouts.

UMass had a chance to tie it up in the seventh after Rioux singled and Robin Read got on base with a error. But the two were stranded there as the game ended.

Against Miami of Ohio, Cathy Ford tossed a good game allowing three hits, three

State regents' committee backs $167 tuition hike

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The Finance Committee of the state Board of Regents of higher education endorsed a proposal by a 4-1 vote yesterday to raise tuition at the University of Massachusetts by 15 percent.

Students will pay an additional $167 a year to attend UMass should the new plan gain the approval of the regents, who will vote on the issue April 18.

UMass students on the Student Government Association's (SGA) Public Policy Committee protested the proposed increase at a 90 minute hearing yesterday in Boston, saying they could not afford it.

"I know I speak for the others (on the committee) when I say that an increase of 15 percent will make the university inaccessible to students in lower middle class and lower class situations," said SGA co-president Rick Patrick.

Students are being joined by UMass President David C. Knapp in their opposition to the hike. Both Knapp and the students will present their opinions to the legislature at the Statehouse on Thursday.

Members of the UMass Board of Trustees have also voiced concern about the tuition raise.

"The regents are interested in closing the disparity between some of the segments of the higher education system and bringing into the state an estimated $14 million," said Estelle Shanley, a spokeswoman for Higher Education Chancellor John Duff.

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' proposed budget for 1984-85 includes about $15 million in higher tuition.

Should the plan be approved, the Boston and Amherst campuses of the University will see tuition rise from the current $1,129 to $1,296. Tuition will cover 25.8 percent of the cost of education, compared to the current 22.4 percent students pay.

The increase would make UMass the only major institution in the New England area to raise tuition by double digit figures. The university would remain the second cheapest, next to the Universtiy of Connecticut, of the six New England state universities.

The tuition plan limits increases to 15 percent a year. Thus a school such as UMass, which is well under the 33 percent ceiling, could face major increases next year.

Proponents of the hike claim that increased scholarship money and tuition will help needy students in dealing with the higher bills.

"That's not true," countered Patrick. "The average tuition waiver here (at UMass) is only $360, and that's not enough. That scholarship money will effect only a small percentage of students."

Fran Pheeney, chair of the Public Policy Committee, "will lead the charge against this plan," Patrick said.

"Fran, myself and Jim (Keller, who is also co-president of the SGA) will be planning to get students up to Boston on Thursday, writing letters, and lobbying representatives," Patrick said. "Something has to be done."

Students on ballot today

By LARRY BOUCHIE
and DAVID LINTON
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts will be well represented today in the Amherst town elections as several students will be running for town meeting member positions, while other residents will be running for nine town offices.

Voters go to the polls today between noon and 8 p.m. to elect town meeting members for all precincts, including two that encompass University residential areas.

Precinct three is composed mainly of the Orchard Hill, Central, Northeast and Sylvan residential areas. The Southwest residential area makes up most of precinct four.

UMass students are on the ballot for precinct three and the Student Government Association (SGA) president's office is encouraging students to vote for five other write-in candidates in that precinct.

Paul E. Iarrobino and Lori Rocchio, both UMass students, are on the ballot for one year terms in precinct three.

Students Paul Howling, John Kenney, Courtland Cline, Steven Shuster and Reuven Michael Carlyle are running as write-ins.

In precinct four, Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG) campus coordinator Richard McClintlock is running for a one-year term and student Geoffrey A. Feller is running for a two-year position.

Iarrobino said that "rent control is the most pressing issue," Rocchio said that by becoming a town meeting member she "can represent student interests and those that are important to everyone."

"Those of us who are registered to vote in our town have a responsibility to see we are represented in our community," said SGA co-president Rick Patrick.

For the town offices the only contested positions are on the Amherst Board of Selectmen. Three candidates, incumbent Richard Minear, current finance committee chair Joan Golowich and Charles Ferguson are running for two spots.

"The turnout will be low because there aren't too many contests on the ballot," town clerk Estelle Matusko said.

Matusko said most of the 16,205 registered voters in Amherst are more concerned with the state and national elections than with the town elections. Last year only 26 percent of the electorate turned out.

Open town moderator, school committee, library trustee and redevelopment authority positions are each being sought by only one candidate.

"Students should vote and express their concern about creating an open and positive communication between themselves and other Amherst residents," said Carlyle.

Amherst residents can vote in the following locations:

Precinct 1 — North Congregational Church; Precinct 2 — North Fire Station; Precinct 3 — Lutheran Church; Precinct 4 & 5 — Bangs Community Center; Precinct 6 — Fort River School; Precinct 7 — Crocker Farm School; Precinct 8 — Munson Library.

UMass honors program is a 'college within a college'

BY VICKY A. SPAGNOLI
Collegian Staff

For the past several years honors programs nation-wide have been trying to increase and improve enrollment. The Universisty of Massachusetts Honors Program has done both and is now "booming," according to its director.

The program has left the "Roman-toga concept of honors," said Director Linda Lockwood, describing previous years when honors students consisted mostly of juniors and seniors in the College of Arts and Sciences.

"We don't want to be a clubhouse," she said, "we want to be a cosmopolitan, university-wide program...and an integrated four-year experience."

Since Lockwood began directing the program two years ago, the number of honors students has increased to 400 from 200, and Lockwood expects a further increase. It's growing, she said, "maybe too fast."

The Honors Program has developed special interest housing on the Orchard Hill Residential Area. The fifth and sixth floors of Field-Grayson are designated as honors housing and have a higher density of honors students than any other dormitory at UMass, Lockwood said.

The Honors program offers students a "college within a college," Lockwood said, noting that students are offered individualized curriculum counseling as well as the comaraderie of a small group of individuals.

Honors classes are limited to 20 students each and range from regular classroom courses to colloquia, to independent studies. These courses are open to all university students.

The honors program incorporates departmental honors courses as well as a wide range taught voluntarily by professors from various departments. "I am heartened by the support (of faculty)," Lockwood said.

Career data on honors graduates, however, is currently "dismally incomplete," she said. "Recognition shouldn't be the primary goal. I give the credentiality the soft-sell, and I give the process of being an honors student the hard-sell."

Lockwood begins recruitment for the four-year program by sending mailings to eligible incoming students each year. To be eligible, first-year students must have minimum SAT scores of 1150 and rank in the top 15 percent of their class.

Satellite repair crew plans second attempt

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Short on maneuvering fuel but given a "high probability of success," Challenger's orbiting repairmen will try again today to tow the slowly turning Solar Max satellite into the shuttle cargo bay to be fixed.

The shuttle would be in position to latch on to Solar Max beginning at 8:11 a.m. EST and "it may be another half orbit before we actually achieve capture," said flight director John Cox. Challenger circles the Earth every 93 minutes at its height of nearly 300 miles.

Thanks to brains and computer technology, the satellite — twisting and tumbling after rescue attempts failed Sunday — was making only one turn every 12 minutes in one direction, with a slight wobble.

At that rate, said Cox, astronaut Terry Hart will have four to five minutes on each turn to guide the shuttle arm to a pin on the side of the satellite and lock it on.

Mystery cloud baffles trans-Pacific jet crew

NEW YORK - A Japan Air Lines cargo plane, and possibly another airliner, went through a "suspicious-looking cloud" over the Pacific Ocean yesterday, an airline spokesman said. He said the JAL plane was checked for radioactivity at the pilot's request, but none was found.

Morris Simoncelli, a JAL spokesman in New York, said the pilot of JAL Flight 36, from Tokyo to Los Angeles via Anchorage, radioed ahead to Anchorage that the plane had gone through the cloud one hour out of Tokyo.

"He thought maybe it was an atomic cloud or a nuclear cloud, and asked to be checked out with the scanning equipment they have at Elmendorf," the military base outside Anchorage, Simoncelli said.

He said the plane would have landed at Elmendorf rather than at the main Anchorage airport, but a KLM flight had put down at Elmendorf for the same reason.

A call to KLM was referred to spokeswoman Margaret Stickney, but she was at a meeting. A secretary said she would return the call later.

The JAL plane "was scanned and checked and was not radioactive," Simoncelli said. "The flight will continue."

Police arrest noisy partyers, meter thief over weekend

By BOB BURGESS
TOM MIDDLETON
Collegian Staff

Five University of Massachusetts women were arrested Saturday for disturbing the peace while hosting a party in their Brittany Manor apartment, Amherst police said yesterday.

According to police, the women were asked by a police officer to turn their stereo down at about 2:30 a.m. The officer stayed in the area for a short time, and "music and noise" resumed. At about 3:07 a.m. the officer returned to the apartment with the shift commander and the arrests were made.

University of Massachusetts police reported that a reel-to-reel tape recorder valued at $1,500 and a combination tuner and amplifier valued at $500 were stolen from a room in Patterson dormitory between 2:05 a.m. and 2:10 a.m. Saturday.

In other UMass reports, the window of a car parked behind the school of education building was smashed and a camera, a Walkman cassette player with headphones, and cassette tapes were stolen. The incident, which took place sometime Saturday night, is still under investigation, police said.

A 19-year-old resident of John F. Kennedy dormitory was arrested and charged with stealing a parking meter and breaking it with an ax in his room early Sunday morning.

A 21-year-old UMass student was arrested for driving while under the influence of alcohol, failure to use care in turning and driving without an inspection sticker after he knocked down a granite light post at the corner of Sunset Avenue and Massachusetts Avenue police said. The student, also a resident of Kennedy, was arrested at 12:57 a.m. Friday.

Amherst police said that a 23-year-old Springfield man was arraigned yesterday in district court following his arrest Sunday for breaking and entering and larceny of more than $100 at Hampshire College. According to the police the man was caught going into a dormitory room by college police.

A 21-year-old UMass student was arrested Saturday at 1:15 a.m. for shoplifting at Price Chopper supermarket on University Drive, police said. Police reported that he had stolen two steaks valued at $5 apiece.

An assault and battery was reported to police Saturday by a UMass woman. Police said she claimed she was grabbed from behind near The Sub on East Pleasant Street in Amherst and knocked to the ground. She had a bruise on her right arm, police said. The incident is under investigation.

Police said a 31-year-old Puffton Village resident was arrested after reports of an auto striking several parked cars on Chestnut Street.

An officer making a routine check of the area saw a vehicle at the intersection of Belchertown Road and College Street which fit the description of the one involved in the accidents. Police arrested the man in Colonial Village, charging him with driving under the influence of alcohol and leaving the scene of a property damage accident.

A larceny was reported Sunday night by a Riverglade resident who said his car was broken into. About $420 in property was stolen, police said.

Smith professors: Reagan's policies harmful to women

ByREBECCA THATCHER
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON- The Reagan Administration's economic, social and judicial policies have hurt lower class women the most according to Smith College professors speaking at a teach-in on women's issues last night.

Phillip Green, a government professor and Michael Cotter, an economics professor said women's issues could be divided into issues that affect women because they are disproportionately represented in the ranks of the poor, and issues that concern women as a group separate from men.

"Reagan administration policies have benefited economically, women who make over $50,000 per year, about 6 to 7 percent of the women in the United States," said Green.

The social realities of divorced and deserted women whose husbands fail to make child support payments are ignored, Green said.

"Reagan is not a tightwad," Green said, "he has taken money away from programs which primarily help women, like aid to families with dependent children, welfare and foodstamps."

The money has been redirected to the military, which is capital intensive rather than labor intensive and almost exclusively employs men, Cotter said.

On the judicial level, the Reagan administration is trying to overturn the decision of the Washington State Supreme Court which ordered that the state government retroactively pay money owed to women employees under comparable worth standards, Green said.

"If comparable worth were taken seriously," Cotter said, "we would have a minor social revolution."

Cotter said comparable worth would help to change the patriarchal system that oppresses women by paying them "abysmally low wages" for jobs which require a lot of education and dedication.

"If it were illegal to exploit women, then you would find that there would be plenty of productive things to do," Cotter said.

Reagan favors laissez-faire open market economics because it justifies "the hold of the wealthy and powerful over the bases of their wealth and power," Cotter said.

Reproductive rights are under great danger, especially if President Reagan is re-elected, both agreed. If re-elected, Reagan could appoint enough right-to-life Supreme Court judges to overturn Roe v. Wade and once again criminalize abortion.

"When I was in college a great deal of money and time was spent and illness caused, in obtaining illegal abortions," Green said.

The teach-in was the first in a series sponsored by the Smith College Student Goverment Association as part of "Issues '84" week. The series continues tomorrow with a teach-in on education at 4:15 and one on the arms race on Wednesday, also at Smith.

Author Schlesinger to speak in SUB

Pulitzer Prize winning author Arthur M. Schlesinger will speak on "The State of American Politics to Come" at 8:00 p.m. tonight in the Student Union Ballroom.

Schlesinger is a well-known historian of the Kennedy family. His book "A Thousand Days" won the Pulitzer for his account of the John F. Kennedy presidency and "Robert Kennedy and His Times" won the 1979 National Book Award for its story on RFK's political career.

From 1961-63 he served as special assistant for Latin American affairs under President Kennedy.

He is currently working on the fourth volume of "The Age of Roosevelt" and won another Pulitzer for his book "Age of Jackson" in 1946.

A summa cum laude graduate of Harvard University, Schlesinger is now an Albert Schweitzer Professor of Humanities at the City University of New York. He taught previously at Harvard and Princeton.

Schlesinger has been awarded 14 honorary degrees and is considered one of the foremost historians on the country. The lecture is sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program, is free and open to the public.

Dealing with communication problems

By MARY-SHEILA LOUGHLIN
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts students who have speech and hearing problems may not be aware that they have such problems, said the director of the UMass Communication Disorders Clinic.

G. Patrick Nerbonne, chairman of the Department of Communication Disorders and director of the clinic, said "that a University of this size has many students with speech, language, and hearing problems.

"Because the University doesn't screen incoming freshmen for any of these problems, students may not know that they have disorders," Nerbonne said. "We (the clinic) should be seeing a lot more students than we are," he said.

The free communication Disorders Clinic, which is separate from the department, recently received its third five-year accreditation from the state, Nerbonne said.

The clinic opened in 1959 and the accreditation process began about 12 years ago. The UMass clinic has been accredited for the last 10 years.

"Getting accredited is a very rigorous process and the standards are high," Nerbonne said. "Being accredited says that the clinic meets these standards. It ensures at least a minimum quality of service to the client."

Nerbonne said the clinic serves a "broad spectrum" of people from very young children to the elderly, including students from UMass and all of Western New England.

Supervised graduate students and professionals, certified staff and faculty work in the clinic, Nerbonne said.

To become certified one must have a minimum of a Masters degree, take a written test, and spend some time working in the clinic.

UMass STPEC major found dead in apartment

A University of Massachusetts student died in his home in Northampton Wednesday, according to Northampton police.

Northampton police said Peter M. Haynes, a senior Social Thought and Political Economy major, was found dead in his apartment.

Haynes, 24, was a transfer student from Suny-Oswego College in New York.

He was from Norwich New York.

Louise Brown, coordinator of STPEC, said Haynes was a "kind, intelligent person. He was gentle, a real super guy."

EDITORIAL/OPINION

'MORE TAXPAYER MONEY TO FIGHT FOR FREEDOM? WHY, SURE — FOR A MOMENT I THOUGHT YOU WERE A TERRORIST.'

Questions of political ethics

As we get more involved in this year's Presidential election, perhaps it's not irrelevant to ask if the last such election was free of wrongdoing. It's no secret that the 1980 Reagan/Bush campaign consciously used material stolen (or otherwise obtained) from the Carter Campaign. Ed Meese has said he doesn't recall memos and letters pertaining to that material in his files. Last summer, White House aide James A. Baker, III said he received material from CIA Director William Casey; Casey was adamant: he wouldn't touch such stuff "with a ten-foot pole." A low-level campaigner from 1980 testified before a Congressional committee for over 14 hours, saying he was told by Baker aides to make copies of material derived from Casey. The Justice Department did not find any "evidence" of wrongdoing. Democrat Daniel Albosta's report surely didn't ruffle too many feathers. So the public was and is supposed to believe the whole affair was some "inadvertent" affair, an insignificant if degrading blunder.

Thomas Pitoniak

But in reality, the whole affair stinks — a Washington-sized stench. According to a column by John Hess, which appeared in the March, 23 Springfield Union, the letter which follows is among the documents studied by the Justice Department. The letter, dated April 2, 1980, is from Representative Eldon Rudd of Arizona to President Ronald Reagan, "'the original Jimmy Carter staff source and all material herein are so well documented, indexed and put together that it is totally self-explanatory.'" According to Hess, the margin contained this note: "'Ed-here is the material on J.C.'s campaign promises. Will you have someone do an answer to Eldon...sign letter-Ron.'"

I seriously doubt that any columnist would fabricate such a letter. Assuming, then, that such letters and memos have already been scrutinized, a nationwide cover-up existing at this moment is very probable. It seems that the only suckers who have yet to be told are we, the noninfluential of this country. Remember how close Ed Meese came to being nominated. Remember Watt, Burford, Thayer, Aucter, Casey, and all the true indicators of this Administration's priorities. All, according to Reagan, were "cleared."

If Reagan knew about the "source" and its benefits he must surely have violated Federal laws. According to the January, 1980 Federal Election Campaign Laws, Title 2, Chapter 14, Subch. 1, rule 441h (Fraudulent Misrepresentation): "No person who is a candidate for Federal office or an employee or agent of such a candidate shall (1) Fraudulently misrepresent himself or any committee or organization under his control as speaking or writing or otherwise acting for or on behalf of any other candidate or policial party or employee or agent thereof on a matter which is damaging to such other candidate or political party or employee or agent thereof; or (2) Willfully and knowingly participate in or conspire to participate in any plan or design to violate paragraph h(1) of this section."

This law helps guard against such fraud as the Nixon-sponsored "Fags for McGovern" ploys in 1972. If we consider sensitive campaign material damaging, the Debategate scandal from the bottom up seems illegal. The Carter materials were indeed damaging; their release destroying any hope for a fair debate, by giving Reagan time and the means to prepare for some debate with specific targets in mind.

Furthermore, unless some Reagan devotee misrepresented his or herself, or unless the materials were robbed, we would have to assume some Carter supporter knowingly gave them away to the "unknowing" Reagan followers. Even then, could one call the source a real supporter? In any case, we are not being told the true story. The media are avoiding it like the plague; perhaps the Meese investigation will answer some of these very disturbing questions. Maybe then the truth will be impossible to contain.

Another side of of inequality

In light of all the vociferousness with which feminists expouse their views, it is a wonder they have existed on this campus with such myopia to men's feelings. Yes, we men have feelings also, which like women's feelings, are violated umpteen times every day. Logically, feminists should be more than feminists – they should extend their awareness to become humanists, recognizing injustices committed against both women and men. We do, however, realize the difficulty for women to understand the following injustice to men precisely because they are not men. We comprehend this obstacle and subsequently do not hold it entirely against feminists and non-feminists.

Robinson M. Laport
Dan Goldstein

The blatant injustices to men concerns the use of turn-styles in various places on campus, e.g. the Hatch, The Tower Library, etc. Because most men have penises, they are constantly reminded of this by these turn-styles. This is a clear violation of our right not to be made overly concious of our genitalia. Do you women have any idea what it is like to walk through a spiked and rotating hunk of metal or a swinging metal arm, that is aimed directly at the family jewels. No! Imagine turn-styles constructed at the breast level?

To help us understand the immense, but hidden, significance of turn-styles, it is instructive to summon perhaps the greatest turn-stylist ever — Sigmund Freud. As you probably know, Freud discovered that repression often generates even more desire to do that which is being repressed. You are all familiar with families in which strict parents give rise to rebellious, decadent off-spring. The child may, for example, want to play in the forest, while the parent demand that he study. In time, the child will internalize the parents' demand in such a way that he will repress his urge to play in the forest. But if the parents are too severe in their demanding, the child will rebel by playing in the forest even more than he would have without any parental restriction. We shall see that this principle of repression operates in the case of the turn-styles.

By debarring the ease with which men enter buildings (erected for our mental growth), snack bars and watering holes, these turn-styles give rise to a rebellious genital entry. As we shall observe, this rebellious act, though only momentary, leaves lasting residue — that is, a stained position towards women and academics. For example, we males desire to enter the libraries to enlarge our minds; yet these repressive turn-styles unconciously redirect our attention from academics to sex, and in particular to its repression; thus we all the more fervantly thrust our way in with manful fowardness. Thereinto, we unconsciously desire to violate the intellectual posture which the libraries uphold. How does this whole thing come to a head? Well, the result is that in the library we hold our books upside-down and study women.

In the case of entering the Hatch through the repressive rotating turn-tyles, you may find a high demand for such items as "Fat Franks," and bagels with cream cheese. We feel that these food orders aggravate sexism towards both males and females.

Is the erection of turn-styles a callous disregard for men's feelings and a catalyst for hyper-sexual activity? We think so. TURN-STYLES ARE SEXIST!!!

The serious side of caffeine

To the Editor,

We were truly angered by Elizabeth Luciano's April 5 editorial, "A World Without Caffeine? Never." It represented only one side of the argument and included absolutely no facts on the effects of caffeine on the human body.

Yes, caffeine, as most people are aware, is a stimulant, but there is a lot more to its effects than that "get-up-and-go" feeling Ms. Luciano speaks of. Caffeine moves through the body via the blood system and attaches itself to receptor sites in the brain, making a hormone-like substance that controls brain chemicals (Adenosine) useless. Other effects of caffeine intake include: increased production of urine as well as stomach acids, and an increase in heart rate and blood pressure.

If these physiological effects are not enough to make you think about your own caffeine consumption, maybe some of the possible risks of caffeine intake will make you take notice (and less caffeine). Various groups claim caffeine may cause Cancer of the panereas, fibrocystic breast disease, and some birth defects. Although the laboratory evidence for caffeine's connection with cancer and breast disease have yet to be proved, a study done by the Food and Drug Administration concluded that "caffeine, when fed to pregnant rats, caused birth defects and delayed skeletal development in their offspring." Although it is true that humans are not rats, scientists frequently use rats as subjects in drug studies in order to generalize their findings to humans and other animals.

People who are used to drinking several cups of coffee may suffer from increased anxiety and muscle tension a few hours after their last intake of caffeine. Anyone who drinks the equivalent of five or more cups of coffee a day can go through withdrawl, with such symptoms as headache, irritability and sluggishness. In addition, "caffeinism", excess consumption of caffeine, may produce chronic caffeine intoxication, otherwise known as "coffee nerves". Symptoms include: restlessness, disturbed sleep, irritation of the stomach, diarrhea and heart palpatations. Caffeine has also been proven to be mildly addicting.

In light of this information, we say that decaffeinated products are not pointless; indeed, they give people a necessary choice. We too "pat the backs" of those manufacturers who support decaffeinated products. These companies, such as Coca-Cola, are not putting anyone out, as they continue to produce both decaffeinated as well as caffeinated sodas, at no extra cost to the consumer. So, hats off to Coke, for giving caffeine conscious people a taste of "The Real Thing"!

Honors for honors students

To the Editor,

We, the Executive Board of the Honors Student Association, feel that we were badly misrepresented in the article in last Thursday's Collegian about the establishment of our organization. In the first place, to clarify things, we have had RSO status for several weeks and are not associated with the National Honor Society, a high school organization only, in any way.

We regret that the Collegian reporter received the impression that we are critical of the University Honors Program. We realize that that program has limited resources and can not make the kind of commitment to promoting contact between honors students on a primarily social basis that we, an organization run by and for students, feel is one of our duties to make. Promoting contact between honors students is one of the three main objectives of our group.

The second objective, by means of input into the Honors Program, is to involve honors students in decisions affecting them academically.

Thirdly, we are trying to promote group attendance by honors students at academic, cultural, and social events that might interest them — an example given was a day trip to New York City.

We believe that with the help of more honors students who are looking to make the "honors"experience something more, this organization will work. Students interested can contact the Honors Office in Machmer.

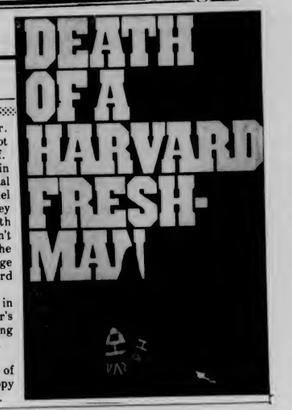
DEATH OF A HARVARD FRESHMAN
By Victoria Silver
Bantam Books, 232 pages, $3.50

By CHRISTINE MARINI
Collegian Staff

I apologize in advance for this review. Death of a Harvard Freshman does not deserve the space it will take to attack it. This book will be sold in grocery stores and bus terminal giftshops. It is not literature. As long as publishers send us this crap (and nothing else) I shall continue to read and review it. But I refuse to take it seriously.



Death of Harvard Freshman is actually about two dead freshmen, a half dozen live ones, and a professor or two. The author is a recent Radcliffe grad who decided to set her first novel in Cambridge, the home of her venerated alma mater. The plot (usually a rather significant feature in a mystery novel) is highly contrived and skimpy. Silver tries to make up for this lack of substance with lots and lots of Harvard-speed atmosphere—goopy frosting on a flat cake. And if Cambridge memorabilia doesn't thrill you, there are loads of racial, ethnic, and sexual stereotypes to keep you entertained.

Perhaps I should explain. Do you really want to hear this? Okay. Russell Bernard, a charming black Catholic bisexual, is found floating in the Charles one November morning. He has been killed in a suspiciously Rasputin-like manner—stabbed, shot, and drowned. His untimely and bizarre end leads his friend and classmate Lauren Adler (proud New Jersey JAP) into an investigation. Lauren and her best friend Michael (gay preppie Boston Brahmin) sleuth around Harvard Yard in search of his killer.

Of course they solve the murder, but not before another classmate gets bumped off. This is costing Harvard about $78,000.00 in tuition lost, so you'd think somebody official would get upset. But Lauren and Michael are unaided in their investigation. They grill various stereotypical classmates with so little finesse that it's a wonder they don't get killed themselves. If I were the murderer, I would have caught on by page 46. So much for the genius of Harvard students.

I'm sorry, I'll put my sour grapes back in the drawer now. Just because the author's father probably owns the publishing company doesn't mean anything. Necessarily.

Death of a Harvard Freshman has lots of sex, drugs, and "intrigue." It's also sloppy and poorly written. I predict a bestseller.

Salustri leads the baseball team with defense

By BOB BROCK
Collegian Staff

Whenever the University of Massachusetts baseball team takes the field, there is one element of their game they can usually count on to be strong - the work of their shortstop.

Angelo Salustri will see to that.

The 20-year-old junior from Swampscott, Mass. is now into his second full year as the Minuteman starter and he continues to impress those around him with his work in the pivot.

But notoriety is really nothing new to Salustri. He first began to gain notice back home playing for Swampscott High School and the Swampscott Babe Ruth teams. While in high school, Salustri was named to the regional all-star teams in both his junior and senior years. When the high school season was done he would continue to impress while playing Babe Ruth ball, where he was chosen an all-star three years in a row.

In 1981, the summer before he came to UMass, Salustri led his Swampscott team to the state chamionship and on the the New England tournament. There they advanced to the finals until bowing to the tournaments host team, Stamford, Connecticut.

In choosing to come to UMass to play ball, the Minutemen won his services over other prominent baseball programs including the University of Maine and Eckerd College in Florida.

"When I came here to visit I liked it a lot and I also knew a guy who sort of talked me into coming here," says Salustri.

UMass Head Coach Dick Bergquist has nothing but high praise when evaluating his starting shortstop. In fact he considers Salustri one of the top college shortstops in the area.

"Angelo is an excellent defensive shortstop, his range is good and his mechanics in fielding ground balls are very good," said Bergquist. "Offensively I think he has a great deal of potential and he could be a good power hitter, which is unique for a shortstop," he says.

Salustri feels that good pitching is the key to theUMass season and he is confident that the staff will get it together despite their disappointing showing at the recent New Mexico tournament, which opened the UMass season.

Salustri quickly dismisses the idea of any specific personal goals for the 1984 season. He just wants to continue to improve his game.

"I want to do better than I did last year, I'd like to hit better and play the field better," he says. Angelo Salustri, he is just one of the key members on a promising UMass baseball team.

Netmen shutout by B.C.

By MIKE LEVINE
Collegian Staff

If you were to pit the Boston College football team against the University of Massachusetts' football team, it wouldn't take Jimmy the Greek to figure out that Doug Flutie and friends would win that matchup.

Put the UMass and B.C. basketball teams up against one another and even John Hempel wouldn't help much.

Put the B.C. tennis team, complete with their ten indoor courts and five matches already under their belts, against the UMass tennis team, which has only had five practices due to bad weather and the indecision over naming a new coach and it won't take Bud Collins to predict the outcome of their match on Saturday.

The netmen were shut out 9-0 by the Eagles, as they managed to send only two of the nine matches to the third and deciding set.

Third singles player March Weinstein took the first set from Jim Garazenti 6-4 before dropping the next two 6-3 and 7-5, while the first doubles duo of Steve Jordan and Wayne Peterson fell to Luis Nunez and Carlos Silva 6-7 6-3 6-4.

In other matches, Jordan (first) lost to Nunez 7-5 6-3, Peterson (second) lost to Silva 6-4 6-1, Earl Small (fourth) fell to Brian Burtnick 6-3 6-3, Barry Katz (fifth) was defeated by Brian Conklin 6-3 6-3, and Andy Pazmany (sixth) lost to Tom Curran 6-1 6-1.

In the other doubles matches, Garazenti and Curran beat Weinstein and John DeKlerk 6-1 7-6, and Conklin and Burtnick defeated John Somerstein and Paul Zaretsky 7-6 6-1.

UMass Coach Manny Roberts said that his team played very well despite all the circumstances involved, and that the B.C. match was probably their toughest of the season.

The netmen open their home schedule today at 3 p.m. against Holy Cross. Until then, UMass sports fans can at least be happy that the Minutemen don't play B.C. in football or basketball.

Women's tennis also falls victim to tough B.C. squad

By STEFANIE SCHMALL
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's tennis team attempted to even out their 1-2 record Saturday but instead fell hard to a tough Boston College team by a score of 7-2.

The BC match marked the beginning of regular season play for the team, the first three matches part of preseason action down in North Carolina.

Despite an unimpressive 2-8 finish in the fall, the team, under the direction of Pat Stewart, is confident that they will have a good season.

"I think we'll definitely play better than we did in the fall. That's what happened last year," said tri-captain Maureen Hanlon, referring to last spring's 7-4 finish which was preceded by a fall record similar to this year's.

UM's top three single's players were swept by BC with ease. First singles Liz Sullivan lost 6-3, 6-1, but admitted that she wasn't too surprised. "They're just too good. We didn't really expect to win."

Chris Frazier (#2) and Anne Tauger (#3) lost by scores of 6-0, 6-0 and 6-0, 6-1, respectively. Frazier returned to the lineup after sitting out in the fall with an injury.

Frazier and Sullivan were more successful in their doubles matches, Liz and partner Diana Biagioli (#1 doubles) won by a score of 6-2, 6-4, while Frazier and Pat Sullivan (#3 doubles) won 6-3, 6-3. BC slightly defeated the #2 team of Hanlon and Jillian Nesgos in the first set by a score of 7-6, but easily captured the match with a 6-2 win in the second set.

Last week's match against UConn has been rescheduled for April 16 due to a rain cancellation. Their next match will be against Springfield on Wednesday.

"We should beat them, we beat them in the fall," said Liz Sullivan matter-of-factly.

Men's crew team wallops Wesleyan in every race

By ED ROBINSON
Collegian Stafff

MIDDLETOWN — The Connecticut River, due to recent heavy rains was swollen up 715 feet higher than usual, and throughout the day 20 workmen, piling up sandbags, struggled to keep the Harborpark restaurant, located adjacent to the Wesleyan docks, from being swamped.

While the restaurant was temporarily saved, Wesleyan University wasn't so lucky as they were swept, not by the river, but by the University of Massachusetts men's crew team, who defeated them in each and every race last Sunday.

The junior varsity eight started things off by beating the Wesleyan by a good length and a half. The freshmen eight continued the devastation with a gutsy neck-and-neck race and an eventual exciting one foot margin of victory. Then it was the varsity eight's turn. They didn't disappoint.

"We stuck to our race plan," said Larry Floyd, who rows in the seventh seat of the UMass varsity shell. "We broke even off the line, stayed even the first 500 meters, then did our damage in the middle 1000."

During the last 500 meters of the race a chant of "UMass, UMass," arose from fans and teammates on the docks, drowning out the Wesleyan rooters and a bent, white-haired old man with a megaphone who yelled "Row....Row!" as he had done every race as soon as the shells could be glimpsed. The UMass varsity eight finished strong, beating Wesleyan's boat by five seconds.

"It was a smarter, more controlled race," said coach Dave Kumlin, comparing the varsity's performance this week to last week's loss to BU. "The conditions of the water made the races a lot faster today. With flatter water we'll be able to get a better indication of how fast we really are."

They better be real fast, as this Saturday, April 14 starting at 10:00 a.m. they will face Temple, last year's National Champions, in their first home race of the season. If the weather's warm a large, festive crowd is sure to be on hand. If you want to be among them take Route 9 past the malls, towards Northampton. Take a left immediately before the bridge at the Sportsman's Marina sign. And there you are.

Dartmouth overpowers track

by M.E. MURRAY
Collegian Staff

This year's edition of the University of Massachusetts men's outdoor track promises to be an exciting albeit predictable one.

There were no major surprises as host UMass bowed Saturday, 57-106, to powerful Dartmouth College.

The Minutemen managed to grab six individual firsts, led by sophomore Ferde Adaboe, who was tops in both the long jump and triple jump.

Rawle Crichlow also had a fine day, racing away with first in the 220 (22.6), and second in the 100 (11.1), just one-tenth of a second behind the leader.

"The meet was a pretty good indication of what kind of team we have," said Coach Ken O'Brien. "We're weak in the jumps and throwing events except for a few individuals. Both teams had fairly good days. Dartmouth simply has much more depth."

Other highlights for the Minutemen:

Sophomore Kyler Foster's winning javelin toss of 194-plus feet.

Brian Osborne's victory in the 400-yd. spring (48.95).

John Keelan, first in the 880 (1:52.9).

The action was only a tune-up for one of the most exciting weekends of the season, this Saturday's UMass Relays. Details Friday.

Rangers and Islanders battle it out

By ADAM NAZIMOWITZ
Collegian Staff

Washington, Edmonton, Quebec, Montreal, Calgary and St. Louis have all advanced to the quarterfinals of the Stanley Cup Playoffs by defeating division opponents, but probably one of the better playoff series is taking place early this year.

While Chicago and Minnesota slug it out for Midwest supremacy, the Rangers and Islanders are fighting it out in their annual Battle of New York, which sometimes turns out to be the highlight of post season action, even if you're not from New York.

The rivalry is becoming a classic struggle as both teams pull out all stops to fight for victory, which in the past five years has eventually meant a trip to the Stanley Cup Finals.

Although I like and admire the Islanders for their determination and tradition, I am a diehard Rangers fan, who would like nothing better than to see the Rangers get a crack at the rest of the league, which the Islanders have little difficulty with, once they get past the Rangers. The winner of tonight's game advances, and though I'll root all the way for the Rangers, the Isles seem too tough at home.

Pulitzer winner says foreign policy is weak

Condemns Reagan as incompetent

By ROBIN MANDEL
Collegian Staff

Historian Arthur Schlesinger denounced President Ronald Reagan as a mindless and incompetent leader last night in a speech to an audience of 500 people at the University of Massachusetts.

The Pulitzer Prize-winning author emphasized America's need for a change in her foreign political strategy, attributing this need for innovation to a disillusioned and discontented American public due to Reagan's conservative foreign policy.

Schlesinger, who has served as special assistant for Latin American affairs under John F. Kennedy's administration, said that Reagan's decision to escape the jurisdiction of the World Court is a foolish act.

His policies of Latin American intervention, his continuous hostile feelings towards the Soviet Union, and his mixed-up policy concerning Lebanon are not only causing much dissatisfaction among the European nations, he continued.

"Our strongest allies, England and France, have lost so much respect for us and see us as a weakened nation," he said.

According to Schlesinger, the American public is beginning to realize that commercial ethics and private interests should not be involved in the present administration.

"The absence of public interest," he said, "leads to a corruptive, sleezy and self-ritualistic government."

At a press conference earlier in the day, Schlesinger criticized Reagan's policies as definite threats to our secure and reputable position in the international political arena. Reagan considers himself as an embodiment of American patriotism. But the fact is that when the chips are down, Reagan screws up, he stated.

Schlesinger said Senator Gary Hart could win the Presidential bid if Reagan does not revise his foreign policies. If he can not succeed in revitalizing the excitement and interest in American political life, Hart could be the best candidate to do so, he said.

"Hart has a quality of being able to arouse enthusiasm, appeal to the younger generation and the female population and the Reagan administration finds themselves continuously being thwarted by his relentless energy and hard-line determinism," Schlesinger said.

BOG members want profitable TOC

By JOHN MILBIER
Collegian Correspondent

The Campus Center Board of Governors (BOG) would like to see the Top of the Campus (TOC) restaurant at the University of Massachusetts either make a profit or vacate their space for some other establishment, according to several members.

"The TOC restaurant is not a money maker, no one knows its there and it could do better," said BOG Vendor Coordinator Bob Abele.

Abele said the restaurant is geared more for conferences and not the public. "We want to see the response. Maybe we'll worry food services a little."

BOG member Brad Jacobs said he didn't think the administration would support such a move, but said, "it's up to the students to make this happen."

"The TOC is more of a social service," said Kenneth Whittaker, a student supervisor for the restaurant. "We're not here to lose money, we're here to have the TOC accessible to students and faculty," he said.

However, BOG treasurer Jeremiah Quill said that the restaurant lost $51,691 from the start of the fiscal year, June 1, 1983 through February 1984. Quill said one option in improving this situation may be to open the TOC up to student groups for private functions, such as semi-formals.

"It has historically lost money but in recent years losses have been less," said Campus Center business manager Mohammed Idrees.

He said midway through fiscal year 1981, the restaurant lost $88,447; midway through 1982 it lost $82,244 and midway through 1983 it lost $64,684. "There has been a tremendous improvement," Idrees said.

Food services manager for the Campus Center, Dick Ellis, said he didn't know anything about the proposal but said, "We've put a lot of effort into the program and we're hoping for a day when the restaurant breaks even."

Survey to evaluate UMass life

What are students thinking ?

By LAURA YEE
Collegian Staff

3,400 University of Massachusetts students will be part of a random sample this week as a campus organization conducts its yearly survey that evaluates "the UMass experience."

The Cycles Survey "is done to see how students feel about UMass life" which is conducted through the Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Office, Director William Weitzer said.

Weitzer said the survey's task is to serve as a tool for research and evaluation. "It's to help improve student life."

"The survey tells us in broad and general terms what students are thinking. We can relate satisfaction or dissatisfaction to a number of different measures," he said.

After data is collected, a report is written which is distributed to different channels of the administration. Presentations are also given and questions from different departments are answered, Weitzer said.

Karl Beeler, assistant director of the office said the survey allows for "a way students can feel they have input in a university this large."

"We can help dispel some myths about UMass. Some people are so sure about the typical student and they're wrong or they may be right. The survey verifies this," he said.

Weitzer said he could not disclose any of the past information gathered on how students feel about UMass because "it may cause student responses to have bias and ruin 10 years of data."

"This is the tenth year the survey has been conducted. If we say how the average student feels about a certain issue, it may cause those who are filling out the questionnaire now to adhere to the norm," he explained.

Out of the 70 questions, most ask about whether students are satisfied with their overall academic experience. Students are also asked how they feel about social life, housing experience, and academic and personal services.

Weitzer said data gathered in the past reveals on an overall basis if seniors are happier than freshmen, if on campus housing is perferred to off and also shows the number of students who are not satisfied and transfer to a different school. From open-end questions on the survey, "we can see what students think could improve their experience."

"We have a cooperative with the five college area where we compare UMass responses to Smith or Hampshire Colleges, Weitzer said.

Of the 3,400 surveys sent, the response rate is 50 percent which Weitzer says is "an okay response rate."

"The survey doesn't serve as a vote. It's influential in our thinking where we would contact that agency if that is where the dissatisfaction is," Weitzer said.

Beeler said, "we spend alot of time on the survey and it's easy to answer and return. Not all schools do this but it helps us get a profile on students. It's broad but it helps."

Mondale takes Penn; leads democrats at race midway

PHILADELPHIA (AP)–Walter Mondale claimed a "very strong win" over a fading Gary Hart in the Pennsylvania primary last night as he moved to take control of the Democratic presidential race at its midway point.

The television networks all projected that Mondale had won, and handily. In the early count, he had 50 percent of the vote to 42 percent for Hart.

A Mondale victory would ratify earlier industrial state results in Illinois and New York—and leave Hart even further behind in the competition for national nominating delegates.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson apparently was winning in Philadelphia and hoped for a strong third-place showing statewide that would underscore his still-increasing clout within the party.

Mondale claimed victory and said, "I'm encouraged to believe that what I have been saying about where I would take the country, the differences as the public perceives them, is helping me gain momentum toward the nomination."

He called it "a very strong win."

CBS News said its poll of voters as they left the election places indicated Mondale trailed Jackson in Philadelphia and Hart in its suburbs, but led elsewhere.

The returns, from 7 percent of the state's 9,560 precincts, were:

Mondale, 39,456 or 50 percent.
Hart, 33,327, 42 percent.
Jackson, 5,175, 7 percent.

Minor candidates shared the remainder of the vote with several Democratic dropouts. President Reagan ran unopposed in the Republican primary.

According to the network exit polls, Mondale expanded his traditional Democratic labor and blue-collar constituency and began for the first time to cut into the young urban professional "yuppie" support that had carried Hart to earlier primary victories.

And while Hart had been emphasizing in campaign speeches that he was the more likely candidate to defeat President Reagan in November, respondents in the NBC News poll picked Mondale as the stronger candidate against Reagan by a 2-1 ratio.

Woman's jobs growing

WASHINGTON (AP) - Women now hold nearly one-third of the nation's management jobs and have significantly raised their representation in many other occupations, the Census Bureau reported yesterday.

A new analysis of employment figures comparing 1970 and 1980 found women increasing from 38 percent of the labor force to 42.6 percent.

But their share of many previously male-dominated jobs increased much more sharply than that growth would indicate.

Women, for example, comprised 17.1 percent of the nation's judges in 1980, up from 6.1 percent a decade earlier. And their representation among lawyers rose from 4.9 percent to 13.8 percent.

The new study compiled by the Census Bureau and the Bureau of Labor Statistics found women holding 30.5 percent of the nation's executive, administrative and managerial positions in 1980.

Senate opposes CIA funding to Nicaraguan ports

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate approved a non-binding resolution yesterday 84-12 calling for an end to the use of CIA funds to assist in the mining of Nicaraguan ports.

The Republican leadership agreed to support the measure in return for Sen. Edward M. Kennedy's agreement to defer a companion proposal demanding that the administration reverse its decision to remove its Central American policies from World Court jurisdiction for two years. Nicaragua has appealed the mining issue to the World Court.

The resolution adopted by the Senate reads: "It is the sense of Congress that no funds heretofore or hereafter appropriated in any act of Congress shall be obligated or expanded for the purpose of planning, executing or supporting the mining of the ports or territorial waters of Nicaragua."

Its adoption made it part of a pending tax bill, which if passed would be sent to the Democrat-controlled House for action.

Last week's vote in the Senate was taken before most members of Congress had heard that the CIA was assisting in the mining of Nicaraguan waters, a move reportedly intended to disrupt arms shipments by the leftist Nicaraguan government to insurgents in El Salvador.

UMass reps react to pending tuition hike

Students ready to protest

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The tuition increase recently approved by the finance committee of the Massachusetts Board of Regents is facing increased opposition from both students and administrators at the two University of Massachusetts campuses.

A rally will be held at noon today on the steps of the student union building at the Amherst campus to protest the 15 percent hike for in-state students, and on Thursday University of Massachusetts president David C. Knapp is expected to voice his disapproval for the increase at a legislative public hearing at the Statehouse in Boston.

The finance committee, despite protests from students and administration officials at a Monday meeting, voted 4-1 to approve the tuition increase.

"Knapp, UMass-Boston chancellor Robert Corrigan, other representatives, and many students will speak against the tuition increase on Thursday," said Student Government Association (SGA) public policy committee chair Fran Pheeney of the Amherst campus.

UMass-Amherst chancellor Joseph D. Duffey has indicated he is in favor of an increase, but not of 15 percent. He will not speak at the meeting Thursday.

Under the proposal, in-state undergraduate students will pay $167 more a year; out-of-state undergraduates will pay close to $300 more; in-state graduate students will see a $222 hike and the hardest hit will be out-of-state graduates who will pay $384 more a year.

At the rally today, students will be encouraged to write letters to state representatives indicating their opposition. So far the public policy committee has sent out over 2,000 letters with the drive continuing until Thursday in front of The Hatch in the Campus Center.

SGA co-presidents Rick Patrick and Jim Keller will speak at the rally along with Pheeney.

"Combing the increase in tuition with the expected $80 increase in mandatory fees means that many lower and lower-middle income students will not be able to afford to come here," Pheeney said .

"Dr. Knapp was fantastic in his testimony Monday and with his support, along with the support of state representatives, maybe something will happen," she said.

The collected regents are scheduled to vote on the matter this Tuesday and, should it pass, it will be attached to their budget to go before the state legislature. That body has never voted against the regents' budget.

"We're hoping that legilative opposition will make a difference," Pheeney said. Amherst state senator John Olver and representative James Collins, both Democrats, spoke against the proposal at Monday's meeting and will speak again tomorrow. Senator Gerald D'Amico, the chair of the senate's education committee, will also voice a negative opinion about the hike.

A letter to selected alumni and the parents of in-state undergraduate students will also help, according to Pheeney, but it still comes down to the vote of the regents, most of whom are former Gov. Edward J. King's appointees.

The regents elected not to raise tuition last year and are seen by Pheeney as "trying to get it all back at once."

"This makes the school a difficult choice for incoming freshmen who aren't financially well-off," she said.

"Our statements at the meeting Tuesday changed the vote of one of the regents, Edward Sullivan," Pheeney said. "And hopefully we can influence the entire board."

Senate shuns tuition raise

By SEAN CASEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Graduate Student Senate claimed "unreasonable" last night the 15 percent proposed tuition hike endorsed by the Board of Regents Finance Committee Monday.

The senate's motion also stated that the increase "will make a college education unaffordable to those in lower income brackets."

The proposed increase is part of a plan to raise tuition yearly until students pay one third of the total cost of their education. Tuition now covers about 22 percent of that total cost.

Most senators agreed that tuition would have to be raised for some time to reach one third of the total education bill, because of rising yearly costs, and that this action could pit students against faculty and administrators' pay raises, and any other action which would raise educational costs. One estimate said that, after correcting for these variables, tuition could increase about 60 percent over what it is now.

According to senate President Sanjiv Dugal, UMass tuition is within the highest 10 percent of other state land grant colleges, and Massachusetts is ahead of only New Jersey and New Hampshire in the percentage of state budget money allocated to higher education.

"The more needy students won't have access to this college. That's what it amounts to," Dugal said.

The senate will send a telegram expressing its disapproval to the Board of Regents who will vote on the increase April 18.

Duffey sees plan's merit

By JOHN KENNEY
Collegian Staff

In light of the recent decision by the Massachusetts Board of Regents of Higher Education to implement a tuition policy, Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey yesterday said he supported the increases but said there should also be an increase in levels of financial aid.

"I believe there is a need for an increase in tuition if we are to continue our high standards. I would, however, rather see the increase at 10 or 12 percent, and the overall student input around 30 (percent)," Duffey said.

"There is no reason, with the present administration in Washington, that financial aid will increase. And certainly the future of federal funding is in doubt," he said.

The March 13 decision by the Regents calls for a student contribution of 33 percent in the overall cost of education. This will be achieved by tuition increases of as much as 15 percent a year.

The chancellor laid down what he referred to as "four important points on public higher education."

—"Public colleges and universities cannot be both free or cheap and be high quality. Therefore, I chose quality.

—Public institutions need strong support from the state as a basic investment.

—A system of aid from state and federal government must give students a freedom of choice. Every student with the assertiveness and eligibility deserves a chance for an education and, if there is need, they should receive loans and grants, both state and federal.

—Tuition at state colleges and universities should be adjusted in accordance with inflation."

Megabucks winner: just incredibly pleased

BRAINTREE, MASS. (AP) - After days of speculation, the third winner of last week's $9 million Megabucks jackpot claimed his booty yesterday saying that he plans to use his $3 million to buy a vacation home in Florida.

Oza H. Millette, a 71-year-old retired truck driver from Quinebaug, Conn., said he didn't come forward sooner because he and his wife, Viola, were house hunting in Melbourne, a retirement community on Florida's Treasure Coast.

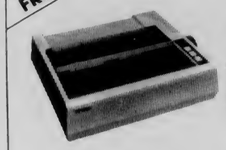
Millette, called "Henry" by his family, said one of his four sons called him in Florida Sunday to tell him he had won Megabucks. The next day, he and his wife put a binder on a house they had previously thought was out of their price range.

"They are just incredibly pleased," said lottery spokesman David Ellis. "They said that now they don't have to sell their motor home in Connecticut to buy their house in Florida.

"They told me that now they can have winter and summer homes with plenty of room for their children and four grandchildren," Ellis added.

Millette, who used to work for Hemenway Transport Co., bought his ticket in Webster, a suburb of Worcester just over the Connecticut border.

Two other winners of the $9,018,670 jackpot collected their first checks early in the week.



Michael Hall, a 36-year-old truck driver from Spencer, and Albert Somes, a department store assistant manager from Beverly both selected the winning combination of 2-4-11-17-26-35.

H.S. students visit UMass

By YADIRA BETANCES
Collegian Staff

A panel on academic cultural and social life at the University of Massachusetts, a lecture on the challenges for excellence and a tour of the campus highlighted the day for 65 Third World high school students from the Boston Metropolitan area Monday. Their visit was part of a recruitment program the University has with the Metropolitan Council for Educational Opportunity, Inc. (METCO) in Boston.

METCO was founded in 1968 and incorporated in 1976 by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. A private, non private organization serving 38 suburbian communities and three thousand students, the council's objective is to "provide integrate public school education for urban blacks and other minorities in racial imbalance schools in Boston by placing them in Suburbian schools," said Rudolph Jones, assistant director of undergraduate admissions.

He added the council provides a learning experience and a closer understanding between urban and suburbian parents and other citizens in the metropolitan area.

Jones said out of the 38 communities in the council, 26 graduated 202 students in 1982. In seven other communities, he said, 100 percent of their students enrolled in college. Student's high school average is 75 per cent, an average higher than most high schools, he said.

The recruitment program attempted to expose them to the "ambiance of the university environment with the objective of encouraging them to take the challenge of a post secondary education," Jones said.

This exposure, Jones said, will in turn make students speak glowly to others about their experience at the University.

Mecko Lewis a Swamscoot High sophomore said the student's panel was helpful in bridgening the gaps and dispelling the myths she had about college. She said UMass is a good academic school, but she said she hasn't yet had the chance to see many other schools.

Jones said this was the student's second visit to the University and the first time METCO counselors accompany students.

Conference brings together Civil Rights leaders

By YADIRA BETANCES
Collegian Staff

A national conference at Jackson State University in Mississippi last week brought together people who were actively involved in the Civil Rights Movement of the 1960s to commemorate the twentieth anniversary of the 1964 Summer Project and the life and times of Fannie Lou Hamer.

Participants in the conference included Civil Right activists Robert Walker, Edwin King, Willie Peacock, Barbara Watkins, Margaret Walker Alexander among others who shared their personal involvement in the struggle for civil rights and justice to a group of students from Jackson State and students from a Five College seminar on Civil Rights taught by James Baldwin at the University of Massachusetts.

The conference discussed such topics as race relations in Mississippi before the modern day civil Rights Movement, the making of the 1964 Summer Project, the cultural undergirding of the movement and Fannie Lou Hamer and the Mississippi movement, among others.

The summer project, a joint effort to educate and encourage blacks to register to vote cannot be discussed without mentioning Hamer's contributions.

Hamer's link to the movement started when she rose from the plantation she worked for for exercising her right to vote. A sharecropper's daughter with limited education, Hamer said in 1968, "lots of people...have a long background in Civil Rights. I didn't know what to do and I could do is rebel in the only away I could...I was rebelling in the only ways I knew how to rebel. I just steady hoped for a chance that I could really lash out, and say what I had to say about what was going on in Mississippi; and I finally got the chance in '62."

However, Hamer did not rise to national prominence until 1964. Then she made a testimony of an attack made on her life by Mississippi police officers before the Credentials Committee at the Democratic National Convention in Atlantic City.

Her testimony, viewed by the entire nation, revealed the brutality of life in the South, opening doors for blacks to express their oppressing and devastating conditions. Also the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party was given renewed credence as a legitimate delegation from that state and two of its members were seated at large in the convention.

Often described by many as a "small incredible woman," Hamer became the chief spokeswoman of the Mississippi movement and the spiritual leader of the Freedom Democratic Party.

The making of the 1964 Summer Project

By JUDIE WHITE
Collegian Correspondent

A need for the change in tactics in the ongoing struggle for civil rights of blacks in Mississippi sparked the development of the 1964 Summer Project, according to the consensus reached at a panel discussion about the making of the project.

The summer project was a coordinated effort on the part of the Student nonviolent Coordinating Committee, the Congress of Racial Equality, the NAACO and the Council of Federated Organizations (COFO), said Jessie Morris, panel moderator.

Its purpose was to focus national public attention on Mississippi and to increase outside support from private individuals and to bring pressure to bear on the federal government to change its policies to provide blacks a greater measure of strength, Morris said.

The Council of Federated Organizations (COFO), a representative body of 14 different voter registration leagues in Mississippi, gave the final okay for the Summer Project.

Edwin King, a leader in the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC), said one of the goals the Student nonviolent Coordinating Committee had been to register blacks so they could vote in the 1964 elections. But he said increasingly violent white resistance had terrorized the people and demoralized SNCC workers. "The movement was burning out...movement people were worn out mentally, physically, and spiritually, but the people said 'we are ready' " he said.

The seeds of the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party (MFDP) emerged in 1963 from a device called the challenge ballot, casted in the event of registration error, he said.

He added, the difficulties SNCC confronted caused funding from the voter education project to be cut off. Out of the 880,000-9,000 blacks who attempted to register to vote only 12,000 succeeded because of unconstitutional barriers, he said.

Willie Peacock, former field secretary of SNCC, said the first voter registration efforts tried to bring blacks to the electoral process. He added, blacks needed to be educated to run a government which in itself had revolutionary implications because of the self-perpetuance of white state and local administrations.

Announcements

A spring Minority Law Day Program will be held at Western New England College of Law in Springfield Saturday April 14 from 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. The program will hold workshops on what do lawyers do? How to choose a law school, mock law class and how to do well on the LSAT. Students interested should contact the Office of Third World Affairs at 545-2517. Registration deadline is Friday April 13.

John Widemen, author of several novels and a collection of interrelated stories will speak on Wednesday April 18, at 8 p.m. in room 120 of the School of Management.

Wideman will be speaking on America and the ethnic experience. The theme of Wideman's novels is the Black experience in America but the subject is taken through rich and varied transformations.

The Duke Ellington Committee proudly presents the 7th annual Solos & Duos series at the University of Massachusetts. The Solos & Duos series has traditionally been an exciting chance to personally experience the talents of fine Jazz musicians in the comfortable atmosphere of the Cape Cod lounge at UMass. This year we bring you vibraphonist Jay Hoggard on April 20, and pianist Valerie Capers on April 28. Both shows begin at 8:00 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge.

Jay Hoggard has been voted the number one vibraphonist for three consecutive years in Downbeat Magazine's Annual International Jazz critics poll. The national newspaper, USA Today, recently named Jay one of the ten best young musicians of the 80's. He has done much work over the years on the stage and in the studio, accompanying artists such as McCoy Turner and Roberta Flack.

Valerie Capers' music has been praised by critics all across the country. Her own special form of jazz piano is a blend of many different styles. In addition to participating in the Kool Jazz Festivals in New York and Washington, she has appeared with Dizzy Gillespe and Ray Brown in "Concerts by the Sea," at Redondo Beach, California as part of the "Jazz America" television series.

The Valeria Capers performance will also be the last event of the 13th annual Black Musician's Conference.

Freedom schools as parallel institution

By JUDIE WHITE
Collegian Correspondent

Focusing on the changes in education and student's role in the struggle for civil rights and more revelant education, Margaret Walker Alexander, distinguished writer and poet led the discussion on freedom schools as parallel institutions.

She focused on the changes in education and student's role in those changes and in the civil rights struggle. "My honors class of sophomores in 1958 produced sixteen leaders out of a class of sixteen students. I had Joyce and Dorrie Ladner, Ruby McGeena and others. She said, "those told me and I believe this-that the students make revolutions and the role of the teacher is to teach the students how to be a revolutionary."

The students at Jackson State had demanded that their education concerned itself not just with the twentieth century but also with the twenty-first century, she said. "Mississippi still belonged to not just the nineteenth century but to the middle ages. But education was undergoing a kind of electronic revolution in which we had audiovisual aids and we were talking about using mechanical devices in teaching. But we had no revolution in the philosophy of education. Now today we have passed the point of a successful flourishing industrial society and we are seeking to make the transition into a computer society. The economic crisis of industrial capitalism exists not only in this country but also throughout the world," Alexander said. "What education must be like for a high technological society is not the same as the education for an industrial or post-industrial society," she said.

Howard Spencer, director of the Black and Proud School in Jackson, Mi., said freedom school started in the early '60s as an effort to make younsters aware of their democratic rights. The Black and Proud school began on the Tougaloo Campus and was staffed by SNCC as one of it's projects. The federal government saw a threat in the existence of the school and intimidated three black landlords who had given space to it, he said.

In the later '60s the emphasis of the school's teaching changed and came to embrace a three point ideal of instilling culture liberation and nationalism, he said. Freedom schools or liberation schools have parallels in the West Indies, Latin America and Africa, he said.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

PRESIDENTIAL ISSUES OF 1984.

The dire need for a liberal agenda

One of the most encouraging aspects of the battle for the Democratic nomination for the presidency has been the strengthening of the left wing within the party. Gary Hart's theme of "new ideas", Jesse Jackson's "rainbow coalition," and the resurgence of George McGovern within party ranks are all demonstrative of how the Democrats are preparing for the election. It would indeed be unfortunate if the traditional "horsetrading" at the convention in San Francisco was to produce another middle of the road platform.

John Gilman

Gary Hart's sweep of New England was a clear indication of the willingness of voters to back clear alternatives to the Reagan policy line. Much of Walter Mondale's problem in New England can be traced to two factors: his association in the minds of Democratic voters with the Carter administration, and his propensity for going along with the political winds, rather than making a clear and personal stand on the issues. He represented the centrist position within the contenders ranks at this time, and his resulting flop in the local primaries should serve as a warning to the future Democratic candidate. Not only is liberalism not dead in American politics, it is ripe to return to the forefront of the American political stage.

The Reagan record has left ample room for the Democrats to exploit many crucial issues, and their failure to definitively separate themselves from the Republicans in November can only result in another four years for Reagan in the White House. Among these, the recovery of ground lost on civil rights issues, a return to a more equitable social contract for the poor of this nation, the establishment of a realistic foreign policy, (particularly in the Third World), and a new priority in the realm of women's rights stand out as issues that are vital to the well-being of this country. They are also traditionally values that the Democratic party has stood for. It is these issues that could turn the tide in the favor of the Democrats in November, but there are dangers in opting for this path. The present political stage, Ronald Reagan's skillful manipulation of the media, and the well-organized and lavishly funded Republican machine could easily stop a fragmented and indecisive Democratic party.

Whatever candidate the Democrats choose to send against Reagan, the most important project facing them is to construct a platform that can compete with the Republicans. What is needed is a liberal agenda.

When Ronald Reagan swept to victory in 1980, he did so on the surge of the "New Right." The conservative side of American politics had develped an agenda that had an appeal to a fairly large number of American voters. Traditional values were stressed in answer to the nuclear nightmares of the present day. The Republicans played up to these fears, and many frightened people decided to give it a try. Particularly adroit at exploiting the anxieties of these people were some of the fundamentalist religious leaders. With a firm backing of voting true-believers, these men lept off of their television pulpits into the political scene with a vengeance. A recent example of this was the letter of support signed by the Moral Majority that was sent to Roberto d'Aubuisson, the right-wing Salvadorean leader who has been intimately involved with death squad activities in that country. These are the same groups that have been linked with the brutal slaying of Archbishop Oscar Romero on the steps of the cathedral in San Salvador. Clearly these gentlemen have a difficulty distinguishing between their religious persuasions and their political creed.

Faced with this sort of opposition, the Democrats must prepare for a very bitterly fought campaign. The Reagan team will gladly misrepresent and contort the issues, (as they have done on numerous occasions during their tenure in the White House), and if the Democrats run their campaign by reacting to the Reagan camp, then their hopes in November will not reach fruition. On the other hand, if they run an intelligent campaign against the Reagan record, defining a number of clear alternatives, then they may find themselves returning to the White House. The American electorate is ready for some legitimate new ideas, if the Democrats truly wish to defeat the Republicans, then they must formulate a platform that will address the needs of the people. We are all waiting to see the liberal agenda.

Engineering fee needs amending

To the Editor,

In the past few weeks we have had the opportunity to study the detailed proposal concerning the differential fee for students in the School of Engineering. In a combined effort the members of the various Engineering Societies, as well as other concerned students have proposed these clauses and/or amendments to be written into the informal operating structure surrounding the existance and dispursion of the revenues to be collected by this fee.

Joint Student Engineering Society

We realize the dire need for improvements in the various laboratory facilities and feel that the most expeditious means of obtaining such improvements is by the implementation of a differential fee. Our proposals are as follows:

I. The fee should be governed by a special committee comprised of administrators, faculty, graduate students, and undergraduate students. Ideally there would be equal representation, but realizing that the availability of time for engineering students is extremely limited; we propose representation to be:

- committee meetings be public, yet voting powers are limited to committee members.
- one faculty member from each of the individual engineering departments.
- two graduate and two undergraduate students — to be selected by the Joint Engineering Societies but not necessarily a member of the societies.
- two administrators in the Engineering curriculum, one of which must be the Dean or Associate Dean of the Engineering School.

II. Any increase in said fee, would not be allowed in excess of 5 percent per year after the initial fee is established.

III. The initial fee proposal should be reduced to a maximum of $50.00 per student per semester for the first year.

IV. The fee must be divided as closely as possible to the amount of students within a given department.

- the fee should also be distributed proportionately to the number of graduate and undergraduate students.

V. An organized on going lobbying effort for the procurement of funds, external to those which would incur any added expense to the students should be pursued and documented: such efforts should solicit private, as well as, government resources. The optimum goal is to eliminate the differential fee.

VI. The fee should be eliminated at the point in time the total external funding sources reach a level within 20 percent of the needed resources. Needed resources are to be determined by budgets submitted to and edited by the governing committee.

VII. Engineering students should be allowed to suspend the fee, directing results of any such referendum, which is exclusive to the School of Engineering and sanctioned by the University of Massachusetts.

VIII. Upon the initialization of the fee, students should be required to pay a proportional amount of the fee, in respect to the amount of time that the student has remaining until graduation.

- Seniors would pay 25 percent of the fee for that year.
- Juniors would pay 50 percent etc...

The rate at which a person initially pays would remain as their portion of the burden until the time of their graduation. This means the system will purge itself within four years; after which all students would be carrying equal parts of the total burden.

Stockbridge deserves respect

To the Editor,

The recent Shagnasty strip of April 4 is the latest example of the lack of respect the Stockbridge School of Agriculture has received on campus in recent years.

Stockbridge students and the Stockbridge program in general are all too often looked down on as second rate and unimportant.

Agriculture is and will remain among the most important areas of study as the world population increases and arable land acreage decreases. It is only through increased productivity of existing land that farmers are able to maintain a supply of the most important commodity in the world — food. Food production is and always will be a primary industry, for without it mankind itself could not survive.

It is indeed fortunate to the people of Massachusetts that a two-year professional, technical program is offered by its land grant institution to train its citizens for careers in production agriculture.

A fine example of the varied work for which Stockbridge students are trained is the restoration of the Presidential Gardens located near Chancellor Duffey's house. This was initiated and carried out by motivated Stockbridge students and faculty. It is indeed a remarkable accomplishment and demonstrates to the UMass community the talent and skill which the Stockbridge School possesses.

The Stockbridge School is very fortunate to have a highly dedicated director, associate director, and staff. Through their enduring efforts the school continues to be a first-class institution.

Not only does Stockbridge train individuals to enter the field of production agriculture but it also provides a practical background for persons such as myself who have continued on into the university program.

It is only proper that the Stockbridge School of Agriculture receive more support and respect from the university administration and the campus community for it carries out a very important task and carries it out extremely well.

An open apology from Bart's

To the Editor,

We wish to express a sincere apology to anyone we offended by our sponsorship of a contest to promote a film entitled "Up the Creek."

It was not our intention to sponsor anything that would promote sexism and the degradation of women. One of our managers was seriously misinformed about what this film was about and agreed to co-sponsor a fund raising contest for it.

Ignorance and misinformation does not abdicate us of responsibility. We do, however, want to make a public announcement that Bart's Ice Cream did not knowingly support this film and we have never and will never support anything that promotes sexism and the degradation of women.

Trailers

Anybody could have directed Terms of Endearment, but anybody didn't. James Brooks did, and they gave him an Oscar for it.

Hey, how 'bout them Oscars? Not a lot of surprises in Monday night's award show. Terms of Endearment made the sweep just about everyone was predicting: Best Picture, Actress, Supporting Actor, Director and Screenplay Adaptation (from the novel of the same name).

The Right Stuff picked up most of the major technical awards (editing, sound, score, sound editing, score editing, sound score, score sound, score sound editing) and Sweden's Fanny and Alexander picked up most of the artistic awards (art direction, cinematography, costume), as well as Best Foreign Film.

The Best Actor Oscar rightly went to Robert Duvall, who's up there with De Niro and Pacino as the greatest actors ever (actually, Pacino should have been nominated and given the award for Scarface). Duvall, with past roles as diverse as Colonel Kilgore in Apocalypse Now and Tom Hagen in The Godfather, won here for his beautifully understated performance as a country singer in Tender Mercies. He accepted the award graciously, citing the achievements of the other nominees and saying he was "very happy."

Although I had half figured Cher would be given Best Supporting Actress almost as a way of appeasing the undernominated Silkwood, Linda Hunt justifiably copped the award for her role as Mel Gibson's little pal Billy Kwan in The Year of Living Dangerously. Hunt hopped up on a milk crate and thanked the Academy, spewing some hullaballoo about "water from the moon."

The Terms acceptance speeches ranged from the ultracool of Jack Nicholson to the self-conscious gueebiness of director James Brookes. And then there was Shirley Maclaine. Looking like she just got out of a shower and possibly the least deserving of the nominees, Maclaine gave a speech I clocked at five minutes, actually shorter than I expected. At 18 seconds into the speech, she mentioned how long she's been in the business, at 22 seconds she started crying. She closed by saying she deserved the award more than her colleagues. It's a good thing I wasn't there, because I'd have heckled the shit out of her.

The Best Picture presentation was an interesting event. I don't know what they were thinking, but they got Frank Capra Sr. to present the award. Capra's one of the greatest film directors ever I grant you, but he's been senile as hell for like five years now, and no one could have been too surprised when he screwed it all up. Fully audible off-stage voices coached him on what cue cards to read and when the audio-projection system failed, he pathetically searched the heavens for guidance. When he opened the envelope and milked a long pause to build suspense, the nominated films' directors' expressions, (shown in insets) changed from polite smiles to evil, annoyed stares.

Best song went to Flashdance's "What a Feeling", which Irene Cara was forced to sing with the assistance of eight million little kids from New York's National Dance Institute. Jennifer Holiday, from Broadway's Dreamgirls, belted out one of the theme songs from Yentl, "The Way He Makes Me Feel." I doubt she really needed the microphone.

Other highlights were appearances by master of ceremonies Johnny Carson, who's just too cool, Jennifer Beals, Christie Brinkley, Jack Palance, who's in a different world, Steven Spielberg and Amy Irving (holding hands all night long), and of course, the amazingly cute, goddess-like Daryl Hannah, sporting ridiculous granny glasses. Another major highlight of the evening was mechanical; a huge, remote-controlled Louma Crane, which raised and soared above the crowd with stunning fluidity.

LOCAL BEST BETS: The Calvin Theatre is showing The Right Stuff, this year's Oscar recipient for sound score and Score Sound. Admission on Wednesday nights is only 99 cents. The Amherst Cinema has a great double feature of Hair and Fame. Although it doesn't directly concern film, on Saturday, April 28, Historic Deerfield will conduct a workshop on New England furniture. The workshop will feature two lectures by assistant curator Phil Zea. the first is titled "The furniture of Western Massachusetts, 1680-1830." For more information, contact Lisa Marie Cantwell at the Collegian.

TRAILERS Trivia: I'm dealing with some serious wiseacres here. Two weeks ago I asked a really tough question so I could keep the prize, which was movie passes, but a woman named Regina Martel outsmarted me. So last week I asked an impossible question: Who played Uncle Sal's Mother in Moscow on the Hudson. Yes Regina, you're right, it was Filomena Spanguola, and your passes are on the way. This week's question: what color shirt am I wearing right now? Go on Regina. I dare you.

THE STYLE COUNCIL

Paul Weller, ex-Jam frontman, and Mick Talbot, ex-Dexy's Midnight Runner, populate The Style Council. The music is personal, upbeat and varied; the Geffen debut album is My Ever Changing Moods.

KING CRIMSON

Three Of A Perfect Pair completes the trilogy begun with Discipline and continued by Beat. Adrian Belew, Robert Fripp, Tony Levin and Bill Bruford are King Crimson; "Sleepless" is the first single from the Warner/E.G. album.

MODERN ENGLISH

"I Melt With You" was an international hit for Modern English. Expanding an already impressive vocabulary, the band has now given voice to Ricochet Days, an album of new material. Two-fisted diplomacy from Sire—
"Hands Across The Sea."

AUSTRALIAN CRAWL

The Crawl's enlightened pop sensibility earned them four Top 5 records and a No. 1 EP in their native Australia. Now Geffen has assembled the sextet's best tunes on Semantics, a hopping primer from the Outback.

CHINA CRISIS

Working With Fire And Steel (Possible Pop Songs Volume Two) nicely juxtaposes the tools and the genre of China Crisis' Warner/Virgin debut. Grand pianos, oboes and cellos coexist with synthesizers, basses, guitars and the like on a fast-breaking club favorite.

THE SMITHS

Voted "Best New Act" by the readers of New Musical Express, The Smiths are on a single-handed crusade to bring intelligence, optimism and flowers back to the world of music. And they're succeeding.

Gorillas open '84 home season today

By RUSS WHINNEM
Collegian Staff

The Boyden Hill is ready and waiting. So is the balcony of Tobin and all the other surrounding area. Ready, that is, for the first arrival of large Gorilla watching groups and their favorite objects of attention, Garber's Gorillas.

The place, as usual, is the upper Boyden field, the time of the face-off is 3:00 p.m.,

"There is tendency to change things when two top teams meet, to become too conservative. To me that's like the kiss of death."
— Coach Dick Garber

and this 1984 lacrosse home opener should prove a dandy. UMass brings its 1-1 record and highly ranked squad, (13th in the nation, 2nd in New England) against another pretty formidable bunch of stickman, in the Brown Bruins.

Not only is Brown three notches ahead of the Gorillas nationally, at 10th, but they also occupy the one spot separating UMass from the top of New England. It is a number one ranking that the Bruins are defending from last season.

"Long time arch rivals," smiled head coach Dick Garber, sitting in his office yesterday afternoon, shortly before his team took the practice field.

Men's lacrosse and the Boyden Hill crowds will return as the Gorillas host their home opener against New England champion Brown today at 3 p.m.

"They're a very aggressive defensive," said Garber. "They've also got excellent passers and excellent offensive skills. We have to play good balanced defense and make good transitions."

But don't be lulled into thinking that the Gorillas will turn this into a defensive struggle. Garber says that his team's wide-open, run-and-gun style will be in full force for tomorrow's game.

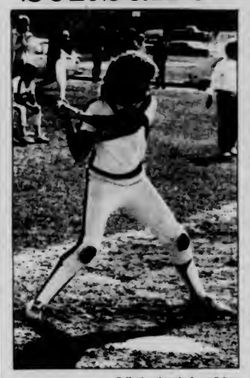
"There is a tendency to change things when two top teams meet, to become too conservative," he says. "To me that's like the kiss of death."

The fact that the Gorillas stand at 1-1 on their season is bittersweet for Garber. After disposing of then 14th ranked Cornell, the Gorillas could've, but didn't, overcome sixth ranked Rutgers last Saturday, losing 8-4. Garber reflects that the opportunities were there, but as if a flashback of last season, the goals weren't.

"We played a helluva game down at Rutgers," he adds. "We had the shots, we just didn't score."

With that hopefully behind them, UMass now concentrates on Brown, before hitting the road to Chestnut Hill to face Boston College Saturday. Then it's back home for a two week, five game BIG homestand that includes the likes of UNH, Harvard, and Yale, (all in the New England top five, UNH is tied with the Gorillas) and Army and Hofstra, ranked nationally 5th and 9th respectively.

As always, the Boyden throng could lend an extra edge to the Gorilla's artillery, and Garber hopes that edge will begin tomorrow.



"Being our first home game and playing against the defending New England champs, I'm hoping there will be a lot out there. We'd like to get The Hill packed up there," he grins.

And the coach promises a good game will be witnessed on hand. "It's going to be a very exciting match-up for spectators. We've played two nationally ranked teams and played flat-out in both. There's no reason to change."

NICE EFFORT — A Red Wing of the International League dives in vain for a homerun ball.

Softball sweeps Brown

Catcher Beth Talbott and the Minutewomen swept the Bruins of Brown yesterday 2-0, 5-0.

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

If you have a team that starts just two seniors and the rest of the lineup predominantly sophomores and freshmen, that team cannot rely on the bats of the two seniors to carry them along.

The underclassmen of the University of Massachusetts softball team earned their meal ticket yesterday leading the way at the plate and on the mound as Massachusetts swept Brown by a 2-0 and 5-0 scores in Providence.

The team hopes to extend their winning streak as they take on Holy Cross in a doubleheader today at 2:30 p.m. at NOPE.

The pitcher and hitters both got the job done yesterday. Sophomore Lynn Stockley tossed a one-hitter and fired six strikeouts in the opener while sophomore Cathy Reed tossed a two-hitter in the nightcap.

For the hitters, freshman Robin Read, recently promoted to the clean-up slot, went 2 for 3 in the first game with a RBI while knocking in two runs in the second game.

"They never threatened in either game," said a pleased Elaine Sortino. "They are a good team. But we were better. We are glad to take home the two wins.

Glad is right for UMass who had lost three of four since coming up from South Carolina. Massachusetts, who now sports a 12-7 record, was in a hitting slump but is coming out of it after yesterday's performance.

"We are working our way through it," Sortino said. "But we need to be better yet." UMass pounded out six hits in the first game and got eight in the second, the most UMass has gotten this season up north.

UMass got on the board early in the first game as Read knocked in senior Tina Coffin with the bases loaded after Brown misplayed the fielders choice.

The Minutewomen made it 2-0 in the fourth as Read knocked in sophomore Sally Maher with a single. Freshman Debbie Cole also went 2 for 3 in the opener.

In the nightcap, Coffin led off the game with a double followed by a Maher triple. Read followed with a single to right and Maher came in for the 2-0 lead.

Read and Cole both knocked in runs in the second and Cole misplayed bunt sent sophomore Ann Ringrose home for the 5-0 margin.

Reed pitched a super game, Sortino said, and had five strikeouts to up her record to 6-2.

Masssachusetts takes on Holy Cross for two this afternoon at 2:30 p.m. at NOPE in the first meeting of these two in at least six years.

Seniors make choices today

By DAN LEBERFELD
Collegian Staff

Today begins the most important few months of UMass basketball Coach Ron Gerlufsen's career. April 11th marks the beginning of the NCAA spring signing period for high school seniors.

During the first signing period from November 9-16, Gerlufsen and his staff inked no one. Since then, UMass has received three verbal commitments. These three players (6-8 forward Fitzhugh Tarry of Buffalo, New York, 6-4 guard Matt Ryan of Long Island, N.Y. and 6-3 guard Lorenzo Sutton of Fork Union Military Academy in Virginia) now can officially sign with the Minutemen.

With Ryan and Sutton coming in, UMass will be strong at guard next season. Ryan was named New York State player of the year in his division. He had 57 point outing this season. Sutton is a gifted athlete blessed with tremendous quickness. Don't forget academic redshirt 6-5 Daryl Carter and the rest of the UMass guards minus reserve Craig Smith return as well.

Upfront is where the Minutemen are hurting. 6-7 sophomore starter John Hempel is packing his bags and leaving for another program and 6-7 center Edwin Green graduates in May. This leaves only 6-5 junior Horace Neysmith upfront. Gerlufsen and his chief recruiting assistant Mark Shea have been scouring the east to alleviate this problem.

Two centers the coaches are talking with at this very moment are 6-8 Tom Swick of Ontario, Canada and 6-10 John Westbeld of Dayton, Ohio. Swick has narrowed his choices to UMass and Niagara College. UMass has a slight edge here because Niagara brought in three big men last year. Westbeld will decide between UMass, Maryland, Rice and Santa Barbara.

Gerlufsen and Shea are on the trail of five talented forwards as well. The two that lead the pace are 6-6 Carlton Valentine of Baltimore, Maryland and 6-7 Derrick Brantley of Willingboro, New Jersey. Valentine, who is considered the best player on America's top ranked high school team - DeMatha, is leaning towards Richmond or American over UMass and Michigan State. Brantley, who scored 51 points in a game this year and wants to major in engineering, has narrowed his choices to UMass and Holy Cross with Temple making a last minute bid.

The other three potential Minutemen are 6-7 Warren Bradley of Bridgeport, Connecticut, 6-7 Wilbur Hicks of New Haven, Connecticut and 6-6 John Kajonek of Hamilton, Ontario. Hicks, who Shea feels could grow a few inches, is being courted by UMass, Fairleigh Dickinson and Monmouth. UMass, Canisius and Boston University vie for Bradley. Kajonek, who netted 33 against DeMatha, is being pursued by St. Josephs, Michigan State, Boston College and UMass.

Tarry will not suit up for the Minutemen next year so he can establish himself as a student. This makes the decisions of these young men even more crucial to the immediate future of the UMass basketball program. Shea said he hopes to get two or three of these young men to sign on the dotted line.

Harvard stops UMass 8-4

In baseball action yesterday in Cambridge, Harvard topped the University of Massachusetts by a 8-4 score.

The Minutemen, now (7-16) on the year look ahead to Thursday when they take on American International College in Springfield. The Division II Yellow Jackets sport an overall (10-5) record, including a (3-1) mark in the Northeast-8 Conference. AIC's main threats should come from ace pitcher Jim Van Houten and infielder Mario Felici.

Seven students win seats on town board

By DAVID LINTON
Collegian Staff

Seven University of Massachusetts students won Town Meeting seats in the Amherst election Tuesday, including five students who waged a write-in campaign organized by Student Government Association Co-President Rick Patrick.

Paul Howling, John Kenney, Stephen Shuster, Reuven Michael Carlyle and Courtland Cline all waged successful write-in campaigns for five uncontested seats for three year terms in Precinct Three. Paul Iarrobino and Lori Rocchio were elected to one year terms in Precinct Three.

Precinct Three encompasses Sylvan, Northeast, Orchard Hill and Central Residential Areas. In Precinct Four, which includes the Southwest Residential Area, one student ran for a two year seat, but was not elected.

In a statement following his election, Carlyle said, "Students are a major economic and social force in the Amherst community. This election proves we are also a major political force. Obviously, I'm pleased with the election results and I look forward to an effective and meaningful term as a member of the Amherst Town Meeting."

"We ran to provide student input, not only for student concerns, but for the Amherst population as a whole," Shuster said.

Patrick and an assistant, Mark Shea, said they organized the write-in campaign to elect students in Precinct Three to voice student opinion on issues such as rent control, bus service and water quality in town meetings.

Patrick said he was "very pleased" that all five of the write-in candidates won.

"It was basically students for students. It represents student unity. Hopefully we can fill as many seats from precincts four and five in the future," Patrick said.

Students apathetic about tuition hike rally

Less than forty students attend protest

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

While may students feel the issue of tuition increases is big, the corwd at a rally scheduled yesterday to protest hikes was not.

Few University of Massachusetts students stopped their afternoon walk in the sun at noon to hear student leaders who gathered in front of the Student Union Building to speak out against a proposed 15 percent tuition increase being planned for next year.

Fran Pheeney, chair of the Student Government Association (SGA) Public Policy Committee, termed the protest, attended by approximately 40 people, "a disappointing one," saying student apathy is a result of the change in the type of students now attending UMass.

"More UMass students come from upper or upper-middle class families," Pheeney said. "They figure they, or their parents, can afford the increase. Maybe they can this year, but next year's increase will be more. I don't know if they can handle that."

Fran Pheeney, chair of the student senate's Public Policy Committee, looks out into the "crowd" as she speaks about a proposal being planned which would again increase tuition at the University of Massachusetts.

"Let's keep UMass a public University," shouted SGA Co-president Rick Patrick, as the small crowd responded with scattered applause. "We need you all to help us fight against this proposal."

Co-president Jim Keller said the tuition hike "makes UMass a place some people can not afford."

"People will be hurt by the increase — we can't let that happen," Patrick said.

A joint legislative hearing on the issue scheduled for today at the Statehouse and chaired by Rep. James Collins, D-Amherst, and Sen. Gerard D'Amico, D-Worcester, will examine the issue prior to the state Board of Regents vote on the increase next Wednesday. On Monday, the board's finance committee, by a 4-1 vote, approved a $167 tuition increase for in-state undergraduate students. Out-of-state and graduate students also face additional raises.

"We're sponsoring a bus on Thursday for students to go up to the rally before the committee meeting," Pheeney said. "UMass President David C. Knapp and others will speak against the increase along with UMass/Boston chancellor, Robert Corrigan. Hopefully something will happen."

"The meeting Thursday is the most important thing," Pheeney said. "If we fail to convince the Regents there, I don't know what will happen. It's discouraging, what happened today at the rally, but maybe the administrative officials can convince people if students can't."

Greeks rush despite ban at Amherst

By SANDRA KONOPKA
Collegian Staff
and the Associated Press

Amherst College trustees may have disbanded fraternities and taken away their houses, but some students who took part in rushes there this week feel Greeks at the school will stay together just the same.

"Maybe the Trustees are taking away our housing, but there will still be some sort of social order between us," said Aaron Scharf, a member of the Delta Kappa Fraternity. Leaders of the fraternities held the rush this week for freshmen, who in any other year would have been pledging to become members by their sophomore year. But the college trustees earlier this year voted to disband the fraternities, saying the social groups were no longer relevant to the campus social life. "We've heard there have been rushes," said college spokesperson Terry Allen. "The college's position is that these rushes mean nothing. It's regretable that a number of students thought the drive was legitamate because there won't be fraternities next year."

The rush of 170 freshmen also prompted The College Council, a panel of students, professors and deans, to propose limiting former members of any one frat to 25 percent of the residents in a fraternity house that is converted to a dormitory.

College Council member John Blasberg yesterday called the quota a signal to trustees that the campus will obey the decision despite apparent opposition by some fraternities.

"The council had not originally planned to implement a quota, but considered this week's rush an attempt by fraternities to continue next year. They could stack the houses and discourage others from living there," said Blasberg, 20, of Boston.

Under the proposal, fraternity members would take part in the college's regular room assignment process in which upperclassmen get first crack at vacancies, Blasberg said. It would be possible for members of different fraternities to get rooms in the same house and become a majority of residents there, he conceded.

The quota recommendation will be given to G. Armour Craig, interim president of the college, Blasberg said. Craig will adopt a transition policy in the coming weeks, Blasberg said.

Blasberg, the junior class representative to the council and a fraternity member, said there was some criticism of the quota, but most students accepted it.

Aaron Scharf, a member of Delta Kappa Epsilon, was among the critics. "What will happen is we'll continue to stay together, even if the houses are taken from us," Scharf said. Fraternities have 624 of the 1,500 students as members this year.

Judge halts student aid and draft registration linkage

BOSTON (AP) — A federal judge says the U.S. Education Department overstepped its bounds by requiring students applying for financial aid to sign a form saying they had either registered or were ineligible for the draft.

And in a ruling yesterday, U.S. District Judge Robert E. Keeton ordered a temporary halt to the practice.

It was sought by three Boston University theology students, a man over 25 and two women, all members of the United Methodist Church. Their age and sex already exempted them from registering and they claimed that by refusing to comply with the federal regulation and fill out the form, they would lose all financial aid and have to quit school.

The Solomon Amendment, adopted by Congress in 1983, required a cut-off of federal student loans to eligible men who had not registered for the draft.

Then, the education department established regulations requiring all loan applicants — regardless of age or sex — to state they either had registered or were ineligible.

In his 11-page ruling, Keeton said the department went too far.

The Secretary of Education, he wrote, "established a new ground for denial of aid: failure to comply with an administrative requirement that all applicants for aid file a registration compliance statement.

Area waste dump site sought

BOSTON (AP) - After a year of inaction, Massachusetts officials say they hope a two-day conference with other Northeast states can produce a new agreement on a regional site for a low-level radioactive waste dump.

"I think the questions we're asking have to be asked," said Richard Smith, executive director of a special legislative commission that is hosting the meeting, which starts today in Boston.

"The discussions have not been going on for over a year now. It's time to get the talks going again so we have a better understanding of what the states need," he said.

Massachusetts officials rejected an earlier plan for an 11-state regional waste disposal compact, saying it lacked sufficient environmental safeguards in case the commonwealth was selected to host the facility.

The conference will give them a chance to present their revised version of a multi-state compact to officials from the other New England states plus New Jersey, Smith said.

Officials in New York, Pennsylvania, Delaware and Maryland were invited, but failed to confirm they would attend.

The issue has taken on growing importance due to a federal decision that will allow the nation's two existing dumps in South Carolina and Washington state to reject waste from outside their region beginning in 1986.

Drinan says nuclear arms never justified

CLAREMONT, Calif. — Using even one nuclear weapon can't be justified and the people of the United States must, question whether using the atom bomb in World War II was necessary, the Rev. Robert Drinan told a college audience.

Drinan, a Catholic priest and former Democratic congressman from Massachusetts, spoke about ethics in the nuclear age in an address to 300 people at Pitzer College Tuesday night.

"There is no moral principle or political objective that would jusify the use of even one nuclear weapon," he said.

Every American will have to reconsider whether the continued buildup of nucler weapons can be justified, he said. "And maybe we need to begin by asking ourselves whether dropping the bomb on Hiroshima was ever justified.

"We say that that action saved us from the invasion of Japan, and that saved several thousands of lives. But that's not true. Japan was on its knees at the time and maybe we just don't want to accept the fact that the use of the bomb in Hiroshima and Nagasaki was never justified."

House debates cost of living increase

BOSTON - A 4 percent cost of living increase for the 110,000 retired public workers was tacked on to a proposed $8 billion state budget by the Massachusetts House yesterday.

But while House Republicans easily succeeded in adding a $6.8 million pension hike to the budget draft, they suffered a second narrow defeat in two days for their proposal to send $28.6 million more in state aid back to cities and towns.

The House's labored progress on the 165-page spending blue-print slowed further in its third day of debate, and a hastily called Democratic caucus failed to produce a scheme to ensure a budget would pass by Saturday. The caucus broke with wait-and-see irresolution, and members' pessimism at getting the job done before an informal break next week for religious holidays grew.

The House's $700,000 cut in the Legislature's own budget earlier in the week evaporated when the House voted 149-3 to increase a proposed 3 percent cost of living hike for teachers and other public service employees to 4 percent.

Rep. Michael Creedon, House Ways and Means Committee chairman, opposed the proposal, one of a series of amendments sponsored by Republican Leader William Robinson that rankled the Democratic leadership.

"I can't believe that anyone would have the gall to debate this issue," Robinson challenged midway through debate. "I think retirees are entitled to a 4 percent cost of living increase."

Rep. Nicholas J. Bulgione, House Public Service Committee chairman, argued the state's liability for cost of living increases is expected to hit $900 million by 1990. "Seven million dollars this year means $14 million next year," he said.

Damage suit filed on adultery charge

NORTHAMPTON - A Northampton woman has filed a $200,000 damage suit against a woman she claims committed adultery with her husband of 17 years.

The suit, based on legal tenets that have seen little use this century, is the second seeking damages for adultery to be filed in Hampshire Superior Court this year.

Last month, a judge awarded Robert A. Holcomb, a former long-haul truckdriver from Huntington, nearly $60,000 in damages from Francis A. Warren of Southwick, whom he claimed committed adultery with his wife. In his suit, Holcomb maintained he had to quit his job to care for the couple's children after his wife left.

"We may begin to see more and more of these now," Edward J. Ryan Jr., president of the Hampshire County Bar Association, said yesterday. "It's human nature when you have a judgment like that."

In her suit, Alice M. Crowther claimed Patricia Doppman committed adultery with her husband, Gilbert M. Crowther, on Jan. 27.

State seeks to avoid bill for Seabrook

BOSTON — Concerned that the financial problems of the Seabrook nuclear plant may spill over 1 to Massachusetts, a consumers' group is asking state regulators to protect electric customers in communities that own their local light companies.

"We are concerned that Massachusetts electricity consumers — especially in towns with publicly owned municipal electric departments — be spared enormous rate hikes that threaten to happen as a result of the deteriorating Seabrook situation," state Rep. Michael Barrett, D-Reading, told a Statehouse news conference Tuesday.

He was speaking for the Coalition for Municipal Ratepayers' Rights, formed last fall by Massachusetts consumers, businesses and legislators worried about the struggling nuclear power plant in southern New Hampshire.

Seabrook's builder, Public Service Co. of New Hampshire, and the other utilities that invested in the twin-reactor project, voted recently to abandon work on Unit II because total projected costs are approaching $9 billion, ten times the original estimate.

Members of the Ratepayers' Coalition are worried that the Massachusetts utilities holding investments in Seabrook will never get any electricity from the project, and they question the wisdom of further investments.

"We don't believe smaller Massachusetts communities...can afford to pour money into a bottomless pit," another coalition member, Rep. Larry Alexander, D-Marblehead, said.

Nuclear power plants' bond rating lowered

NEW YORK- A major bond rating company yesterday lowered its rating for two of the Seabrook nuclear power plants because of "serious and unprecedented questions about the future of Seabrook."

Standard and Poors Corp. lowered the rating of two types of Public Service Company of New Hampshire bonds and its preferred stock, all worth $1.1 billion. It also lowered bonds of the Massachusetts Municipal Wholesale Electric Co., worth $1.2 billion.

Public Service, the plant builder, owns 35.6 percent of the twin-reactor plant; EMWEC owns 11.6 percent.

Standard and Poors also put eight other utilities that own fewer shares of Seabrook on its negative "CreditWatch," which means their securities for a potential downgrading within 90 days.

Women's groups vow to renew efforts after bid to ban magazines is rejected

By JOHN MILBIER
Collegian Correspondent

The Board of Governors rejection of a resolution to ban pornography last Thursday night has galvanized local women's groups efforts to continue their campaign for a "porn-free" University of Massachusetts.

The resolution that would have banned Playboy and Playgirl from the Campus Center Store was defeated in two separate motions by the board.

"In the first motion we didn't support the store's policy but on the second motion we let the present policy stand," said Board Chairman, Mike Reilly.

Reilly said if the motion had passed it would have forced the administration to review their policies on magazine sales.

Even though the resolution failed, women's groups say they have not given up. "There was a lot of interest generated, it made the board members more educated about the pornography issue and education is one of our main goals," said Lisa Trocki, coordinator for the Women's Leadership Project.

Trocki said women's groups still have a number of strategies to make the University "a porn-free zone."

"We're boycotting the University Store, Mini Food Basket and Augies to show them we find pornography offensive," said Trocki.

Campus Center Store Manager John Kuusistl, however said he does not feel the magazines are pornographic.

"The question is whether or not it's pornographic and Supreme Court has ruled it's not," Kuusistl said.

Kuusistl said he agreed with the BOG decision and said the store does not carry pornographic material.

"I'm sure some people will disagree with this but there is a fine line between what you call pornographic and what you don't," he said. "What we carry is not considered pornographic by most people."

However, Deborah Murphy, a member for the Women's Forum Against Media Violence, said she doesn't agree with Kuusistl. "I consider Playgirl, Playboy, and Penthouse offensive toward women," Murphy said.

She said Penthouse has a lot of violent pictorials dealing with rape.

"We are just trying to educate the campus community on issues of pornography and its connection to violence against women and children," she said.

Stacy Roach, coordinator of the Women's Caucus of the Undergrad Student Senate, said she will propose a resolution at next week's senate meeting. She said the proposal will "condemn the display and sale of pornographic magazines," and "formally request that these sales be stopped."

Amherst astronaut addresses alma mater

By PAUL DESMOND
Collegian Staff

An Amherst College alumnus who flew on a recent space shuttle flight returned last night to present his alma mater with an Amherst flag that travelled with him into space and to discuss the routine operations which will be the basis of future flights.

Astronaut and scientist Dr. Robert Parker, a 1958 graduate of the college, spoke to about 150 people at Amherst's Morrill Center about life in space and the future of the space program.

Dr. Robert Parker

Wider access is now available for "people off the streets" to fly aboard shuttles and conduct experiments in space, Parker said. Called "payload specialists," these people represent the first "true settlers of space" and are an aspect of the routine operations which Parker said is the future of space operations.

"Re-flight opportunities," or a chance to repeat experiments that fail for some unforseen reasons, is another important part of routine operations, Parker said.

Retrieval and repair of satellites, such as performed by the shuttle now in space, is an "extremely important part of our future operations in space," he said.

Parker gave the example of a "space telescope," worth an estimated $1 billion, that the National Aeronautics and Space Administration plans to launch in about two years.

"You can't afford to say, 'Well, it worked for five years, that's a success.' You have to be able to go up and repair or refurbish," he said.

Looking toward the future, Parker said, "If we wanted to, we could put a small space station in orbit in three to four years." He said he was dubious about whether NASA would spend the money for such a project, however.

"You cannot predict the future with certainty. We are only at the very beginning. Some of the things that will be done in 20 years I can't imagine," Parker said.

Asked what it was like to be in space for 10 days, he said, "The best analogy to zero G (no gravity) is scuba diving."

Astronauts' food is similar to what we eat on earth, Parker said. His diet included freeze-dried coffee, Tang, scrambled eggs, "which frankly tasted a lot better than I've had on airplanes," and some "mean-looking sausage and hamburg patties."

Parker's speech was sponsored by the Five College Astronomy Department.

Senate seeks to educate students on cult recruiting

By IAN POLUMBAUM
Collegian Staff

The Academic Affairs Committee of the Student Government Association (SGA) said it will begin working to make students better informed on the activities of religious cults at the University of Massachusetts.

Last night the Undergraduate Student Senate passed a motion instructing the committee to conduct annual education programs about cults. Academic Affairs chairman Peter Deliso said he wanted to "let students know what these groups are all about" by distributing literature on a yearly basis.

"I'm talking about cults that take advantage of people, brainwash them, and exploit them economically," Deliso said.

He said he was primarily concerned with on-campus recruiting conducted by the Collegiate Association for the Research of Principles (CARP), a student organization run by the Rev. Sun Myung Moon's Unification Church.

"What the Moonies do is they come in and recruit students at a time when (the students) are looking for direction," Deliso said.

"A lot of students are under emotional stress — looking for the answers in life," he continued. "The Moonies say, 'we have the answer, the world can be beautiful, we can all live together in peace.'"

Deliso said CARP recruiters come to campus before spring vacation and invite students to spend their break in Fort Lauderdale, Florida, where the Unification Church has a "recruiting camp."

At the camp, he said, prospective "Moonies" are allowed no time alone and insufficient food and sleep, making it impossible for them to think clearly.

"They brainwash you," he said. "They have a recruiting agent with you at all times, even when you go to the bathroom.

"By the time you get back (to school), you're pretty well stuck if you don't have a strong core group of friends or strong family ties."

Deliso said new Unification Church members are put to work as recruiters, or in one of the many enterprises owned by the multimillionaire Rev. Moon.

"They think they're working for world peace, but they're actually working for the purse of Sun Myung Moon," he said.

He said he did not know how many UMass students CARP successfully recruits each year, but that the cult was "obviously doing well enough to keep coming back."

In past years, Deliso said, the Unification Church rented a house near campus and had members in the Undergraduate Student Senate and on the staff of the Collegian.

Pill may increase risk of cancer

By ALICIA GREEN and MELISSA GRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Women who smoke and use birth control pills should be aware of evidence linking the combination of the two to an increased risk of cardiovascular problems, said Pam Gonyer, coordinator of contraceptive education at the University of Massachusetts Health Center.

"Cardiovascular problems are related to age, the amount you smoke, and other factors such as hypertension, obesity, and lack of exercise," Gonyer said.

If one uses oral contraceptives as well, it can produce a "synergistic effect," Gonyer said. For example, a woman who is obese, smokes and uses the Pill has a higher risk than someone who simply smokes and uses the Pill.

Ron Mazur, coordinator of the Peer Sexuality Education Program at the Health Center, said there is controversy as how much smoking is allowable if one decides to use oral contraceptives.

Some practitioners refuse to prescribe oral contraceptives to those who smoke heavily, others don't feel as strongly, Gonyer said. "It depends on the individual's history and variation on the amount of smoking."

According to the book, Contraceptive Technology, the chances of having a heart attack are forty times greater if one uses the Pill and smokes than if one does neither. If an individual smokes heavily without using the Pill, the chances of heart attack are twenty times greater, it says, and if one takes the Pill alone, the chances of heart attack are only four times greater.

Reports at the Health Education Office show that many women fear they will gain weight if they stop smoking.

Weight gain "is a concern expressed more by women than by men," said Paul Davis, a UMass Health Educator. "Women tend to use weight gain as a strong rationalization to go back to smoking."

There is, however, no direct evidence of a correlation between smoking and gaining weight, according to the reports.

Several UMass women questioned in random interviews said they thought they "would probably gain weight" if they gave up smoking, but that "the Pill is worth it."

One women claimed "the main reason I'm not on the Pill is because I could never stop smoking," while another said it gave her "incentive to quit smoking, and now I have."

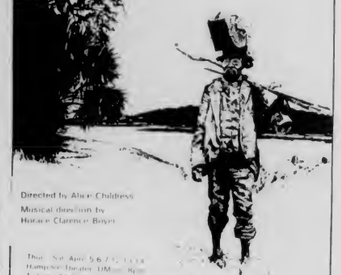
Most of the UMass women interviewed agreed with one woman who said,: "When I started taking the Pill, I knew it would be hard to quit smoking. But I also knew I had to do it--it was either one or the other."

Car reported stolen; UPC robbed over weekend

A 1973 B.M.W. two door sedan was stolen from Lot 63 near the Morrill Science Building sometime Tuesday, University of Massachusetts police reported yesterday.

No estimate of the value of the car was given.

At about 1 a.m. yesterday police received a report that a $600 watch had been stolen from the desk of a basement room in Pierpont Dormitory. The victim said he left the room with several people in it, and upon returning discovered the watch missing, police said.



A generator, an airbrush and 50 T-shirts, totaling $325 in value, were stolen from the Union Program Council office in the Student Union Building between Friday and Monday, police said. According to police, there was no sign of forced entry.

University to host honors conference

The University of Massachusetts Honors Program will host the National Collegiate Honors Council Conference for the northeast region of the United States beginning today.

The conference will bring colleges and high schools from across the northeast together for a program involving honors programs at the secondary and post-secondary level. The workshops will work towards "bridging the gulf" between the two programs, said Linda Lockwood, director of the UMass Honors Program.

Tomorrow, students and faculty associated with college honors programs across the northeast will begin participating in a weekend of lectures, seminars, and workshops.

The UMass Honors Program will receive "good exposure" in the National Honors Council as host to the conference, Lockwood said.

"It's good for the University in terms of showing other universities we are interested," she said.

Representatives from the University of Maryland, University of Delaware, Long Island University and American University are a few of the schools that will be present at the weekend event.

Iarrobino, a junior management major, said he hopes "to be an effective liason between Amherst and the University of Massachusetts. I'm looking forward to getting involved in town government." "I'm glad to see that there will be more students in the town meeting," said Cline, a junior social thought and political economy major. He said he ran because he was "sort of appalled" at the number of uncontested seats in Precinct Three.

Kenney, a junior English major, said, "I think it's important that students are represented in Amherst, and since students live off campus, we as students, should have a say on rent control, extended bus service, and other issues."

Only 1,630 voters-- 10 percent of the 16,201 eligible voters-- turned out. Joan Logan, a secretary in the Town Clerk's Office, said Tuesday night the turnout "wasn't what you would call a stampede of the electorate."

Town Clerk Estelle Matusko yesterday said she was "not surprised" by the low turnout. She said the number of registered voters was inflated this year because of interest in the state and national elections and not because of concern for the local election.

"The students who created the influx in the primaries did not turn out for the election, except for those who supported write-ins (candidates for town meeting)," Matusko said. "Even if we doubled the percentage, the figure would still be low."

She said the turnout is usually about 25 percent of the registered voters. She estimated there are about 10,000 "core voters" who are in Amherst throughout the year and active in local elections, but said the lack of contested positions was partly responsible for the low turnout.

Adolescent parents are subject of conference

A conference to educate social workers and other professionals about the needs and concerns of pregnant and parenting teenagers is scheduled for today and tomorrow at the University of Massachusetts.

The Massachusetts Coalition for Pregnant and Parenting Teenagers, host of the conference, is a state wide volunteer committee formed in 1981.

"Our purpose is to insure availability and accessibility to needed services, in order to insure that these young women who choose to become parents during their adolescence have the opportunity to be the best that they can be," said Gail Bryan, chairwoman of the committee.

Bryan said teenage pregnancy is everbody's responsibility because our society gives teenagers mixed messages.

"Our society encourages the adolescent to become sexually active, through the media and advertisements, selling everything from soda to jeans. If you're not doing it, you are not part of it, you are not with it," Bryan said.

Fraternities contribute to UMass

To the Editor.

With all the recent bad press and attention directed towards fraternities we would like to take this opportunity to direct poeple's attention towards the ways in which UMass fraternities remain an important and contributing part of the community. Each semester our fraternity donates it's time and effort towards a charity fund-raising project.

In the fall, it is an open house Halloween party designed to inform grad-schoolers of proper safety practices. Again, this upcoming week-end, as in previous spring semesters, we direct our efforts towards a keg roll from Springfield to Fenway park in Boston to benefit the Dana Farber Cancer Institute or the "Jimmy Fund." Our efforts are significant and yet don't overshadow the efforts of many other fraternities which also participate in fund-raising and community service projects. Perhaps at this time when critics are exploiting the situation at Amherst and Colby College, which have lost their fraternity systems, it would be more appropriate to acknowledge the positive contributions of our own system and provide support and encouragement for our charity efforts.

Stockbridge is proud of tradition

To the Editor,

While reading the Collegian I read the cartoon Shagnasty, and felt compelled to write this letter. It's not that I can't take a joke, even a timeworn one as is the intended portrayal of Stockbridge students as manure shovelers. We at Stockbridge (and I'm sure I'm not alone when I say) are proud of our school, its history, our teachers, and our choice of professions.

We are professionals in our varied fields. At present we are students; but tomorrow some of us will be responsible for aiding in the production of quality fruits and vegetables. Some of us will be managing greenhouses or raising and caring for livestock. As turf managers, arborists, and landscapers we will be entrusted the care and beautification of the environment. Imagine if the care of parks, cemetaries, and athletic fields were left to the inexperienced. Try golfing on a browned out, weedy, and overgrown course. Turf care and gardening are old and honorable professions. Production of food and livestock is important to the economy and to us all.

Space alone doesn't allow me to extol the virtus of a Stockbridge education. Upon graduation few of us will be in need of a job, as we are desirable and sought after professionals in our chosen fields. Some of us undoubtedly will remain in Massachusetts, others will fill positions in many areas around the country. The importance of what we do is obviously not recognized by many, and is further masked by incorrect generalizations.

In conclusion I can honestly say the only time I go to the equipment shed for hip boots and a manure fork is when I read a cartoon like Shagnasty.

PGA offers needed services

To the Editor,

In reference to the April 3 letter to the editor protesting Gay Awareness Week and the money received by the People's Gay Alliance, we would like to inform Mr. Eachus of the realities concerning this issue.

While you are angry that a part of your tuition goes toward a positive human service organization, others are angered by the fact that .40 of every federal tax dollar we pay goes into military expenditures. (This is a far cry from the funds received by the PGA). In other words, we the tax payers finance the arms race. Hate, war and killing are negative, inhuman behaviors. And you think homosexuality is deviant?

What about the griefs and angers endured by homosexuals when they are rudely insulted or verbally abused by closeminded homophobics? One out of every 10 students at UMass is homosexual. This large portion of the student populace is entitled to a supportive organization on campus. Furthermore, the money you pay in student activity fees does not go to support "homosexual activities." It goes into support programs attended by both gay and straight students. These are not "sexual activities" as you so stupidly stated, they are events sponsored by the PGA. Also, the PGA dances consistently prove to be the best entertainment on campus, for all students of all sexual preferences. These dances are in fact, about the only social setting where hetersexual women (in addition to homosexual) can enjoy themselves without being victim to the taunting, leering and jeering of ethnocentric, narrowminded, socially unaware cretins like yourself.

Students should decide funding

To the Editor,

As students of this University we support Kevin L. Eachus' call for a student vote to see if a majority of students desire to have their funds used for Gay Awareness Week and other gay and lesbian "events". While we believe anyone has the right to pursue any type of sexual lifestyle that he or she wants, we do not wish to see our money spent in support of that lifestyle.

Weird facts about UMass

Yes, eventually everyone leaves UMass; some of us with degrees, some without. That's an important dichotomy and should be contemplated before any hasty departures. After you're gone, you start to ask yourself questions. Haunting memories of UMass, the Happy Valley, and all of those things that never made any sense. Unlike many of my fellow graduating seniors, I'm going to ask my haunting, unanswered questions now, while I'm still here and able to confront this inanity face to whatever.

Peter Graham

Why did Digital give the University 10 VAX 11/750 computers over a year ago when the University has only used two of them? Did they realize the University wouldn't let undergrads use these computers? (an experience which is in great demand in the job market) Why don't the undergraduate COINS majors do something? Doesn't the COINS department care about undergrads at all? Computers may be confusing to most of you, but I'm talking about over a million dollars in state-of-the-art technology sitting around unused! It's crazy.

Why hasn't anyone patented Hatch coffee as an industrial solvent? Why don't the UMass police use horses?

Why don't we lobby the legislature for a tuition CUT in order to attract more students? (After all the money from tuition just goes to the legislature).

Seeing as Massachusetts General Law Chapter 75 section 10 (the law setting up the University, the section dealing with trust funds) says 'the revenues derived from a trust fund must be applied to the activities of the trust fund and legally, interest is defined as revenue; why is the UMass President's office able to go on controlling and misappropriating the trust fund interest? Do they know they are breaking the law? Do they care? I am talking about hundreds of thousands of dollars. Why doesn't the S.G.A. do something? (like sue the President's office via the Legal Services Office?)

Oh no, did I mention the S.G.A.? Talk about a Rubic's cube of paranoia, megalomania and delusion. At one time I expected some sort of logical evolution to student government (fool that I was). Now, realizing the arbitrary nature of the universe, I realize the truth of the statement 'the public gets the government it really deserves.' I'm not arguing the student body shouldn't be apathetic towards student politics (a pathetic thing in and of itself). Only by being apathetic, you'll get the mediocrity you have been currently experiencing, or worse. I'm not praising the past, only noticing the decline.

Instead of refurbishing the Cage, why don't they build a major sports and entertainment arena? (Then maybe we could raise some revenue from it or at least get some good concerts.)

Who killed General Ed and why?

One of the world's most stable earthquake faults runs right through campus. Why doesn't anyone know it? Who would build a high rise on an earthquake fault, stable or not?

I've heard some official propaganda that no bricks ever fell out of the Library. I'd like to set the record straight. In 1979 one fell from the 22nd floor, hit me on the left foot, and took off 3 toes. If you want to see, I'd suggest wining and dining me. (I don't take my shoes off for just anyone.)

Why are the prices in the TOC/Hatch/Bluewall so high? It seems by playing on increased volume (alcohol wise) they could lower the price, sell more and make more money. Maybe the Administration would prefer the students to drive to J.R.'s to get bombed?

The motto of UMass should be "Attend every class, study every day, and you'll graduate on time." Why don't they put that in stone in front of Whitmore? Or at least "Knowledge is Good?"

Isn't the new Universal Resource fee a brainchild of Jack Littlefield, the same man that brought us 'Tillson Farms: the unworkable Power Plant'? Why didn't anyone lose their job over that multi-million dollar blunder?

Why doesn't Housing Security sell pizzas? They have the keys to all the dorms and, within a year or two they'd be making a profit. Unfortunately, the profit would probably be transferred either to the Campus Center or the Dean of Students office, for no logical reason.

Admiring the people at UMass

To the Editor,
Who I Admire

I admire alot of people; almost everyone.
I sometimes even admire myself.

I admire conformists and their willingness to be cloned.
I admire non-conformists and their congenial, masked conformity.
I admired the sheltered apathetic.
I admire the activist with misdirected zeal.

I admire also, the omniscient teacher; the "I-have-my-rights!" student.
I admire the white "Yo, nigger!" yeller and his five buddies; the "C'mere white-boy" negro responder and his five buddies.
I admire the desperate ROTC personnel and their "I need money for school."

I admire the Real Men who think "chicks" are only meat.
I admire the equal-rights women who, no better, frown at men.
I also admire the straight people who crookedly mock homosexuals; the "progressive" individuals and their abortion support.

I admire Ronald Reagan, his strong? U.S. dollar and military, and their many geographical homes.
I admire the Soviet Union and their beautiful interpretation of a hopeless, total Marx.
I also admire the more liberal people and their not-so-subtle prejudices; as well as the conservatives journeying their twighlight-zoned trip.
I admire the blind faith of the absolute self-determinists, and their support of anyone because they're anybody, and their condemnation of anyone who is not Somebody.

I admire all these, and especially those pungent deniers.
— Because I have always admired the hypocrite.

A bridge, yes — but what kind?

There is a wooden plank connecting the little island in the campus pond with the bank. Presumably, this is the beginnings of a more elaborate pathway. The question is; why has construction halted on it?

Joseph McCormack

Based strictly on guesswork, a sound conjecture would be that the 40 member panel to sudy the feasability of appointing a five member board to select a design committee hasn't been given a large enough room by the Scheduling Office.

Well, where beauracracy falters, public opinion will force results. In this instance, the UMass public has six basic design choices; a swaying-rope bridge (a la Tarzan), a wooden foot bridge, a New England covered bridge, a Roman viaduct, a span and cable bridge, or no bridge but a ferry.

The UMass landscape deserves something better than a simple wooden footbridge. Since the campus pond is the focal point of the entire campus, there should be some type of bridge that is more aesthetically pleasing.

The New England covered bridge is perhaps the most picturesque of all the bridge structures. However, having one at UMass might tick off the people down the road at Old Sturbridge Village. No one ever said they had a monopoly on covered bridges, but it's nice to keep on good terms with the neighbors.

Another type is the majestic span and cable bridges, similar to the Golden Gate. It certainly would be impressive to have one here at UMass, but the opportunity for the administration to install a toll booth would be too, too tempting.

The swaying-rope bridge is just a little overly dramatic, and too easy to sabatage. Tarzan nearly got killed every time he tried to cross one. It's just too risky.

Then there's the ferry idea. While being both aesthetically and functionally agreeable, the cost would be staggering. Even if the cost of the boat, fuel and crew could be dredged out of Whitmore, who's going to pay for the icebreakers in the winter?

Now just imagine a series of small stone arches on three levels. large ones over the surface of the water, and the smallest on the highest level. This would be a beautiful and welcome inclusion to the UMass landscape. Besides that, a Roman viaduct is a durable and cost-effective structure. Some of the originals still stand in Europe. Clearly, this design best fits the needs of the students and the administration.

To reinforce this conclusion, a survey of 25 people living randomly on a dorm floor was taken. The viaduct got the most votes although the rope bridge and the ferry were a close second.

Suffering from Megamania

My Grandmother was talking about it. "Not since World War II have I felt such a sense of unity in the people. It gives you such a sense of pride to stand there amongst the housewives, businessmen and students and think to yourself 'I hope somebody wins.' Of course during WWII we were hoping the US of A would beat the pants off the enemy, but that's another story. I remember once backing '42..."

Kalisa B. Barratt

At this point my brain shut off. Another war story dug out of the archives of Grandma Barratt (due out in paperback sometime next month) to digest and reminisce about and then contemplate it's significance to the American efforts. But Grandma's current day alliance stood not behind the people of the United States. Rather, it was with the people of Massachusetts. Those that would brave the three to six hour wait to approach and maybe even touch that wonder of all wonders THE MEGABUCKS MACHINE.

I laughed at my grandmother's trite greediness. After taxes, that $18 million would wither away before your eyes. And although Grandma has still got a few good years left, she'd never live long enough to see even half of the $18 million at $20,000 a year. At least I don't think she will. How could my grandmother feel allegiance with such greedy fools? Now, I'm not one to preach, God knows I'm the first one at Wednesday night Bingo to jump over Ol' Mrs. McCarthy, winning Bingo card in hand, but this Megabucks (not the capitalization) thing was getting way out of hand.

Saturday night, super Saturday to Megabucks players. I was recouperating from a happy hour that was a smashing success, when the phone rang. It was dear old Mom calling to wish me a speedy recovery on my headache and to ask about the Megabuck situation in my area. Yes, there were lines, but I knew of a small store that little people knew had a Megabucks machine. Would I wait in line? Me? In a (gasp) Megabuck line? No, Mom, really, I'm in the middle of studying and well, with exams and all, well, you know.

There I was in line with my comrades making comments under my breath about the man who had the gaul to play $25 worth of tickets while the rest of us stood around and watched the minutes tick by. Did you know it takes approximately 31 seconds to process a ticket? Well, it does. So there I stood for hours (O.K. 37 minutes) playing three tickets for my mother and brothers. "Hell, they're worth it." I thought my mind racing with condos, Porsches and Hollywood parties with Dick and Liz.

Needless to say, they didn't win. I'm going to finish school instead of running off to Hollywood. No one I knew won a bit of paradise, but things can be learned from hope. The comradery that I felt put a little bit of goodness back into me that I had lost in the past few years. The same people that I stood in line with had hopes, fears and dreams just like myself. And now that the suspense of the game is over, I find life is still worth living, maybe even more so. The dreams of millions have been put to rest — at least until next Saturday night.

Know your fascist insects

Yes indeed, kiddies, spring has sprung; soon the good gold and the ragweed will be in bloom, the Dead Heads will return to the East and from all four corners of the Earth the Fascist Insects will crawl out. This particularly odious family has been plaguing mankind since it's inception and flourish,even today. They vary in size, shape and color, but they all feed in the same way:by being ferocious parasites,and they share the strange habit of copulating with pigs. Much has been written and said, as of late, about these filthy pests, but since even more has not been, (these bugs are secretive by nature), I thought this brief guide might come in handy.

Lawrence Madden

The Salvador Death Squad Ant — (d'Abbuisson Suckus). This brutal, machine-gun toting member of the ant family has colonies throughout the country. These colonies are readily identifiable by the pools of blood and piles of mutilated bodies that these well fed insects trail behind them in their ceaseless efforts to destroy. They can be seen riding pick up trucks, shooting innocent people,and generally being bummers on every night, on every street in San Salvador. Recent attempts to exterminate these troublesome pests have been laughable since the chemical Democracy, which is poisonous to these ants, was substituted with one called Military Force, which these insects thrive on. Lately,more and more experts from the United States have been called in to help breed these pests for what purpose this author does not know.

The Polish Worker Weevil — (Jareleski Shitheadus). This very clever parasite pretends to want a symbiotic relationship with its prey, called the Working Class, but, in fact, is a dangerous bloodsucker. This species can be found in steel mills, shipyards, and factories killing, maiming and imprisoning. Gdansk has been particularly hard hit. This weevil attacks and diminishes the food supply, making it difficult for the average citizen to obtain luxury items, like bread. It's not unusual for thse bloodsuckers to use very big armoured vehicles, called tanks and sundry other noxious agents to subdue their hosts.

The Reagan Roach — (Whiteamericana Senilius) — Last fall a devastating outbreak of this pest on the island of Grenada showed the world what we here in the US have been suffering with for three years. This innocuous peaceful-looking insect of the Nazi genus has paralyzed most of the nation from the neck up. It excretes a steady stream of feces which wind up in the newspapers, television and radio. It's related to the Salavadorian Death squad ants and many other insects of the Fascist Insect Family. Recently several sub-species of the Reagan Roach have appeared here on campus. The most notable (Conservitus Clubus) has been excreting large amounts of noxious dung on the walls of the Campus Center. Be wary of these pests, since noted insect expert G. Orwell has predicted a bumper crop in 1984.

The White South African Grub (Apartheidis Vomitus). This small minded and vicious grub bores into the heart and soul of its victim: people who happen to be of a different color. It strangles, executes, and beats them to death in prison cells. This insect, shunned by most of the world, is very well established in its habitat and behavior patterns which some entomolgists have labelled prejudice, bigotry and hatred. They are aided by the Reagan Roach which seems to admire their work.

The list goes on and on, Kiddies, and I'd really like to write more but I hear the pitter-patter of tiny insect boots behind me.

A right to academic grievance

I do hereby challenge any member of the UMass Faculty Senate to respond, in kind, to the following question; why is it that there exists no formal academic grievance procedure for undergraduates at UMass? Not holding my breath waiting for any sort of cogent response, and taking the liberty to interpose your views, I think I can tell you. It's because you are scared, gutless and unwilling to place your teaching methods under the same scrutiny that most contractually bound, power differentiating relationships abide. (Yes, oh worshippers of arcane values, in loco parentis — c'est mort.)

Dakin N. Ferris

"Academic freedom" Huh? Do I hear the mating call of the yellow-bellied Draconian Preceptor? "Academic freedom." There it is again, never out of season I might add. But wait....it looks as if it might say more, (maybe it will respond to my question). "All professors must have unlimited control over the content of their courses and grading. If this was to be challenged, then professors would constantly be worried about defending their course instead of teaching." Gosh, a brilliant repose, if I might say so, your yellowness. Still, I was kind of thinking. Isn't this the country founded on the principle of checks and balances. Ok, ok, sorry to get technical. But what I mean is that in days of old, professors were supervised by deans and so on.

If you screwed up there were ways to deal with you. Enter now the expansive university, labor laws and unions. (Come on, you know...unions, like the faculty union which just recently won you the right to a grievance procedure in case you're treated unfairly.) So now the pressure's off, with those of you that are tenured being untouchable. Exit the only check on professional authority.

So now the question becomes instead, a search for something that can fill this void. Good thing I have my bag of checks and balances here. Let's see...um, guillotine, naw (I don't like violence). What else, maybe this one on the botton — ACADEMIC GRIEVANCE PROCEDURE — I wonder what it is? It says:

As a growing number of universities around the country become aware of the classroom abuses to students, this latter party having no mechanism of recourse, the former thus feel that on grounds of equity students should have a formal vehicle to air complaints, hence a grievance procedure.

Well I agree — and I think enough is enough. I hereby demand of the answerer of this challenge, pray tell us why, after the SGA has been trying for five years to get a policy passed, why it has been rebuked at each instance? Why is it that the grad students rate a policy and we do not? Why is the onus for establishing a procedure on students in the first place (since you need but to stall to capitalize on our transience)? Why is this proposal, with its roots in the ground of fairness, so repugnant to your academic temperments.

If you were to adopt a formal grievance procedure you would be sending a loud message to the whole university community — you wish to treat them with openness, fairness and respect. Not having a policy only serves to perpetuate the notion that grievances don't exist. Horse puckey. They most certainly do, and for too long now they have been swept under the carpet.

I do recognize that there are some supporters of a formal grievance procedure on the faculty, as well as a couple of individual departments. To you I offer praise. To the rest, if I have offended your sensibilities, I apologize. My intent is to arouse your notions of fairness. In my mind your position is indefensible, except [illegible] ans of your legislative authority. [illegible] orrow I will thus try and clear up [illegible] the common misperceptions about [illegible] grievance is, with an example that should stop any faculty writing a response to remit mid-cliche.

We all pay now

To the Editor,

Now we see the repercussions which result from mindless student activism. Last fall United Technologies Corporation, a defense contractor, came to campus for a series of conferences. A small group of students, led by then SGA co-president, Tom Ahern, decided to hold protest rallies against the firm's presence here because they don't like defense contractors. These students apparently feel that the defense department should not exist, weapons should never be built, and communist aggression need only be combatted with protest signs, if at all. As a result the University has now lost an $80,000 account, a cost which will undoubtedly be passed on to the students. Thanks to the misguided troublemaking of a few "progressives," we all get hit in the wallet.

BOG responds

To the Editor,

Several members of the Board of Governors wish to clarify the Collegian article concerning the Board's position, April 11 on the Top Of The Campus Restaurant. The reporter wrote, "the BOG would like to see the Top of the Campus Restaurant at UMass either make a profit or vacate their space for some other establishment."

This is not the Board's position. We would hope to see the restaurant make a profit, but this is not imperative nor is it our ultimate goal. We only wish to see the restaurant cater more to the students. We are happy to support an operation if the students are willing to take advantage of it.

This issue was brought to us and we are only interested in bringing to light the situation and exploring all possible alternatives, with the students best interests in mind.

L. Scott Cohen

On awareness

To the Editor,

In Kevin Eachus' letter of April 3, he states that he does not wish to have his student activity fees used (if this is in fact the case) to support increasing the awareness of issues involving the gay, lesbian and heterosexual communities. However, the flow of funding in our society is such that everyone contributes so that everyone benefits. This is the case with fees at UMass, and at state and federal levels with taxation. By doing this, we are recognizing the value and merit of other people and groups, regardless of our interest in them.

As a pacifist, I feel upset that my school fees help support football, which I believe promotes violence, aggression, and brute force, all under the guise of a culturally accepted sport. Similarly, under the guise of concern about funding money, K. Eachus states that gay dances and lesbian encounter groups equal "other deviant activities." For your information, K. Eachus, homosexuality is no longer labelled as "deviant" by the American Psychiatric Association.

Despite all the misinformation, prejudice, and homophobia evident in Kevin Eachus' letter, he still describes himself as being "aware of gays and lesbians." Perhaps he should have attended the workshop offered during gay and lesbian awareness week titled, "What Every Heterosexual Should Know," instead of trying to pass of prejudice as awareness.

Sexism lives

To the Editor,

I found Tuesday's editorial titled "Another side of inequality" extremely offensive. Although I agree with the premise that feminists sometimes go overboard in accusing men and institutions of being sexist, I feel that Laport and Goldstein's approach to making this point was tasteless and only served to make their arguement appear to have no validity.

Sexism does exist in our society and on this campus. This odious editorial proves that point. It is important for us to point out blatant examples of sexism such as this.

At the same time, it is important for feminists not to alienate men through such tactics as sponsoring slide shows "for women only." If we hope to make this a more socially aware community, both feminists and non-feminists need to communicate tactfully and refrain from either extreme of fanaticism.

Thanks students

To the Editor,

I would like to relate a pro-student story, as I believe it is time to reverse the trend toward bad press.

Last Friday night, I was the victim of an unfortunate accident, which took place outside a local supermarket. Somehow I managed to dislocate my shoulder, rendering me incapable of driving my car in order to obtain medical attention. Two students happened to be at the scene, and were aware of my predicament. They were kind enough to offer me a ride to where I could be helped (an offer that I truly could not have refused).

I am sure that several other students would have done the same thing, given the circumstances, but Chris & Sue, if you're reading this, this one's for YOU! You both have my sincerest thanks.

People should be aware of Moonies

To the Editor

With regard to the letter, "Moonies are people too!," Thursday, March 29, I want to voice a strong disagreement with one of the statements made by Mr. Wojcik. He wrote and I quote: "But 'brainwashing' is just a negative way of saying what we Christians call the conversion experience."

This statement is made to the effect that Moonies are Christians and vice versa. As a Christian, I would like to point out that this is not so. Christians are disciples of Jesus Christ who believe in Him as Lord and Saviour, and adhere to the Holy Bible as the Word of God. Moonies, however, are disciples of Sun Myung Moon. The 'Divine Principle' [DP], which contains the basic tenets and doctrines of the Unification Church, states: "With the fullness of time, God sent His messenger to resolve the fundamental questions of life and the universe. His name is Sun Myung Moon." [DP 16]. Moonies will in public call themselves "Christians" appearing as wolves in sheep's clothing. Yet what is taught in the Unification Church is different from what they project to the public. They call themselves Christians and yet do not believe that Jesus is the Redeemer. DP 148 states, "In this manner, however devout a man of faith may be, he cannot fulfill physical salvation by redemption through Jesus' crucifixion alone."

As a Christian, I believe that in Jesus Christ alone is the forgiveness of sins and fullness of life. I believe that in Jesus we have peace with God. Such is not the teachings of the Unification Church. I would suggest to people to be informed and aware of the Unification Church and to be aware of their recruiting methods. A typical way of recruiting is to invite you to dinner, lecture or discussion. Failing to do so, they would try to obtain your name and phone number and will call you frequently, sometimes up to two or three times a day. Some people would accept their invitation just to stop their persistent calling. This is but the beginning of getting you involved and into the group. Other things like weekend conferences and week long camp would follow but I am unable to go into more details. Those who are concerned or worried about the Moonies should, as I suggested earlier, get informed about them.
